Palestine has now a very different appearance from the one you were here. I have never seen the country looking so beautifully. The rains have been abundant (the rainfall about thirty inches up to the present time,) and the crops are all in most promising condition. The wild flowers, too, surpass, this year, anything we have seen before in variety and beauty. In a two hours' walk yesterday afternoon, through fields north of the city, I gathered a bouquet of cyclamen, ranunculus, blood-drops, flax, wild pea and clover blooms, etc., etc., which was simply glorious. I never saw a more beautiful collection of flowers in my life. It would seem that a sight of it, without other proofs, would be sufficient to suggest to one whether the curse which had so long lain upon this land had not begun to pass away, and whether the set time to favor Zion had not come."—*H. Editor Restitution:

It has come to our knowledge through private sources that a brother to whom THE RESTITUTION is greatly indebted has been reduced to actual want. His munificence in behalf of truth in the days of his prosperity was so quietly conducted that very few knew of it. While Mr. Reed was conducting THE RESTITUTION this brother sent at one time seven hundred dollars with instructions to use it either for his own personal benefit or for the benefit of THE RESTITUTION, as Mr. Reed might think best. Of course Mr. Reed appropriated every dollar of it to THE RESTITUTION fund, which was in need of aid, but he was not allowed to say a word about the matter in the paper, for it was given strictly upon the principle of Matt. vi. 1, 3, 4. It was a wonderful help to the publishing fund and tided our paper over some hard places, but no record was made of it except the entry of the recording angel. It was given purely for the Master's sake and to advance the truth.

This faithful donor of his means is now with his aged wife reduced to poverty, but with that modesty which has always characterized him, he refuses to have the fact made public. Still we must help them, both duty and benevolence require it. The readers of THE RESTITUTION owe this man a sacred debt, a part of which at least ought to be paid in dollars and cents, and paid now. Let us raise at least one hundred dollars and send it to them as a thank-offering for their kindness and thoughtfulness in the years that are gone. As I cannot give his address without betraying a trust, I will ask our friends to send their donations to me personally. I will take charge of the fund and forward it to him, will tell him who every dollar comes from (unless otherwise requested) and will also give to the donors the name and address of him they are aiding, for this knowledge is their due. Please send moneys for this purpose to

THE MYSTERY OF INIQUITY.—Part I.

"The Mystery of Iniquity (or rebellion) doth already work."—2 Thess. ii. 7-12.

In the former discourse on the "Mystery of Godliness" or piety, spoken of by St. Paul, we were led to consider the most wonderful event in the world's history—the incarnation of the Logos, or word of God, in the person of the Christ—and that which followed from it—the marriage of the Lamb to his bride, the spiritual church taken out from this dying world.

The next most wonderful fact in the world's history is the utter corruption of Christianity during the greater part of the subsequent ages of Christendom, and over the larger portion of its area—the "Mystery of Rebellion," which is the subject of the prediction to be now considered.

That such corruption should have ensued upon the establishment of the gospel by "signs and wonders and mighty deeds"—upon the personal ministry of the Son of God—upon the labors of his inspired prophets and apostles, who left their records behind them—upon the martyrdoms of the faithful sufferers for truth in the earliest ages of the faith—upon the overthrow of Pharisaic Judaism, and the defeat of Roman heathenism—is reckoned by Roman Catholics a moral improbability so great as to lead to instant dismissal of the idea that any considerable apostasy of Christendom from the truth, of any glaring, or dominant, or widespread corruption of doctrine or discipline, can have occurred. So that it is held to be a prima facie and a priori argument on behalf of whatever form of Christianity has held the chief place in history and exercised the widest sway in the name of Jesus Christ, that that must be the true representative of the church to whom Christ promised that "the gates of Hades should not prevail against it."

It may be said, indeed, that all natural probabilities are in favor of the belief that so great a marvel of grace and power as the incarnation would not be defeated by any combination of human fraud and human folly. From one point of view nothing seems more likely than that he who began the good work of founding the church in primitive times would carry it on to the end, through a regular succession of duly appointed teachers, and through a regular transmission of apostolic doctrine and apostolic custom, even after allowing for all partial heresies or departures from the faith.

But on the other side, if we are to consider probabilities, it may be said that human nature has proved itself equal to the corruption of anything holy, and the defacement of anything divine—that the resources of superstition, of scepticism, of ignorance, of the love of power, of sinful passion, and of spiritual rebellion, are equal to the perversion of the most beneficent revelations of heaven—and that the history of preceding revelations of God to the patriarchs and to the Israelites supports the opposite lamentable presumption that a third direct dispensation of truth and grace would be corrupted on the widest scale. If we accept the Biblical narrative of the early ages of the world, as we have so much reason to do, it is plain that the worship of one God by the patriarchs was rapidly, and nearly universally, degraded, after the Deluge, into the polytheism and idolatrous paganisms of antiquity; each species of lost paganism throughout the whole world (for there was no national exception), being a most elaborate perversion of the worship and service of the living God—comprising scarcely any traces of the original revelation—the very idea of one just, holy and beneficent Deity being veiled beneath a curtain of misbelief thickly embroidered with the wildest and foulest forms which a heathen imagination could devise or execute.

Precisely similar results followed the institution of Judaism, or the Mosaic dispensation of the law. It lapsed again and again, as every page of the Old Testament bears witness, into an imitation of the surrounding heathenisms of Egypt, of Sidon, of Assyria—from which it was scarcely ever recovered except for the briefest intervals, by the labors and remonstrances of mighty prophets or by the heavy judgments of God. And when the Mosaic religion ceased at last to be corrupted into idolatry or heathen paganisms, under the efficacious lesson of the desolation of Jerusalem by the Babylonian army and the seventy years' slavery of the captivity, it was corrupted a second time by its scribes and doctors into the opposite errors of a superstitious Pharisaism and a materialistic Sadduceeism, which earned and obtained a second infliction of punishment in the awful destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, in the desolation of the land, and the expatriation of the nation, which has lasted now for eighteen centuries.

So that there is nothing in the history of human nature, as seen operating in former ages on a divine revelation, to forbid the idea that even in its perfect form, of the full manifestation of the truth in Christ, this truth might be buried under an accumulation of errors and impostures, which should rival the paganism of the earlier world. The historic presumption is altogether in favor of the belief that human nature was equal to the sin and shame of corrupting utterly the religion of the Incarnation. There is no hypothesis so groundless as the presumption, apart from evidence, that Christianity was destined to work its way, through the centuries, and especially Roman Christianity, as a river of pure water undefiled by the soil through which it had to take its course through many ages.

But we are left to an estimate of probabilities on this matter, on the one side or the other. The ancient prophecies of Daniel which foreshadow so wonderfully the succession of the great empires from the time of the Babylonians to the time of the Romans, and of Romanized Europe, both in the vision of the metallic image and in that of the four wild beasts, the last with "seven heads and ten horns," in the midst of which ten rises the "lesser horn that has eyes, and a mouth that speaks marvellous things against the God of gods,"—these same prophecies foreshadow the future history of the Christian revelation in later times, and the history of the power which should "make war with the saints and prevail against them," who "should wear out the saints of the Most High and think to change times and laws" until the time of the end.

And in the Apocalyptic Vision of the beloved disciple, as of the beloved prophet, we find the very same symbol, after 700 years, reproduced by this contemporary of the Cæsars in the Roman age, of the seven-headed and ten-horned beast, on which he sees riding the harlot clothed in scarlet, and holding in her hand the golden cup full of abominations. And at last St. John tells us he received the explanation of the "Mystery of Babylon, the Mother of Harlots," in these words: "The seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth. And the woman whom thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth." The late Bishop of Lincoln (Bishop Wordsworth), in his celebrated and unanswered discourses delivered in Westminster Abbey, entitled, "Is Rome the Babylon of the Apocalypse?" has proved to demonstration that there is no rational possibility of denying that if the Apocalypse was inspired, which all churches allow, it was designed by the Spirit of God to point to Rome as the seat of the great Mystery of Rebellion foretold in the Jewish and Christian prophecies.

Thus, too, every one of the apostles left the earth repeating and enforcing the awful warnings of the seers of the Jewish Church—that the Messiah's future kingdom on earth would not reach its age of triumph by "the fall of the stone from heaven on the feet of the great Image" and by "the casting of the ten-horned beast into the lake of fire," until the sovereignty of Christ on earth and his truth had been assailed and well-nigh subverted by the most direful endeavors of the evil power to pervert its ordinances, to conceal its varieties, and to convert it thus corrupted into an instrument for the despotic and blood-thirsty government of the nations of Christendom and of those who kept the commandments of God.

The future of Christianity under the ministry of iniquity is depicted again with great distinctness in the writings of St. Paul. He speaks to the elders of Ephesus precisely in the same tone as the Master, who bids his followers in all ages, "Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." "I know," said he, "that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Yea, of your ownselves shall men arise speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." To the Thessalonians he writes, 2 Thess. ii. 1-9, "Let no man deceive you by any means, for the day of Christ will not be, except the falling away, or apostasia, come first, and the man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition" [the reference is direct to the words in Daniel xi. 36]; "so that he sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself forth as God. And then shall that lawless one be revealed, whom the Lord shall slay with the breath of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming" [or the appearing of his bodily presence. For so the two Greek words epiphaneia and parousia are translated elsewhere in St. Paul's epistles]. "Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, because they received not the love of the truth [that is the Apostolic Truth] that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe falsehood; that they all might be judged who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness;" words which show that this adversary, or anti-christ, oppresses the church not with more brute force, such as an atheist or infidel anti-christ, after the Roman fancy, might oppose to the Gospel, but with a superstition which might deceive Christians unless thus forewarned.

This idea (of his early letter to the Thessalonians) of the approach of a religious and not an atheistic apostasy St. Paul further develops in his latest epistles—those to Timothy. In these he says, 1 Tim. iv. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and teachings of demons, daimonion (not concerning daimonia, but teachings of or by evil spirits), forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats which God hath given to be received with thanksgiving." Clearly, then, an ascetic apostasy is in view; not an open rejection of religion and Christianity, but a system of enforced celibacy and fasting, which would carry before it the opinion of Christendom, or a "form of godliness," though without the power. And in the second letter to Timothy St. Paul's mind is full of this same coming apostasy among nominal Christians. "This know also that in the last days perilous time shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, having a form of godliness, but denying the power of it,"—a general profession of Christianity, combined with a loss of its spirit. And then he adds: "Preach the Word; for the time will come when they shall not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears" (it is to be the reign of church eloquence and church music, instead of sound Scripture instruction); "and they shall turn away their ears from the Truth, and shall be turned unto fables" (muthous, myths).

St. Peter left this world under similar forebodings of the coming apostasy, 2 Peter ii. 1: "But there were false prophets among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who secretly shall bring in heresies of destruction, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift perdition. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; and through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you, whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not." In the last chapter of the same epistle he describes the general abandonment of the belief of Christ's second coming to judge the nations.

In St. John's writings this awful anticipation of apostasy, often referred to in his Epistles, is emphasized and painted out in scarlet colors in the Apocalypse. There it occupies the chief place. The Harlot of Babylon, is Ecclesiastical Rome; for a harlot is an apostate church in the prophecies, and on the forehead is written Mystery, to show that here is the great spiritual mystery of iniquity, the seat and centre of the apostasy from the faith. I remember being taught by some in early life, that we ought to speak with great moderation of Popery, and so I did, until I went to Rome, and saw what is called the worship of God in St. Peter's, and its surrounding churches; but, ever since, I have thought that even the maddest antagonism of half-learned Protestants, however objectionable, is at least more rational and Scriptural than the mild reproof so fashionable now, against the hateful thing which goes by the name of Christianity in the metropolis of the world. Fifty years ago I remember listening, on the other side of this street [Bloomfield Street], to the closing discourses of Cardinal Wiseman, in which he sowed the seed which has since sprung up into such a harvest of English superstition and apostasy from New Testament simplicity. And after all the subsequent experiences of these fifty years, there is nothing I desire to urge on the English people more earnestly than the fresh study of the New Testament testimonies on the apostasy that was to come, and to a comparison of them with the actual developments of the Papal religion and its congeners.

For what are the main facts in the history of Christendom? They are two. The first is, that the books which are comprised in the New Testament were nearly all acknowledged, by the beginning of the second century, to be written by the apostles of Christ, or by apostolic men under the guidance of the apostles; so that this collection of writings may be relied on with certainty as a correct representation of the doctrines and precepts of original Christianity. The four gospels were written, two of them by apostles, Matthew and John; and two of them by apostolic men—by Mark, the companion of Peter, and by Luke, the companion of St. Paul. Tradition has not even pretended to add anything to these original records of the life and teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ. The remainder of the New Testament consists of the apostolic history of St. Luke, of the thirteen Epistles of Paul, of the Epistle of James (the Lord's brother), of St. Peter, and St. John, and of the Apocalyptic visions of the beloved disciple. If we have not, in these writings, a sufficient record of the chief facts, doctrines, and precepts of apostolic Christianity, we shall well be advised in abandoning apostolic Christianity altogether, since it is past belief, except by credulous or interested persons, that men, who are acknowledged to have been appointed by Jesus Christ as the teachers of the authentic gospel, left behind them elaborate writings like St. Paul's Epistles to the Romans, the two Corinthians, to the Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and the Thessalonians,—to say nothing of those to Timothy and Titus, or of the Epistles and Apocalypse of St. John, and yet so wrote that honest, competent readers ever since must fail in understanding the secret of genuine Christianity, apart from the help of ecclesiastical tradition to interpret their meaning and supply their deficiencies. Yet that is precisely the case and last contention of the great historical church of Rome.

Men, who do not doubt that all other writers can convey their principal meaning with clearness and force (such as the writers of the second, third, and fourth centuries, and of all subsequent ages), hold it as a first principle of Christianity that the inspired apostles were not able to teach Christianity by the writings which they left behind them for the purpose, so "endeavoring after their decease" to bring the truth to remembrance, but required to be assisted to become intelligible and sufficient ministers of the New Covenant by the traditions of the church. Well, is not this exactly of a piece with the Jewish figment of the oral law or tradition, set up by the Rabbins to support their departures from the law of Moses—condemned which Christ so awfully denounced as worthy of the damnation of Gehenna in the Gospels?

This then is the first great fact in the history of Christianity. There are four contemporary biographies of Christ, which no one professes to supplement by tradition. And there are twenty-three other apostolic books professing to teach in many forms the doctrine of Christ's Gospel,—and these together make up the New Testament,—and not one of them so much as mentions the Bishop of Rome.

The other great fact in the history of Christianity is that through a combination of intellectual and spiritual influences, through a combination of social, religious, and political revolutions, in the course of time the Bishop of Rome became the Pope or Chief Father in Christendom, claiming and exercising universal sway over the church of Christ on earth, employing both force and fraud in the establishment of that authority, and carrying fire and sword by means of his subject kings into every kingdom where that authority was doubted or denied; living for centuries in league with all the Sovereign Authorities of Europe to uphold that form of professed Christianity, until, in quite recent times the political power of the system has been taken away by the Italian nation. And this system of Roman Catholic Christianity has endured for more than twelve or fourteen hundred years, receiving its final authentication in the Vatican Council in 1870, when the infallibility of the Pope was solemnly declared, by candle-light, in the midst of a black thunderstorm, in St. Peter's.—Edward White, in Rainbow.

The Temple Offerings.

"The last shall be first, and the first last."

The rich man took from the purple fold
Of his robe a piece of shining gold,

Cast in the gift, a treasure rare,
And then passed on with lordly air,

As he thought of merit justly won,
By his noble deed, so nobly done.

The widow followed, with lowly mien—
A respectful space was placed between—

Cast in two mites, and her thought seemed bold,
When she wished their worth as the shining gold.

The rich man rolled in his state away,
Drawn by his chargers, sleek and gray.

The widow her lonely pathway trod,
And her heart was filled with the thought of God.

Of the loving kindness that gave her all
She had ever prized, and her gift seemed small.

Long years have passed, and the rich man's name
Were lost, were it not for the widow's fame.

His deed without love, so cold and dead,
Had sunk in the wave of time as lead.

Her humble gift was a seed with wings,
And then the harvest that from it springs.

Her wish that the base coin were gold,
Has been fulfilled a thousand fold.

So the promise comes we know not how,
And the widow's mites are millions now.

The rich man's deed is but seen afar,
The shadow that follows the widow's star.

Which across the ages still shall shine,
To show the wisdom and grace divine.

Of him who reckons each deed apart,
Not by worth of metal, but warmth of heart.

"The Millennium."

Dilly communicated the story confidentially to Freddie Burr.

"See here!" she said, pushing the toes of a pair of stout new shoes through the fence.

"Where did you get 'em?" asked Freddie.

"And see here!" continued Dilly, bobbing up for an instant to show the pretty head that covered her yellow hair, and touching it significantly with her finger.

"Where did you get 'em," repeated Freddie.

"My pa worked and bought 'em an' brought 'em home: and they didn't get into nobody's barrel either," explained Dilly with great pride and little regard for grammar, pressing her face close against the fence for a prolonged interview. "You see, Freddie Burr," began Dilly, "the Millennium has come to our house."

"The what?" said Freddie in bewildered accent.

"The Millennium. It's a pretty long word," explained Dilly, complacently, "but it means good times. Anyhow that's what ma called it, and I guess she knows. It was just this way, Freddie Burr: When you told me Mr. Barney had all our good things down to his store in his rum-barrels, I just went down there right off and asked him for 'em—me and Toddles."

"You didn't," exclaimed horrified Freddie.

"Did too!" declared Dilly with an emphatic nod. "Well, he wouldn't give us one of 'em, and he was just as cross as anything. So then my pa got up from behind the stove and walked home with us. He didn't scold a bit; but he just sat down before the fire, this way, and thinked and thinked. At last he put his hand in one pocket, but there wasn't nothing there; then he put it in his other pocket and found ten cents, and he went out and bought some meat for supper. When ma got home he talked to her and they both cried. I don't know what for, 'less it was 'cause we didn't get the things out of the barrels. And ma hugged me most to death that night, and kissed me lots, she did. Well, my pa got some work the next day, and brought some money, and now he has found a place where he works every day. He bought all these things, and he says his little boy and girl shall have things like other boys and girls. So now you know what the Millennium means, Freddie Burr, when anybody asks you; and you can tell them that Dilly Keene explained it to you."

Dear Children:

Our blessed Redeemer whose tender heart always anticipated his children's need, said to his disciples, Come ye yourselves and rest awhile apart in a desert place, for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat. It was about this time of the year when all nature was covered with her lovely verdant dress. In going, many left their homes, and those who knew him brought their sick with them and he healed them. Some ran afoot out of all cities and came unto him, and when Jesus saw the multitude he was moved with compassion toward them because they were as sheep not having a shepherd. And he taught them many things until the shadows of evening began to appear. Then the disciples came to Jesus and said, this is a desert place and the time is far passed, send the multitude away that they may buy bread. Jesus said, Give ye them to eat. They said, Shall we buy two hundred pennyworth of bread? Jesus said, How many loaves have you? They say, Five and two fishes. Jesus then commanded them to sit down on the beautiful green grass in companies of fifty and a hundred.

What a pleasant sight! Five thousand men besides woman and children, no doubt all tired and hungry, watching with intense interest how he who had not where to lay his head was going to feed such a multitude. If two hundred pennyworth was not sufficient that each may take a little, surely five loaves would not meet their necessities; and strange to say, even the five loaves were borrowed from a young lad who had followed in the crowd, perhaps little barley cakes his mother had given him in a hurry, with two small fishes. It may have been only enough to supply his own need. Little did the dear one who made the loaves think that the Lord of the whole earth would refresh and feed such a multitude.

And when Jesus had taken the loaves, he looked up to heaven and blessed and break the loaves, and set them before them all, and they did all eat and were filled. When they were filled Jesus said to his disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain that nothing may be lost; therefore they gathered them together and filled twelve baskets. Probably a little bag held the five loaves and two small fishes carried by the lad, and after such a multitude were fed, think of the fragments. This is a beautiful figure of the true bread of life of which Jesus says, "If any man eat of this bread he shall live for ever." It came to the weary, hungry ones without money and without price. The Increaser girded himself with power, and came forth to serve them, filling thousands with a lad's simple meal. What wonderful love to the children of men! Each disciple had a basket full of fragments which they, and not the multitude, were commanded to gather, precious crumbs of life which can never be wasted or lost. Lord evermore give us this bread.

Your affectionate teacher,
E. COTTMAN.

The ancient city of Tarsus, where the apostle Paul was born, has a railroad. British capitalists are constructing a railway in Asia Minor, the first section of which, from Mersina to Tarsus, has been officially inaugurated. The opening of the road was made the occasion of a grand jubilee, with a free excursion to the tombs. Some Arab dignitaries would not trust their lives on the train, saying they would wait till they saw how the extraordinary English contrivance worked.

A LITTLE TALK WITH JESUS.

A little talk with Jesus, how it smooths the rugged road;
How it seems to help me onward when I faint beneath my load!
When my heart is crushed with sorrow, and my eyes with tears are dim,
There's nought can yield me comfort like a little talk with him.

I tell him I am weary, and I fain would be at rest;
That I'm daily, hourly longing for a home upon his breast;
And he answers me so sweetly, in tones of tenderest love,
"I am coming soon to take thee to my happy home above."

Ah! this is what I'm wanting, his lovely face to see;
And (I'm not afraid to say it) I know he's watching me.
He gave his life a ransom to make me all his own,
And he can't forget his promise, to me, his purchased one.

I know the way is dreary to yonder far-off clime,
But a little talk with Jesus will while away the time;
And yet the more I know him, and all his grace explore,
It only sets me longing to know him more and more.

I cannot live without him, nor would I if I could;
He is my daily portion, my medicine and my food.
He's altogether lovely, none can with him compare;
The chief among ten thousand, the fairest of the fair.

So I'll wait a little longer, till his appointed time,
And glory in the knowledge that such a hope is mine:
Then in my Father's dwelling, where "many mansions" be,
I'll sweetly talk with Jesus, and he shall talk with me.

"The Connection Between the Second Coming of Christ and the Gift of Life."

One of the most remarkable features of our day in the Christian world is the progress made in the knowledge of this truth, that the Lord will come again to reign upon the earth. There is nothing that has made more rapid strides of progress than this. Even if we compare it with the progress of Universalism, I think it may be found to have advanced in an equal ratio. It is gratifying to us, because as an Association we believe in this truth and proclaim it. But we are not the only [ones] who believe it, and look for the [coming] of the Lord. When I say "the coming of the Lord," it is scarcely necessary that I should explain that we do not mean the coming of the Lord after the millennium, or after countless thousands of years; but that he shall come to introduce the millennium. We are told that we do not know the hour or the day in which he shall come. It may be sooner, or it may be later; but we are in an expectant attitude, as servants waiting the coming of their Lord.

It is thought by many that we who believe in conditional immortality hold a dangerous error; but we preach conditional immortality, that is, through Christ alone. We are sometimes accused of making this altogether a doctrinal matter, that we are fond of dwelling on certain passages and forgetting that it should be a live thing, a heartfelt doctrine. Well, this may have been the case with some. I am sorry to say it has been so. But I trust it will be so with none of us, and that we speak as our Chairman has done regarding these things. We dare not keep silence. We must speak out the truth, and we cannot allow men to go down to destruction whilst keeping our mouths shut.

There is one fact which is beyond all controversy; and that is, that in the early ages of the Church the hope, the principal hope, of the Church was the return of her Lord. It is an equally incontestable fact that this faith faded and died; and it is only in our own days that it has risen to any great extent. For ages the Church slumbered and slept, and was not aware of any such hope as the return of the Lord. What was the reason that this hope sank and disappeared? There is no effect without a cause. It is an unquestionable fact that this hope, which was so bright, the hope of the Church, disappeared. What was the cause? This, I think, is a legitimate inquiry, one which we are bound to face. Can we suppose that this blessed hope died from inanition, that is, that it was insufficient to comfort the Church. I think it is not possible to take such a view as that. It has always been a living hope, one that has been able to purify the affections, and support the Christian in the midst of his trials. It could not sink for that reason. It is also equally impossible to suppose it would have been dropped unless some other hope had taken its place. The Church could not land itself in a hopeless position. It must always have a hope. What was it, then? I speak a fact that is incontestable, that the cause of the disappearance of this hope of the Church was the introduction of the doctrine of natural immortality. There is no question of the fact. It is sometimes said that the reason was that, when Constantine became a Christian, the idea got abroad that the Church and the world were to be one, and that with the spread of the Christian Empire with a Christian Emperor at its head, a triumphant Church would become universal. That, no doubt, had its effect upon Christian truth. But we must go further back than that if we wish to trace the source of this error. It goes back to the third century. Men—philosophers of the Greek school—were not willing to give up their heathen philosophies. Therefore they made a sort of compromise between heathenism and Christianity; and the man who thus signalised himself was Origen, who, of all the early Fathers, did most to mystify and degrade Christian truth.

This philosophy taught that instead of receiving the gift of life from Christ alone, we have the element of it within us already, that we have the Divine essence, that cannot go out, and that we live, whether we accept God's offer or not, as long as God lives. It is false. It is not taught in the Book of God. But it was the introduction of this that did havoc with that grand and glorious hope of the return of the Lord. Just think of it. It worked its own natural result. Men could not possibly believe that they themselves possessed natural immortality, and yet look with anxious hope for a return of the Life-giver. The two positions are irreconcilable. And here you have the cause and the effect. I put it to you to consider it.

Further, we find that the resurrection—which has been so prominently brought before us already—suffered the same process of being put away as an active and definite hope of the Christian. That false philosophy which came into the Church, and which was capable of putting back to a distant future the return of the Lord, was compelled also to postpone the resurrection. The two things are inseparable. A man believes that he possesses life in himself; and it is all one to him whether the resurrection takes place sooner or later. It is not the hope which the Scriptures authorise us to set before men. But let a man be fully persuaded that on the return of Christ and on the resurrection of the dead depends his all; that unless the Lord come, then there is no hope for him; I say it is impossible for him to put off to an indefinite future the return of his Lord.

You, perhaps—and I know I speak the fact—you attach far more importance to the resurrection than those who do not understand the return of the Lord. But have you got to the full length in regard to this? In 1 Cor. xv. the Apostle Paul speaks of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. He supposes for a moment that Christ had not risen, and the consequences that would have followed; and he sums up a telling argument in these words, concerning those who had fallen asleep in Christ, that if Christ be not risen, then their faith was vain, they were yet in their sins, and "then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" and he concludes with saying, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Therefore, surely, on this one foundation is built the whole of the Christian's hopes, that Christ is risen and become the first fruits of them that slept; that on the resurrection of the Christian himself depends the hope of what he looks forward for in the future life.

Let us see whether we are not dishonoring the Lord, unwittingly it may be, in not giving him the full glory that belongs to him as the Life-giver. The fact is, that your eyes are only partially opened. You have been unable to see the truth that has been buried for ages, and unknown to the greater part of the Church. But you must get beyond that. You are still holding by that which has caused the confusion; and until you reject this false theology, this ghostology, referred to, you cannot possibly give the full prominence and place to the return of the Lord that you ought; and you will be in danger of falling back to that state from which the Church is only now emerging.

Is Jesus the Christ? He goes by many titles. You know he is the Christ, and you understand that "the Christ" means "the Anointed One," the King who is to reign in Jerusalem over the whole nations of the earth. But is our Lord the Christ? In Acts iii., we read that Peter says, "Ye have rejected the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be given unto you, and killed the Prince of Life." There is none of Christ's titles without meaning, none that are synonymous. They are not given haphazard. He is called in Isaiah, "Prince of peace," because in his days peace shall abound in the earth; men shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruninghooks, and learn war no more. Likewise, there is meaning in this phrase, "Prince of Life." If you look at some instances given in the New Testament of the use of the word made by Christ himself, you will see it is not open to us to give it any other meaning. As an example, our Lord says, "As the living Father hath sent Me, and I live by him, even so," etc. Here you find the "life" and "living" running through the whole passage. You cannot suppose it means the "happy Father" or his "happy people," and yet that is the way in which our popular theologians construe the passage. It is a real life we have in the Lord Jesus Christ. Hence he is called the Prince of Life.

1 Thess. iv. is a familiar passage to us all, no doubt; and here you see this connection: "The Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall first rise." We look for the Lord. We long to see him. We shall see him at the resurrection. And in Colossians we read: "Set your affections on things above, where Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

If you wish to see the danger of the false theology in all its virulence, go to the Church of Rome. There you will find worshipers offering prayer to the dead, to dead men and to dead women, offering perpetually to the Lord of glory as a babe in its mother's arms or as transfixed to the cross. They have forgotten that the Lord is risen from the dead and become the first-fruits of them that slept. But, my friends, this whole Roman system is based on the dogma of the immortality of the soul. Take away the coming of the Lord from Roman Catholics, and it makes no great difference; but take away the immortal soul-ism or ghostology and you say its existence, you cut off the stream from its source. I entreat you to consider whether there is not much remaining in our nominal Protestantism of the spirit of Romanism. I am persuaded there is. On one occasion our Lord spoke of two debtors, one who owed 500 pence, the other who owed 50 pence. He asked the question which of them would love the most; and Simon said: "He whom thou forgavest most." Our Lord said this was correctly answered. In the same way he who most correctly appreciates and understands the blessings and the unapproachable importance of the coming of the Lord, will be most loved. He who most clearly understands his future and his all depends upon the return of his Lord, will most earnestly pray, "Come, Lord; come quickly."—David B. Strang, in Bible Standard.

HIS GRACE.

"By grace ye are saved; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." Eph. ii. 8.

This word "grace" is used about 150 times in the New Testament as a name. It is not used by either Matthew or Mark, and only seven times by Luke in his gospel, and eighteen times in his history of the apostles. John gives it three times in his gospel narrative, but not in any of his epistles. Since the first corrupters of the gospel troubled and bewitched the churches of Judea and Asia Minor, by imposing upon them circumcision and various portions of the law which was given to Israel by the hand of Moses, the gospel of the grace of God has suffered violence from those who substitute their own speculations—called beliefs, or creeds—as if they were really divine, and the simple message of God's favor, grace, or love, only human.

The history of Christianity has been, if we care to sum it up, simply the history of those who have turned aside from the word message of gospel of the glory of the blessed God, to various speculations of corruptible man. While some who are bewitched by creeds today, and actively engaged destroying the work of their own hands, under the delusion that such is service acceptable and well-pleasing in the sight of God, let us turn again to the word of his grace, which is able to build us up and to give us inheritance among all those who are sanctified by faith which is in Christ Jesus, who is the gift of God's grace.

In the New Testament the first use of the word grace is by the angel Gabriel. To Mary, the espoused wife of Joseph the son of David, he said: "Fear not, for thou hast found favor with God." Luke i. 30. This announcement reveals to her the state of mind which God cherished towards her. He is about to confer a favor, or grace, upon her; and through her to all the human family. This was therefore the message of God's favor, or the gospel of his grace. He had, four thousand years before this time, declared that the seed of the woman should bruise the head of the serpent. That announcement revealed also that he was gracious even to the disobedient and deceived. Now he is graciously pleased to reveal to this woman that he is going to make her the channel of his greatest favor. Gabriel continued: "And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Looking at this revelation with the desire to discern the special features of the favor bestowed upon Mary, we find first the announcement to her that she had found favor with God. The idea expressed by the word "favor" is, that it is a vital, self-acting property incessantly engaged in acts of favor. This is the idea of what the Living God is, as he has revealed himself by his creative acts; for creation is itself the living embodiment of his favor, or self-acting love. It is the effect of which he alone is the self-acting cause. This special act about to take place, as revealed to her by the angel, shows that God out of his favor was about to raise up from her a permanent occupant of the throne of her ancestral father David. The name he gave to the prospective child reveals further the nature of the favor. It is not simply the placing of a permanent occupant upon David's throne, as that in itself would simply convey the idea of permanent contention. The permanence of David's throne under a king similar to himself, or any of his successors, could scarcely be defined as a favor from God, seeing that by an act of righteous judgment he felt it necessary to overturn it for their wickedness.

Thou shalt call his name Jesus; that is, he who shall save; or, the Savior. The favor to Mary was small in comparison with the greater favor to mankind. She was the channel who was to convey to the world God's unspeakable favor. In this child the Spirit of the Father leads captive the spirit or substance of the mother. Some have undertaken to call this child flesh, the same in every respect as if though Joseph, the husband of Mary, were his father. Others have called him the maker of heaven and earth. Jehovah himself claims him for his own Son, and therefore he must be accepted and revered as God's own Son; the embodiment of his love, or favor, to man. The body of Jesus therefore differed from every other. In comparison with men he is described as "fairer," grace being poured into his lips. In comparison with angels he ranked higher, as by inheritance he obtained a more excellent name than they. God's special favor, which the angel came to announce, was the gift of a permanent King and Savior, whose body was perfectly free from every element of corruption. This is the unspeakable gift of God, who contained within himself bodily all the fulness of the Godhead. At the same time the image of the invisible God, but not the invisible God; and also the image and likeness of sinful flesh, but not sinful flesh.

The one who affirms that Jesus was God himself, because he was the image of God, is as far from the truth, on the one hand, as his friend is on the other, who affirms that Jesus because he was in the likeness of man was man. God's own description of his favor ought to be accepted as final: "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him."

The Son of God and King of Israel, begotten of the Holy Spirit, and therefore the Son of the Holy Spirit; born of a woman, and therefore the Son of man. Invisible spirit in visible flesh as to his substance. A union formed by Jehovah himself, which neither man nor angel could sever. This body was prepared for the suffering of death, but also prepared against seeing corruption. It was possible for him to die, yes, it was necessary that he should lay down his life; and also necessary that he should not be holden of death. Death therefore had no claim upon him. "By the favor of God he put himself under its power for a time." Death found itself in possession of One against whom it had no claim, but whose subjection to it was a sacrifice acceptable and well pleasing in the sight of God. By the favor of God he was conceived. By the favor of God he spoke the message of his love. By his favor he performed unnumbered deeds of love to man. By his favor he suffered death, even the death of the cross; the just One for the unjust ones, that he might bring the unjust ones to God. By the favor of God he was raised up again from the dead, and exalted to his own right hand in the heavens. By his favor he sent the message of forgiveness of sins and everlasting life to the sinful and perishing everywhere, who repented of their sins and turned to him with all their hearts.

In one sentence: "By grace ye are saved, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God."

The record of God's favor preaching peace by Jesus Christ has been preserved by him for our use, and by that record, when received by us in the love of it, we are begotten again by him of his own will that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures. God's message conveyed first by Gabriel to Mary; again, by a heavenly throng to shepherds while tending their flocks; by John the Baptist to Israel; by Jesus, also, to Israel, and afterwards, by his apostles, to the ends of the earth. This message is in itself one, although made up of different parts. These are parts of a whole which stands or falls if they, one and all, be not accepted. Thus, the rejection of the angel's message to Mary leaves the message of favor without a beginning, and presents a picture without a head. The rejection of the fact that Jesus was dead destroys the possibility of his resurrection, as resurrection is possible only where death has taken place.

The admission that the Christ died, and yet the denial that he has been raised again from the dead, makes resurrection from the dead—preached to men who believed that he died—an impossibility. If all these items be received, and yet a rejection of that part relating to his return be rejected, the message is destroyed thereby. As James says of the law, that he who offends in one point is guilty of the whole; even so it holds with the message of God's favor. The whole must be received in the love of it, if we are to be saved by it.

Beliefs about any one of the items of this message of grace which in any way disturbs the unity of the whole, are not to be confounded with the belief of God's message. The preaching of beliefs about what God says must not be confounded with the message itself. Speculations, deductions and inferences about the incorruptible seed are not the incorruptible seed itself. Nothing short of this message, that God himself has begotten a Son, contains the generative power for adding to his family. Men begotten by beliefs are simply the sons of these beliefs, but not the sons of God. Those begotten of creeds of human compilation have no higher parentage than the creed or law they are begotten of. Water does not rise higher than its fountain. No son can rise higher than the cause of his existence. There is no hope for—nor possibility for—any son of Adam rising higher than his disobedient parent and terminating his life of disobedience and death, except that One which is the product of the favor of God. He alone who gave man life at first can redeem that life. He who sustains his large family by his favor, although living in disobedience, he alone and by his favor alone can regive the life he gave at first. He alone can beget again in the sinful and perishing the hope of forgiveness and imperishable life. And he alone has done all this, according to his own purpose and grace in Christ Jesus before the world began. The gospel story, or joyful message, that he would become a Father of all the families of the earth, formed the only hope of all whose names are in the book of life. The embodiment of all this promise in a Son completes the revelation of himself, which is the revelation of his favor. The promise at first contained the vitality of the promise, and imparted that vitality to every one who believed it. The embodiment of the promise in Christ Jesus his Son was a vitalising act, and it has now become the vital part in his message of favor. As his promise at the foundation of the world was the ground of hope to all for four thousand years, so now in these days the fulfilment of his promise in the gift of a Son in whom was eternal life becomes the ground of confidence and example of what he will do in each one of those who are now vitalized by the message of what he has done in his own Son. This gospel message is not a human, but a divine power, which gives life to every one who obeys it. The Messenger gives possible to himself to every one who receives him. His incorruptible seed enters in and dwells in him. His Spirit dwells in him. He is led by him as his son.

Human creeds and confessions are generated by the state of nakedness of those who frame them. There is not one spark of vitality in them, positively or negatively. Instead of covering, these reveal the nakedness of those who glory in them, to their own shame and the contempt of all who hate counterfeits and shams. To all who have ears to hear, therefore, we call, "Come out from every people who shelter themselves under any human creed, and test of fellowship wit' God, and seek the fellowship of all who hear what God says, and do what he in his favor has commanded, and ye shall have rest and joy unspeakable now, and in the world to come life everlasting.—Wm. Ellis, Editor Christian Lamp.

The White Race.

Recently in Washington Representative J. G. Cannon of Illinois, in speaking of the white race, said:

"According to an English statistician, the white race now number one-third of the population of the globe; whereas, two centuries ago, they were not more than one-tenth of it. They have swallowed up Europe, and are entering Africa at all sides. There are French colonies at Tunis and Algiers. The English practically control Egypt, and the Dutch and the English have a strong hold upon Southern Africa. We ourselves are trying to get admission to the great Congo valley. The white race has Australia and it has a strong hold on India. The Chinese race, large as it is, does not grow. It is not a colonizing race, and its emigrants return to China, if possible before death. Of all the white races the Anglo-Saxon and the Anglo-American are the strongest, and it seems to me that South America is our legitimate field. A century from now we will have 300,000,000 people in the United States, and already our emigrants are pushing their way into Mexico. I do not say that this whole hemisphere will be under the political government of the United States, or will be under one, two or half a dozen such governments. I only predict that its ruling population will be Anglo-American, and that it will belong to our race family.

Palestine.

Prof. Hayter Lewis, who has just returned to England from Jerusalem, brings the news that the find of the wall north of the "Citadel" in the Holy City promises to be a discovery of the very highest importance. The wall is from eight to ten feet thick; it is built of masonry exactly similar to that in the lower courses of "David's Tower"—that is, of large stones with the well known and characteristic marginal drift; and there is a deep rock scarp at its foot. These circumstances point very strongly to the presumption that there is here the long-lost Second Wall. It is most desirable that the discovery should be followed up as soon as possible, though difficulties may arise from the presence of houses. How important it is may be gathered from the single fact that if the wall runs outside the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, and if it be accepted as the Second Wall, all the sites covered by that venerable church are thereby proved and must be acknowledged to be false. But, in any case, the tradition that here Constantine raised his basilica, and surrounded the supposed site of the Holy Tomb with columns, will remain undisturbed.—The Occident.

CURBED'D ABOUT MUCH SERVING.

Christ never asks of us such busy labor
As leaves no time for resting at his feet;
The waiting attitude of expectation
He oft times counts a service most complete.

He sometimes wants our ear—our rapt attention—
That he some sweetened secret may impart;
'Tis always in the time of deepest silence,
That heart finds deepest fellowship with heart.

We sometimes wonder why our Lord has placed us
Within a space so narrow, so obscure,
That nothing we call work can find us entrance;
There's only room to suffer—to endure.

Well, God loves patience: Souls that dwell in stillness,
Doing the little things, or resting quite,
May just as perfectly fulfill their mission,
Be just as useful in the Father's sight.

As they who grapple with some giant evil,
Clearing a path that every eye may see,
Our Savior cares for cheerful acquiescence,
Rather than for a busy ministry.

And yet he does love service, where 'tis given
By grateful love that clothes itself in deed;
But work that's done beneath the scourge of duty,
Be sure to such he gives but little heed.

Then seek to please him, whatsoe'er he bids thee;
Whether to do, to suffer, to lie still:
'Twill matter little by what path he fed us,
If in it all we sought to do his will.

WHAT THINK YE OF THE CHRIST WHOSE SON IS HE?--Matt. xxii. 42.--No. 8.

What are his present relations to us, and, what do we know of his future?

Born to Israel as its legitimate king, by actual descent from David in his ancestry, he, from the beginning of his ministry taught the things pertaining to the kingdom of God; and his immediate followers, as well as all the others who heard him, understood his mission was to restore to Israel its forfeited Davidical throne, and the power to become world-rulers under his continued protection and care.

That this is true, is evinced by such testimonies as these; to-wit—"Behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" Matt. ii. 1, 2. "Jesus went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel" (good news) "of the kingdom." Ib. iv. 23. "Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Ib. ix. 35. "After that John was put in prison Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand." Mark i. 14 15.

"He showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them (the disciples) forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." Acts i. 3. "The chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." Luke xxiv. 21, 22. "When they, (the disciples, just prior to his ascension) therefore, were come together, they asked, of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" Acts i. 6. "The soldiers also mocked him coming to him, and offering him vinegar and saying, If thou be the King of the Jews save thyself." Luke xxiii. 36. "Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am King of the Jews." Jno. xix. 21. "From thenceforth Pilate sought to release him; but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend; whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar." John. xix. 13.

He came to his own but his own received him not; they reviled him; they rejected him; they accused him before Pilate, and secured his condemnation to death. He died as King of the Jews. They slew him and exonerated Pilate from the blame of his death, saying, "His blood be on us and our children." The tomb, however, could not hold him. Mortality in him was extinguished, and only the embodiment of the Word of God remained.

The oath and promise of God to Abraham and David, made long centuries before, still remained imperative, and, as part of its fulfilment, although he had been slain as King of the Jews, he was raised to the power of an endless life; a Prince of the kings of the earth, Jew and Gentile; with all power both in heaven and earth at his command. Hail, Blessed Redeemer! Hail, Incarnate Word of God, made flesh for a lost race! Hail, prince of earth's crowned heads endowed with unending life! Thy waiting ones await thy return from heaven, to change their vile bodies that they may be fashioned like thine own glorious body, invigorated with immortality and incorruption, and for a full and free adoption as sons into the household of God, and a brotherhood with thee.

Partaking of the earthy nature and sinful characteristics of father Adam through a common parentage from him, by his transgression the entire human race became amenable to the penalty passed on him. Death was the doom of the race. The law was inexorable, and mankind was helpless to avert it. The carnal mind is at enmity with God. The wages of sin is death, and the curse of violated law rests on all the earth-births of Tertiary and Post-tertiary time. Only one avenue is open for escape from the universal catastrophe. After the penalty has been exacted, and man is dead, the law has no farther claim on him, and should he remain in the domain of death eternally, the law, or its penalty, would have nothing more to do with him. The law only extends to man's fulfilment of its penalty; then it forever ceases, and anything done to him, or for him, or with him in the death state is superior to, and beyond both the law and its penalty.

Just here is where the Christ found humanity, and offered himself a ransom for it. This he could do freely, since, by his parentage, he was free from the curse of the law. Therefore we read, that "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." Gal. iii. 13. Again, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation: to-wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him to be sin (transgressed law) for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." 2 Cor. v. 17. Christ has died for all, and "is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth," and "as many as receive him, to them he gives power (right, or privilege) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John i. 12. Standing, as he does, between God and man, in the relation of a Son perfected by obedience through his sufferings, death and resurrection from the dead, to the former, "he is a propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also, for the sins of the whole world." An advocate with the Father: a Mediator of the better testament; and a high priest forever after the order of Melchisedec, offering his own blood, in the presence of God for us, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, is it unreasonable for him to expect and demand, strict compliance with his requirements, whatever they may be, on the part of mankind, for whom he has become surety to God; and especially so, when their future life and all the blessedness pertaining to it, depends on him as the life-giver, and on their compliance with those requirements?

Answer by Paul: I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Rom. xii. 1. "Yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God." Ib. v. 13. "Ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." 1 Cor. vi. 20. When, therefore, he instructs his disciples to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature" and informs them as to the results, that "he that believeth (the gospel preached) and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned," (R. V. condemned) is there aught unreasonable or unjust in the requirement? Belief, or "faith cometh by hearing," says Paul, and "hearing by the Word of God," (the seed again which was made flesh, and which, as we have already traced, has accomplished so many things), and, again, "whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

Faith, then is basic. It is built upon the testimony of prophets and apostles, Jesus, the Christ, himself, being chief corner-stone. It is the sure foundation, "The substance, ground or confidence of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," and "without faith it is impossible to please him." (God). Faith springs from a "one gospel," hence there can be but one true faith of the gospel. For this reason Paul includes it among the seven essentials to "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," Eph. iv. 3, 6; Christ Jesus, the embodied Word, its "author and finisher" instructed his disciples to "Have faith in God," Mark xi. 22, and on another occasion he admonishes them thus, "Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God believe also in me." John xiv. 1.

A reason assigned by Paul for the exercise of faith is that "without faith it is impossible to please him, (God), for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of those that diligently seek him," Heb. xi. 6. That a belief in the Christ, and in the gospel of the kingdom of God, are essential to salvation, readily appears from the Christ's charge to his disciples, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be condemned." Faith, however, unaccompanied by its legitimate works avails nothing towards the great work of human redemption. As James says, "Faith, if it hath not works is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. Thou believeth there is one God: thou doest well: the devils also believe and tremble. But will thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" So also Paul has left on record that "not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified."

Reformation of character and baptism for the remission of sins are the first of those works in the order named. Certainly, what our Lord required 1800 years ago is just as necessary now to insure salvation. Then, the belief of the gospel and baptism were enjoined to follow the preaching of the gospel, that it might be available for individuals desiring salvation; and it will be remembered, that on the day of Pentecost Peter answered the anxious inquiry of those who were pricked to their hearts under his teaching, and asked, "men and brethren, what shall we do?" by saying to them "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Acts iii. 38. Has God's plan of salvation changed? Is not the gospel of our Lord Jesus, the Christ, the same in all ages? Does the sinful human race of this day need anything more or less for the remission of sins than did Cornelius of old? If repentance and baptism were what God required of them, then, that their sins might be remitted, and that they might receive "the adoption of sons" in the brotherhood of Christ, will aught else stand accepted in their stead now? If so, on what, and by what authority was the change made? Is not the exact way revealed in the Word, just as it is recorded, without any addition or diminution, or spiritualising, the best, the safest, the surest? Succeeding baptism, the "walk in newness of life" follows as a sequence, to produce perfect Christian growth, and it consists, says Peter, in giving all diligence, to add to faith, virtue, and to virtue, knowledge, and to knowledge, temperance, and to temperance, patience, and to patience, godliness, and to godliness, brotherly-kindness, (an unfeigned love of the brethren), and to brotherly-kindness, charity."

Such are the things required by the Christ through which to attain to a full stature of manhood and womanhood in the "new creature" class. He,—the first-born from the dead,—the first-fruit of them that slept, the first-born of every creature, a representative of the class of life to predominate in the age to come, the Christ, offers to the poor, fallen, earthly, imperfect man, subject to sickness, sorrow, misfortune and death; the last born of the earth-birth type of Tertiary creation, immunity from all the ills to which the race is liable, as a reward for obedience to the foregoing demands of him to whom is given all power in heaven and earth. His ultimatum is, accept the terms and live, or, refuse to accept and remain in the congregation of the dead. As an advocate he is now before the Father pleading for us. The Father accepts him as surety for the race and, "whosoever will may come and partake of the waters of life freely," not as they may think fit and proper, but as God requires.

The beginning of a new creation, a creation for an age soon to be revealed to the earth-dwellers in the brightness and magnificence of its dawning splendors, and unending completion of fruition, the Christ requires those who hope to be like him to make a requisite preparation by the formation of perfect characters; by acceptance of, and obedience to the Word of God, as to the seed or germ which shall develop a new creature of the new creation type; and he has established this germ as the quickening principle, both in the adoption, and in the resurrection from among the dead ones.

"The sower soweth the word of God." Mark iv. 14, (Read the entire parable), "Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom," Col. iii. 16. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life," John vi. 63. "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge you at the last day." Ib. xii. 48. "Jesus said, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?" John ii. 25, 26.

THE 144,000.

Are they not the number of the Jews which received the gospel during the time of favor extended to them before turning to the Gentiles? "Israel was holiness unto the Lord and the firstfruits of his increase." Jer. ii. 3. James, addressing the "twelve tribes which are scattered abroad," says, "of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures." Jas. i. 18. "And I heard the number of them which were sealed, an hundred and forty and four thousand of all (twelve thousand of each), the tribes of the children of Israel." Rev. vii. 4-8. "And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts and the elders, and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women (corrupt churches or creeds, for they did not yet exist) for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth: These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." Rev. xiii. 3, 4.

"After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude which no man could number (which are virgins also, Cant. vi. 8) of all nations and kindred and people and tongues stood before the throne (where the first fruit virgins stood, Rev. xiv. 3-5) and before the Lamb clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands." As I understand it neither of these classes are the church, the bride, the Lamb's wife, but "these are they which were not defiled with women" (Rev. xiv. 4) and "they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the the throne of God." Rev. vii. 14, 15. The church we understand to be, not a great multitude, nor even 144,000, but a "few," a "little flock" of voluntary overcomers who will not be before the throne but, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. The virgins are companions of the bride Ps. xlv. 14, and their office is to serve in God's temple, Rev. vii. 15. while it is the office of the church to reign, "made kings and priests and shall reign on earth" Rev. v. 10.

Like Brother Buzzell, I do not say that I am right, but if Brother Colegrove is right in his application of them to the church, does he not make first-fruits and harvest "identical in time?" And if Bro. Buzzell's application that just that number of the Jews would accept Christ previous to his coming is right, how could they be the first-fruits while Jew and Gentile have accepted Christ simultaneously. Jeremiah says that "Israel was the first-fruits of the increase" and James wrote to the "twelve tribes" telling them that the Father of lights had begotten them with the word of truth, that they (those addressed) should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures," and John speaks of the 144,000 as "being the first-fruits." Christ says; "the harvest is the end of the world, or age," Matt. xiii. 39, and the "sheaf, or handful of firstfruits" evidently precedes the harvest, John says Rev. vii. 4, 9, he heard the number of them that were sealed; and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand. After this he beheld, and lo, a great multitude which no man could number, the 144,000 being only as a sheaf (or handful man,) compared with the great multitude, or harvest. The sealing time, I understand, has reference not only to the "twelve times twelve thousand Israelites," but also to the "great multitude" for all are alike servants, Rev. vii. 3, 15. The servants are sealed in their foreheads, having his name in their foreheads," Rev. xxii. 4. The church is to have this mark also, but is to have other marks in addition to this. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name," Rev. iii. 12. The time of sealing in both cases is when he comes, Rev. iii. 11; and xxii. 7.

Like Bro. Colgrove, I do not wish to "appear dogmatical," but offer these few thoughts, of the "many of which I have made either mental or written memorandum," hoping they may be suggestive and elicit something more on the subject from those who are more able to write upon it. I am glad Bro. C. gave us those questions in "Micapen notes," hope he will give us some more. Yours in the blessed hope.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Certainly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Sydney Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry.... The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a worldly, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel Hall, D. D.

THE COMING AGE.

—ITS—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It meets with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring "What are the signs of his coming?" The grave upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the zeal of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in Cloth Price $1.00. Send to this office for this work.

AN OPEN LETTER TO GEO. MOYER.

"Where the Spirit of Christ is there is liberty."

Dear Sir:

I was quite surprised to see from your pen, in the Christadelphian Advocate of May, 1886, a letter under the following caption, "A Letter from Brother Moyer in Reply to Carrie Williams' Attack upon the Truth."

It would be much more in keeping with my sense of justice and propriety, to reply to you through the same paper, but as the above Scripture seems not to influence the Editor of the Advocate, I am unable to do so. Through its columns he has misrepresented me in giving the impression that I "attack the truth," and thus denies me the privilege of defending the position I have taken on the question of truth, or telling what I hold to be the teachings of Scripture. Therefore I ask the liberty of our worthy brother Editor of THE RESTITUTION to reply to your letter, through its columns. All your personalities I pass by without notice, as I deem any public journal an unfit place for individualities.

First, then, let me observe that I have never "attacked the truth." God's revealed truth I honor, and glory in it. Yea, I can rejoice even in persecution for its sake. As our beloved brother, Paul, told whereof he was accused, so will I. I have in a series of thirteen articles clearly presented the absurd errors embodied in the unscriptural doctrine of mortal resurrection as taught in the pamphlet titled "Anastasis." On page 50 of the Advocate you say, "Mortal resurrection. Why should any one teach that the dead will awake mortal? Mrs. Williams' article will suggest this question to the mind of an honest, enquiring man. He will not stop until he knows. Do the Christadelphians believe that the saints will obtain eternal life? Yes. Why then, for what reason, do they advocate mortal resurrection? The answer to this question will come, and when it does come to an honest heart, it clears the air of all dust and confusion of words, and lets in upon the mind the light of truth and conviction."

In this quotation you propound various questions, but you answer none of them. You truly remark that an honest, enquiring man will not stop until he knows. Surely he will not, when his attention has once been called to the question. He will take it to the word, and if it is there taught he can and will find it. And if it is not he will drop it, as Paul did the viper on that certain Island. You ask why do the Christadelphians advocate mortal resurrection, and you say the answer will come, etc., etc. Now sir, as you did not attempt to answer this question, and you have addressed yourself to me, I reply in all candor and sincerity, hoping my reply will do as you say, viz., "clear the air of all dust," etc. They advocate mortal resurrection simply because Dr. Thomas taught it. They think he was a "great man," and that whatever he said must be true. They do not advocate it because it has ever been found in the Bible, either by him or any of his followers. In presenting this theory he has introduced such a confusion of words, as to destroy the true sense of language. Accept my reply and the air is at once cleared of all this confusion of words without knowledge!

You further say, "A certain amount of criticism and argument will have to be gone through and there is no way but to wade through it all," and yet you do not even call "your aides" on the verge of the depths to be waded through. You scrupulously leave that to others, for you are evidently unable for the task. You very correctly say, "The truth cannot be determined by criticism," and yet almost immediately you say, "criticism has determined a better rendering," etc. This loose manner of writing, I perceive, is quite characteristic of your school of writers. What you assert on one page you contradict on the next. This fact tells plainly that you do not rest on the sure foundation—the rock of revealed truth.

The truth is determined, or found, only by careful, patient study of the word. "The Bible is its own interpreter." Yea, assuredly it is, and it is one grand and glorious harmony. It needs no construing or re-adjusting. You correctly assert "Every element of truth has its place where it nicely fits with all other parts. Then you issue a caution the full meaning of which I do not apprehend. "Don't get scared and stumble at somebody's learning." Your remark is cogent if you apply it to the founder of the Christadelphian body, for assuredly over his supposed learning many have stumbled.

Next you say, "Resurrection is one element of the truth, and judgment to come is another." These facts I have not denied. Then you arrange six separate propositions and request me to give all these elements their proper place.

1. "Christ comes." This I do not deny.

2. "The dead are raised." I admit this also.

3. "The living and awakened dead are both gathered unto the Lord." For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. 1 Thess. iv. 16. This glorious truth I believe and teach without any modification or readjustment. It is the inspired word of the Great Jehovah, and all sufficient for me.

4. "Account given to the judge of quick and dead." Assuredly we are not accountable to mortal man, nor is he authorized to judge who is worthy of life and who is not. The text given from Thessalonians shows that it is in the hands of a higher power, and that he will exercise his prerogative in justice and love. If the quick (the living) and the dead (in Christ), are changed and called forth from sheol incorruptible, as taught in 1 Cor. xv., they will have been judged worthy of that high calling, else it would not have been awarded to them. This is the point where confusion of words has been brought in to the utter distraction of innocent souls. Let us for a moment look at this subject from a Scripture standpoint. The whole tenor of the book shows that this life is our only probation. We are here placed as stewards in charge of certain talents, to be either used or folded away in napkins. When the present life ends, our accounts are handed in to the Master, as it were, in sealed envelopes. We have nothing more to say or do. They are not opened till the Master sees fit. He knows what each one contains, and by that or according to that knowledge, he manifests their judgment; and it is by giving to each according to the deeds done in the body and the account rendered of our lives, during our lives, that we are judged, and this fact the Master himself clearly taught in Luke xx. 35. They that are accounted worthy to attain to that world (or age) and the resurrection from the dead, etc. If our accounts kept during our lives insures to us a resurrection unto life, we will certainly get our reward when the Master comes.

5. "Putting on immortality in a moment." This revealed truth I believe and teach as also

6. "The kingdom possessed and enjoyed."

You say, "Bro. W. seems disinclined to give each element of truth the place and importance it demands. She seems to be confused in the classification of testimony." I am not at all confused, friend Moyer. It is you who are confused in attempting to answer my series of thirteen articles when you had read only the first one. You say I "ought to be able to see the frame work of the building, and cease trying to make one of the upper pieces the foundation sill." This remark has no force at all, as those who have read my "Notes on Anastasis" say that the work is done Scripturally, logically and thoroughly.

What you say on Job xix. is contrary to our best translators and closest students. Please look over in the margin of King James translation. Again you say that my exposition of Isa. xxvi. 19 is against my position, and favors mortal resurrection. "Why did you not give what I say instead of your misconstruction of it? On page 8 of Anastasis, Dr. T. says the formation of dew on plants is given by Isaiah as an illustration of the manner in which the saints are evolved from the dust of sheol. He confutes the subject in his effort to make it appear that the saints are represented by the dew, while I have shown that it is the vitalizing principle. But by no means do I infer that because that principle is illustrated by dew, that it of necessity brings back to mortal life. I will here give my remarks to which you refer and let others then judge for themselves. "Awake and sing ye that dwell in the dust. Here certain persons are addressed and told to perform a certain act, viz., to sing; the next clause of the verse explains why they are called upon to perform this act. For thy dew is as the dew of herbs. Now stop a moment and reflect: what effect has dew upon herbs, when they have become parched by heat or drought? It refreshes, it revives them, it infuses into them new life; and thy dew, i. e., the life giving principle, exercised on thee my people, is as the dew of herbs, it brings to life, and, therefore, for this reason, you can awake and sing." Do I here advocate mortal resurrection? No, I do not?

You say "Mrs. W. seems to labor under the mistaken notion that everything pertaining to Christ's coming is crowded into a moment of time." Not so at all, but I do make a distinction as the Book plainly teaches—between his coming for his saints, and his coming to judgment.

Are you my friend afraid, or unable to answer any of your own questions? You say, "But where does Christ appear to his saints, is it in the clouds of the atmospheric heavens?" The Book says it is. Can you believe it? The disciples saw him go up in a cloud; and the angels told them that he should so come in like manner as they saw him go. You further say, "But to satisfy the demands of a certain theory it should read, 'Just before he shall appear, or is visible we shall be like him.'" I have no "theory" nor does my faith in the sure word of the Lord, demand any change in the given testimony. You "exhort to candor, if not honesty and courage." Amen! A most wonderful revolution will be wrought both in you and your entire party if you will give careful, prayerful heed to the admonition.

Paul does not teach as you affirm, that there is a natural body and a spiritual body in the resurrection state, nor can you show it in the Word. But he does teach, that there is in this life a physical or mortal body, which, by natural descent we have all obtained from our progenitor the first Adam. And, that in the resurrection state there will be a spiritual body which we will have obtained by faith in Christ the second Adam. These truths the language of Scripture plainly teaches.

I do not deny that we shall all appear, or be manifested before the judgment-seat of Christ to receive reward according to the deeds done in the body. Your remarks on the "Josephites" in this connection are quite out of place. Then you add, "Those who advocate immortal emergence of the dead, are also disarmed and deprived of a favorite argument on first fruits. It can be shown that Jesus awoke from the dead, his identical mortal self. This is apparent from more than one statement. But one, I will submit. 'I have power to lay down my life and power to take it again.' Who can say that he did not take up what he laid down? (I can, on the authority of the Word). Would it not be well to look a little further and see when Jesus was immortalized? It can be shown very clearly."

On this quotation I observe, that, to affirm that Jesus was raised from the dead to mortal life is, flatly and without excuse, to deny the plain statement of the Word of life. He was the first fruits to immortal life of them that slept, many had been raised to mortal life before he arose. But he alone came forth as the Son of God, with power, i. e., the power of an endless life. He always was the Son of God, but not till his resurrection was he the Son of God with the power of an endless life no more to return to corruption. If it can be clearly shown that he was raised mortal and when he was immortalized, why do not you like a wise and faithful teacher go to work and show it, and not dilly dally, and try to play upon words and the superstitious blindness of your readers?

You say there are quite a number of Scriptures bearing on this subject. Why is it that you do not give them instead of merely asserting that they are there. Away with such blind leading of the blind. You say "it is not necessary to adopt any arbitrary definition of "egiro".....or any other word." What then, sir? Follow your leader and launch out into the language without any standard use for any word, only as it may or may not suit your speculative notions?

Bring forward your proofs from the word that the dead will be reorganized from the dust of earth; or else believe, and teach the truth. Yes, judgment precedes rewards and punishments. If they are judged worthy of life they will be called forth incorruptible. If not, death will be their portion. It is high time that you and all of your persuasion should "awake to soberness," and realize that God's ways are not to be either weighed or measured by mortal man!

And now in conclusion, Mr. Moyer, I hope you will continue the reply you so hastily began, and do not leave the impression on the minds of your readers, that you have in the May No. of the Advocate, replied to my "Notes on Anastasis," for such an impression would be very wrong and misleading. If your theory of mortal resurrection can be proved from the Scriptures it is your bounden duty to demonstrate the fact by unequivocal testimony, not by coining words and misapplying visions as the Editor of the Advocate has sought to do in his recent articles on Resurrection and Judgment.

These articles, D. V., I hope soon briefly to notice through THE RESTITUTION.

Hoping that the gracious Father may spare your life till your eyes are open to see his divine truth. I am earnestly contending for the faith.

Your well wisher,

CARRIE WILLIAMS.

P. S. I will here briefly return my sincere thanks, to the many dear ones scattered abroad, who have given to me words of gratitude, cheer, and encouragement, during my effort in Notes on Anastasis to maintain God's truth, in opposition to human speculation. I have not time to write to all but I do pray that our Father's blessing may rest on and abide with us all until we meet in his kingdom.

CARRIE W.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

In THE RESTITUTION for June 16, is an article by Wm. Ellis in reply to some points in mine of May 6, which was a reply to some criticisms of his on some of my statements on the gospel of the kingdom. W. E. says he is "persuaded that there exists among those professing a belief of the gospel of the kingdom of God, a very imperfect understanding of what they really do believe upon the matter."

I trust these criticisms and rejoinders may be the means of clearing up to some minds the points in dispute, however unpleasant and needless such controversy may appear as to so elementary a subject. May we all strive to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good."

If W. E., owing to some supposed difficulty inherent in this subject of the primary gospel proclaimed by John the Baptist and our Lord himself, as well as his apostles, includes himself and those like minded in this judgment, I should have less objection to it, than when I feel bound to suspect that he complacently means to apply it exclusively to those who differ from him. I am afraid, however, that, after thirty-five years' study of "the gospel of the kingdom," both on his part and on mine, unless he can give more reasonable grounds for this sweeping judgment than he has yet given, there will not be much impression made on those he charges with "a very imperfect understanding of what they really believe upon the matter." If W. E. is right in his charge, (the terms of which by the way do not exclude himself from the force of it), then it is questionable if he or any of the contributors and readers of THE RESTITUTION really understand the gospel, or indeed that it is capable of being understood at all. I hope to show, however, that his charge is as groundless as it is gratuitous.

As to the rendering given by W. E. of Matt. iii. 2, "The reign of the heavens hath come," which he gave on his own authority, without naming any other as having the credit of it, or otherwise as the case may be; he now throws the entire onus of this rendering on Robert Young LL.D. who, I may mention, is a Presbyterian elder and a respectable bookseller in Edinburgh. Unless Dr. Y. is held to be an infallible authority, and his version to be preferred to all the translations extant so far as I am aware; I submit that W. E. was bound to give solid reasons for the adoption of such a rendering. And even now the only attempt he makes to supply this deficiency is the assertion that, "literally rendered, it reads, The kingdom or authority of the heavens has been caused to approach (to you) understood." Granting this in its fullest sense, I demur to it in toto as being equivalent to "the kingdom of the heavens HATH COME." Does W. E. really think that "has been caused to approach" is substantially different from "has approached," or "has come near," or "is at hand?" ("To you), understood" makes the case no better—for it is still only "approached to you." As I have said before it is imminency and not presence, which is the substantial idea expressed in various forms in the several passages alluded to; and it would only be going over the same ground again to dwell longer on the point.

W. E. is dissatisfied with my statement, "where was the exercise of Jehovah's dominion as the true King of Israel at the time when John and Jesus preached? He was truly their rightful King, but in the exercise of his Divine Sovereignty he suffered the authority of his kingdom to be usurped by Assyrians, Babylonians, Persians, Greeks, and latterly by the Romans, who made tools of the chief priests of the Jews, in order to the ultimate carrying out of his own purposes." He says, "this is contrary to fact, as it was not these Gentile powers who usurped his Sovereignty over Israel, but Jehovah who subjugated his rebellious subjects to these powers. His power or reign over them was as real when cast out of his sight, and subjugated to chastisement, as when they were in receipt of his blessings for obedience."

There does not appear to me to be any substantial difference between these two statements. W. E. says, Jehovah subjugated his own rightful subjects to Gentile powers, that is, making them their subjects. I say he suffered his kingdom to be usurped by those powers. "Usurp" is defined "to seize and hold by force and without right;" "subjugate" is defined "to make subject, to bring under the yoke." I might ask, did not "Jehovah, in the exercise of his Divine Sovereignty," (that is, of course, over both Israel and the Gentile powers), "suffer his kingdom"(not only territory and subjects, but his own authority for the time being) to be seized and held by force and WITHOUT RIGHT by the Gentile powers? Does W. E. mean that God actually made war against his people by special operations of his power, and expressly authorized the Gentile powers to place their yoke upon them? Did not those powers act from their own grasping, ambitious desire of dominion, without any prompting on the part of Israel's King? Did he not simply refrain from interposing in behalf of his people and "suffer" the godless despotism of the oppressors to prevail? And this only to the length of rendering it expedient to inflict punishment on those powers for their conduct in the matter? See Jer. l. 17, 18, and context.

In my statement just alluded to, I did not mention the immediate purpose for which Jehovah suffered Israel to be subjected to Babylon, etc. As that did not strictly belong to the argument. I quite agree with W. E., however, that that purpose was chastisement for Israel's rebellion.

I would also have mentioned, what I treated more fully in the first article, that the kingdom of God or of the heavens is that theocracy which he established over the twelve tribes of Israel, and not that universal Sovereignty which he exercises over all his creatures. That theocracy was inaugurated at Sinai (B. C. 1491) by the giving of the law, etc., and was more fully developed in the choice of David and his descendants as the royal house of the kingdom; and was brought to an end by the deposition and exile of Zedekiah (B. C. 593) a period of nearly nine hundred years. The decree went forth "Remove the diadem and take off the crown....I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." The first coming of "him whose right it is," was as the "despised and rejected of men," so that the coming spoken of in this decree must be his "appearing again the second time." The similitude of the "Nobleman going into a far country to RECEIVE for himself a kingdom," is here quite in point, as I notice more fully in another article of this series.

The case of King Charles II. of Great Britain, was not given, as W. E. assumes, as a parallel in all points, and it is of no avail to pick out a point not embraced in the argument, and to show that as to that point, it does not fit. The real point is that for a time the dominion of the king was in abeyance just as really as if he had abdicated his throne by a voluntary act.

I never thought of doubting that "Jehovah sent his messenger John to introduce to Israel the rightful heir of his throne;" but I deny in the most positive manner that John did this by means of the proclamation, "The kingdom of God is at hand." The fact is that the Lord himself made the very same proclamation for several years after John's mission was closed; and consequently after he had been introduced, which is absurd. But I would ask by the way—Where is it said that JOHN introduced the rightful heir of the throne? Was it not rather Jehovah himself who introduced him? If the reader will carefully peruse John i. 28–30, he will find the true answer to the question.

Again, it has to be noted that our Lord was not introduced to his throne, but only to the people, which makes all the difference so far as any argument can be drawn from John as our Lord's forerunner.

W. E. says, speaking of the heirs of the kingdom, "The heirs, one and all, are in the kingdom of God as far as heirs can be, but none of these have been invited to inherit the kingdom, nor will they be invited to do so until God shall send Jesus Christ," etc.

I regret to be compelled to demur to both parts of this assertion. First, How can heirs be in the kingdom at all, even supposing the kingdom to be in existence, while they are only heirs? The Apostle Paul says: "Now I say, That the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all; but is under tutors and governors, until the time appointed of the father." (Gal. iv. 1, 2). Even in worldly kingdoms or empires which are in actual existence heirs to the throne do not exercise any regal or imperial authority. The Prince of Wales in Great Britain and the Czar-witch in Russia, might be cited as cases in point. The former through a member of the House of Lords, and, with the Peers his fellow-subjects of the Queen, possesses a voice and a vote in that Assembly; as to any regal power he has no share.

As to the other statement—"none of these (heirs) have been invited to inherit the kingdom," etc., I would again quote the words of the Apostle (1 Thess. ii. 12). "Walk worthy of God who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory." The word "called" in a number of places is rendered "bidden," "bade," and "bid" in the sense of an invitation to a marriage or a feast. See Matt. xxii: 3, 4, 8, 9; Luke vii. 39; xiv. 7, 8, (twice) 9, 10, (twice) 12, 16 17, 24; etc.

Again W. E. says, "This (the Lord's prayer) was given to those who had believed that the kingdom had come, and that they were heirs of it but not in possession." It is strange how W. E. answers himself. He affirms here what I was trying to show in last paragraph but one, by the illustration of the heir apparent to the British crown. W. E. says, "they were heirs of it but not in possession." That is the exact truth. But he couples with this assertion that "the kingdom had come." This he attempted to support by the fact that the heirs had "received possession of the powers of the age or world to come, but only temporary possession," etc. Unless he means by this that they received the powers of the coming kingdom in the regal sense, how does he prove that the kingdom had come in any sense? The healing of diseases, or the casting out of demons, mighty works as they are, are by no means equivalent to the functions which properly belong to kingship. I again repeat that "the kingdom of God having come UPON them," in the casting out of demons by our Lord, indicates not the PRESENCE but the IMMINENCE of the kingdom.

Again W. E. in reference to Mark i. 14, "The time is fulfilled and the kingdom of God is at hand," says, "J. C. and others have assumed that the time for setting up the kingdom of God had arrived." I am not aware of having made such a statement, and W. E. makes no quotation. The special reference of "the time" here may or may not be difficult to determine, but I submit that it has not been shown to have any direct bearing on the question under consideration. When this is done I have no doubt the matter will be noticed by myself or some one else.

Some passages said to "set to one side the contention of J. C. on the one hand and of A. Campbell, on the other," such as that of the publicans and harlots going into the kingdom, and every man pressing into it, "have been treated by me in another article of the present series, to which I respectfully beg the attention of W. E. and the readers of THE RESTITUTION.

It Grows Brighter.

"I've traveled this road forty years, and it grows brighter all the way."

The experience of this aged Christian is not an exceptional one. Many can testify of the "shining light that shineth more and more."

"Brighter all the way." Rough and thorny may be the path, trials and temptations may abound, sorrows and disappointments often may be met, yet the way is not dark. Perchance for a little season a cloud may enfold: "the grief that must have way"—but the light soon breaks forth with a brilliancy unknown before, and the tried soul can say—"It is good that I have been afflicted;" the Lord takes away one gift to bestow a greater; "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

Thus it is the path grows brighter; through toil and reward, trial and victory, temptation and conquest, sorrow and joy, the Lord reveals himself to his children. The discipline of life he uses as a means to subdue the stubborn will—the nature so prone to go astray; yet he draws the child of his affection nearer to his own infinite heart of love, and then there is increasing light, for "with him is the fountain of light."

"Brighter all the way!" Oh, how bright as the earth grows dim! We seem almost to catch a glimpse of the glory beyond when the triumphant spirit wings its flight to the home where "the Lamb is the light thereof."

The London Christian of June 3rd says: "In the first sermon to his congregation after returning from the Holy Land, Dr. Thain Davidson said: 'The character and condition of the population are degraded beyond all that I had anticipated. On every side you see the curse and blight which appear to accompany Turkish rule and Mohammedan superstition. The Ottoman power is rottenness and imbecility. How could it be otherwise? Whilst the children of the Cross, by their industry and intelligence, have been adding knowledge to knowledge, discovery to discovery, improvement to improvement, the followers of the Crescent remain stationary, and stationary they will remain so long as they adhere to a creed which, in addition to the mass of absurdities it inculcates, tends more than any other to debase man as an intellectual being—the doctrine of fatalism alone being sufficient to paralyse all mental energy, and produce moral and social stagnation.'"

SECOND NOTICE!

AN APPEAL

—BY THE—

Board of Directors.

The Board of Directors of the Christian Publishing Association find, upon examination, that there is quite a financial embarrassment, caused by delinquencies, many of which are of long standing. They find further that there are a sufficient number of subscribers to THE RESTITUTION to make it entirely self-sustaining if all would pay up promptly; and while they are not blind to the fact of stringent times in money matters, and of the hard struggle of many devoted friends of THE RESTITUTION, they are nevertheless compelled, as "faithful stewards," to look to the interest of the Association, and adopt such means as are best calculated to improve its financial situation.

To this end they make the following urgent request,—

That Everyone Examine Carefully the Label on their Paper, Note the Time to which it is Paid, and Renew PROMPTLY.

Any mistake made in marking labels will be corrected willingly. Those who do not find it convenient to pay in full, pay what you can and forward the remainder as soon as possible. To those who are far in arrears especial attention to the above will avert the possibility of being dropped. We do not wish to be harsh, and hope all will accept the appeal kindly and act promptly; but THE RESTITUTION, like any other business, cannot live without support. The Board further requests that every friend of THE RESTITUTION, especially the ministry, put forth an extra effort in working for the paper.

Let us arouse, dear friends, and prove ourselves equal to the times in which we live; possibly it may be the test that is to prove our worthiness. O! let us be found among the "overcomers;" let us hold up THE RESTITUTION, which is carrying the "good news of the gospel of the kingdom of God" to so many lonely, aching hearts, and may we be found among that class represented by the "wise virgins" when our Savior comes.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first of January, 1886, and consequently is six months past due now. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June, "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1885, "6" means 1886, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Agt.

SOME communications that have been deferred will soon be placed before our readers.

WESTERN E. C. ANDRUS, of Forest, Ind., will be in Plymouth next Saturday, and will speak at Chapel Hall at 2:30 o'clock.

THE six kingdom parables, contained in the thirteenth chapter of Matthew, are treated in quite an original manner in a little work by A. C. Palmer, and published by I. C. Welcome, Yarmouth, Me. The author takes a very different view of the application of these illustrative similes, as spoken by our Lord, from the interpretation usually given. As the pamphlet has only just come to hand, we have not time nor space for a more complete notice. It is a treatise that will interest the reader whether agreeing with the author's conclusions or not. Price 25 cents. Address as above.

PAPAL ROME.

In the fall of 1870 the Pope was deprived of the last vestige of his temporal power and, consequently, holds no political place of supremacy among the powers that be, as a monarch to be recognized either by kingdoms or republics. Yet this dethroned dynasty assumes the right to make princes and establish them here in this vaunted republic. As we have very little to do with political matters, we will content ourself with placing certain papers before our readers in this issue of THE RESTITUTION, some of which are taken from journals of the day, and others from authors of deserved repute. The first extract is from the New York Observer, giving an account of the way a prince was made, and inaugurated into office, by a Papal Ablegate from Leo XIII, assisted by a Prelacy of Ecclesiastical dignitaries, with the subordinated and subservient help of the EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT of the GREAT REPUBLIC. The next short paper is from a writer to the New York Sun, who evidently has "a more level head" than the talented Editor of this journal gives him credit for. Branding the writer with being a "fool," and with telling "several whoppers," is a short way of disposing of a soldier's disgust which, in the main, is but too truthfully expressed in his terse arraignement of executive obsequiousness to a miserable despotism. The next papers are extracts from writers who see things as they are and were and express themselves accordingly. In connection with all these papers we ask our readers to re-peruse the article in our paper of last week entitled, "Ireland and Rome." The true purpose of making princes for these United States is there stated in defiant language, becoming an inquisitor of the Old Harlot Mother in her more palmy days. We shall probably supplement something more of the horrible history of Rome Papal in future numbers.

MAKING A ROMAN PRINCE.

Archbishop Gibbons was, on June 30, invested with the Cardinal's scarlet beretta in the Cathedral at Baltimore. The Cardinal was escorted from his residence to the Cathedral by a procession of the laity and clergy, monsignors, bishops, and arch-bishops, amid thousands of spectators. Archbishop Williams, of Boston, celebrated Pontifical High Mass, and Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, made the address. The Secretary of Monsignor Straniero, the Papal Ablegate, presented to Archbishop Kendrick the letter introducing the ablegate, and the addresses were made by Monsignor Straniero, Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Kendrick. At the close of the addresses, Monsignor Straniero took the beretta from the table where it had been guarded by the Noble Guard, Count Muccioli, and placed it on the High altar by the side of Archbishop Kendrick. Cardinal Gibbons then approached the altar, and kneeling, the beretta was placed on his head. He retired to the sacristy and was vested in the robes of a Cardinal. Returning, he gave the Benediction to those present, and the services closed. Among the prelates present were the Archbishops of Chicago, New Orleans, Milwaukee, Montreal, Toronto, New York, Cincinnati and Oregon, and the Bishops of Albany, Scranton, Peoria, Springfield, Dubuque, Fort Wayne, Pittsburgh, San Luis, Richmond, Charleston, Savannah, St. Augustine, Manchester, Ogdensburg, Brooklyn, Rochester, St. Paul, Cleveland, Mobile, Natchez, Columbus, Newark, Little Rock, Wheeling, Covington and other dioceses. Secretary Lamar represented the Cabinet at the ceremony, President Cleveland sent a personal letter congratulating the Cardinal upon his elevation to the cardinalate. A reception was given by Miss Emily Harper in the evening at her residence, opposite the Cathedral, to Cardinal Gibbons and the visiting prelates, which was largely attended. While the reception was in progress the Cardinal was serenaded by the Marine Band from Washington. There was a grand parade of the Catholic societies, with probably six thousand men in line, and several of the Catholic institutions were illuminate in honor of the occasion.

ANSWER NOT A FOOL ACCORDING TO HIS FOLLY.

To the Editor of the Sun.—Sir: A reader of the Sun for twenty years, I am profoundly disgusted with the late constant truckling to the foreign element and the Papal temporal power. A soldier myself in the late war, my ancestors fought at Lundy's Lane, at Trenton, and Cowpens, and at Fort Duquesne, but I stand less chance of getting a political favor than any foreigner landed within five years. I am ready for a native American party, and believe it is coming.

Always a Democrat, I am disgusted to see Secretary Whitney place a United States revenue cutter at the disposal of the Papal ablegate and the President sending his Marine Band to serenade the Cardinal Prince of the States of the Church, thus acknowledging the temporal power of the Pope.

I am equally disgusted to see the Sun falsely eulogizing Catholic priests at the expense of Protestants, when our streets are filled with Catholic rum holes, or public institutions with Catholic paupers, our prisons with Catholic criminals, our docks on Sundays with Catholic Sunday school children, and our street corners with drunken Catholic church members, and when the Sun can find any week from twenty to forty sleek priests summering at Saratoga hotels. Yet you toady to the Catholic vote and abuse Protestants—you toady to home rule for Ireland and dare not advocate home rule for America.

In a word, the Sun would not dare to print and comment on this for a thousand dollars a line.—A true Son of America.

Well, why not? Our correspondent states what is not so—in fact, he tells several whoppers—but let him be heard for what he is worth.

CONTRASTS. THE PAPACY THEN AND NOW.

The extent and character of Papal dominion, during the dark ages, is, in our days, little realized. It is not easy, gazing on the rotten stump of an old oak, to picture to one's self what the tree was in the days of its glorious youth, and of its mighty maturity; how its immense branches shot out on every side, overshadowing a thousand lower growths; how the tempests attacked it in vain, and the hurricanes only rooted it more firmly in the soil. How beautiful it looked in its light green robe in spring; how magnificent in its ruddy autumnal brown; how generation after generation of birds sheltered amid its branches, and wild boars fed upon its acorns. The centuries that have rolled over the tree have left little trace of what it was, and yet the very size of the stump tells the tale of its bygone might and glory.

It is just so with the power of the Roman Pontiffs. The world can smile now at the puerility of the proud and preposterous pretensions, of the poor old man, who occupies the chair of St. Peter, in his Vatican prison in Rome. It listens to his loud claim to infallibility with a laugh of contempt, and to his fierce anathemas on science and literature, and social and religious liberty, with the calm and compassionate scorn, with which the wanderings of a lunatic are regarded. But of yore it was quite a different thing. Every utterance of the tiara-crowned monarch was heard with awe, every command was implicitly obeyed. Men trembled under his curse, and gloried in his benediction, as if they had been those of the Deity. The thunders of his interdicts shook the nations, and the fires of his excommunications spread death and destruction abroad. The imperial edicts of the Emperors Justinian and Phocas gave the Popes of Rome a legal power in all religious matters; and very early the various Gothic princes of Western Christendom showed a disposition to yield submission to the Roman Pontiff, as children to a father, or inferiors to a superior. Already, in the eighth century, Gregory II. boasted to the Greek Emperor, "all the kings of the west reverence the Pope as a God on earth," and facts fully justified the assertion. Pekin, for example, when aspiring to the crown of France, prayed the Pope to authorise his usurpation; and as soon as he had done so, the Franks, and indeed the whole Western World, recognized his title. Even the great Emperor Charlemagne, was willing to receive from the Roman Pontiff his crown and dominion. "The Lord John, apostolic and universal Pope," says the Council of Pavia, "hath at Rome elected, and anointed with the holy oil, Charlemagne, as Emperor." The western kings of Europe accepted the position of subserviendy to the Sovereign Pontiff, by admitting into their coronation oaths a promise "to be faithful and submissive to the Popes, and the Roman Church."—H. Grattan Guinness, in Approaching End of the Age.

PEN PICTURE OF THE PAPACY.

Before the establishment of Christ's kingdom, popery must be entirely destroyed. The kingdom of Christ and that of Antichrist cannot be dominant on this earth at the same time. The papacy has been termed Satan's masterpiece,* and the Pope, Satan's Melchisedec; and some have considered that the whole system of popery is an infernal mimic or rather anticipation of that kingdom Christ is to set up in the world; something of which Satan might learn from the word of God; and some were foolish enough to prophesy in the days of Constantine that the glorious era described, Rev. xxi., was about to be introduced, when, alas! the building of Mystical Babylon was going rapidly on. It is impossible to declare the whole truth concerning this horrible delusion, which is alike opposed to reason and revelation, to civil and religious liberty, to the interests of man for eternity, and to his happiness in time; it is a "strong delusion," and "a mystery of iniquity;" and it is a most astounding fact, which is a proof of the power of the devil, and the wickedness and folly of man, that Satan should be able to palm such a system upon the world under the name of Christianity. The characteristics of Christianity are knowledge, holiness, and love; but the characteristics of popery are ignorance, sin and cruelty; it is a religion of pomp, of darkness, and of blood. Well might John "wonder with great admiration," Rev. xvii. 6; as Mr. Fry observes, wonderful indeed must it have appeared in the eye of John, that the apostate church should one day possess a sovereign state, the capital of the Roman empire, and should from the seven hills deal out her spiritual corruptions to intoxicate and subdue the same world that the legions of the imperial city had conquered by the sword. But now we must shut our eyes indeed if we refuse to recognize in this emblem of "the woman sitting on the scarlet beast," the vaunted apostolic See of Rome. "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots," as the churches in the Roman Catholic communion remarkably express themselves when they speak of the Roman church—"Rome Mother and Mistress."

The papacy did not spring into being and maturity at once; it was slowly matured until it reached a height of despotic power unequalled. It is not our province at any length to trace its growth, or rehearse its deeds of blood. The professing church was judaised, and philosophised, before the time of Constantine, and then it became paganized, and shortly after Satanized. This mystery of iniquity worked in the apostles' days, and during the second and third centuries every kind of heresy was promulgated, ceremonies and forms were introduced, and spirituality displaced by superstition. The materials for popery were thus prepared, and by the union of the church with the Roman State, its foundation was openly laid, and the building rapidly carried on. An orator at Constantinople in the reign of Jovian, fifty years after the accession of Constantine to the Roman purple, says, "In the recent changes (he is adverting to Julian, the Apostate) both religions, Pagan and Christian, have been alternately disgraced by the seeming acquisition of worthless proselytes of those votaries of the reigning purple, who could pass without a reason and without a blush, from the church to the temple, and from the altars of Jupiter to the sacred table of the Christians." Surely such religionists as these must be just such tools as Satan wished for. Thus did the enemy of man mould the professing church of Christ until it exhibited his own image, and wrought the desires of his cruel and malicious heart.

Cursed system, bitter root of every crime,
Of sin the ugliest, foulest incarnation:
The darkest blood-spot on the face of time,
Sure source of ruin unto many a nation;
The bane of peace, the hinderer of salvation,
The reverser of every tender tie,
Fountain of broken hearts—true imitation
Of Satan's regal power and dignity.
—John Cox on the Coming and Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

*Popery was the masterpiece of Satan. I believe him utterly incapable of another such contrivance. It was a systematic and infallible plan for forming a well-laid design to render Christianity contemptible, by the abuse of its principles and its institutions. It was formed to overwhelm, to enchant, to sit as the great whore making the earth drunk with her fornication.—Cecil's Remains.

REPORT.

Editor Restitution:

You will remember that I made an appeal in your columns a little over a week ago in behalf of an aged brother and sister who are so well known to you. You and other dear ones who have contributed to this good cause will be glad to know that I have been able to send him by to-day's mail a check for fifty dollars. I am sure that I shall receive more, for there are other loyal hearts whose remittances I am expecting in every mail, but wishing them to have the benefit of it as soon as possible, I hastened to forward the amount already accumulated. It will be to them not only a temporal and practical benefit, but a loving band of sympathy between them and the Christian hearts who have so gladly contributed in the hour of need. And what is a thousand times dearer and sweeter than all the rest, it will be to them a token of remembrance from him who notes the fall of the sparrow and hears the cry of his children in their night time of trial. It will be a blessed assurance of the reality of the care of him who has promised that he will never forsake the trusting heart that leans upon his promise.

It has been my privilege to read and answer eighteen letters, containing money and Christian love for these dear friends, and as I wrote the brother, I wish I could send to him all the kindly words that came with the money. One letter I could not answer, having no address. Will "A Sister in the Faith," at Dixon, Ill., accept the assurance that her kind letter came duly to hand and her dollar forwarded to its destination.

Time flies, and soon the night of trial will give way to the morning of rest; soon the day star will arise in the darkness, and the sun of righteousness with healing in his wings. But in the meantime poverty and pain, trial and temptation, are the heritage of the church. The burning cross is still pressed upon breaking hearts, until they are healed by the kindly hand of death, the great consoler. Suffering is the chosen crucible wherein God's jewels shall be burnished. If the Great Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering, surely the humblest follower of his blood-stained cross should not shrink from the sacrificial touch of pain; sublime patience and faith and hope are born in the darkest vallies of humility and grief. Let us then extend to each other through our pilgrimage the tender hand clasp of sympathy and the practical tokens of Christian love.

"Gold and silver, like the sands,
Will keep slipping through our hands,
But the loving word and deed
To another in its need,
They will outforgotten be,
They will live eternally,
'Mid the hopings and the fears,
And the restlessness of years,
We repeat this promise o'er,
We believe it more and more,
Bread upon the waters cast
Shall be gathered at the last."

A VISIT AT DIXON ILLINOIS.

On Monday, July 12, I took the 8:30 a. m. train for Dixon, for the purpose of administering baptism to Mr. Henry Drew, who was exceedingly anxious to unite himself to the blessed Redeemer in the Lord's own appointed way. His anxiety was no doubt greatly increased from the fact that he was prostrated upon a bed of sickness, from which there was no human probability that he would ever rise.

Arrived at Dixon at 12 o'clock, went to Bro. John Anderson's, and after dinner we both went to the residence of Mr. Drew, for the purpose of seeing him and make arrangements for the baptism. We found him a great sufferer, he could not stand upon his feet, nor bear handling of his flesh.

It was arranged that baptism would be administered after ten. A tin-lined box was procured and placed by the side of his bed, in which warm water was put.

At about 8:30 p. m., quite a number of friends having gathered, and all things being ready, a blanket was placed under the suffering candidate and seven men taking hold of the blanket gently lowered him beneath the water.

"With thee into thy watery tomb,
Lord 'tis our glory to descend;
'Tis wondrous grace that gives us room,
To be interred by such a friend."

He was then gently placed upon his bed, without harm or pain being caused by the operation. He now greatly rejoices in the blessed hope of meeting Jesus in his blessed kingdom free from sickness, sorrow and pain.

At the conclusion of this ceremony was glad to hear that others desired to be buried with their Lord in baptism, and was requested to remain over and administer it. So, before we left it was arranged that we all meet again at two o'clock in the afternoon the next day at Bro. Anderson's house, and go from there to the Rock River.

At two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon a good company met as appointed, and went to the banks of the Rock River and there baptised Mr. Willie Drew, Mrs. Rossiter, and Mrs. Lillie Boughton, into the name of our dear Redeemer.

These are all young people, intelligent, and well educated, and are capable of doing good service for the Master. May they press forward with vigor for the time is short.

After baptism a few of us went to see our sick brother and administer the communion in memory of Jesus who had done so much for us.

In the evening quite a company met at Bro. Julius Anderson's and the evening was spent in social conversation on the subject of the "Signs of the Times."

May the Lord bless the faithful at Dixon, and preserve them unto his heavenly kingdom. Yours in Christ.

Miscellaneous.

CENTENARIANS.—Mrs. Betsy Moody died at Cape Elizabeth, Maine, July 5, at the alleged age of one hundred and six years and six months.

A special to a Cincinnati paper says, that at New Holland, O., July 6, Mrs. Arnold was celebrating the one hundred and ninth anniversary of her birth. It adds that she has two sisters living, one aged 106, the other 112.

Captain Samuel Packard, the oldest resident of Malden, Mass., died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. William Richardson, in Malden, July 8, at the age of one hundred years, five months, and four days. He was the oldest person in Middlesex county, and probably in the State.

OVER ONE HUNDRED.—John Newman, aged 117, died at his home in Sevier county, Tenn., the last week in June. Newman was never more than ten miles from the place where he was born, and was one of the first white children born in Tennessee.

The Eastern question is coming to the front again. Russia, as usual, has made the first move in the formal announcement that Batoum is no longer a free port. The Russians are also claiming Khamiat, a town on the Afghan frontier, which has been an Afghan possession for thirty-five years. Batoum is a city on the southern coast of the Black Sea, an important military station, and railroad centre for Central Asia. In the Treaty of Berlin it was expressly declared that Batoum should remain open as a free port to all nations. Its closing at this time can only be considered as a wilful violation of treaty law. Other events of recent occurrence indicate a renewal of Russian aggressions on Turkish territory. Russian troops are moving in Bessarabia, and the Czar's agents are said to be "going over into" Macedonia. Recent utterances of the Czar himself, noted in these columns, evince designs of warlike character. Russia is evidently uneasy over prolonged peace, and must do something to occupy her armies, and sustain her fighting reputation.

The renewal of the cholera epidemic in Southern Europe has become sufficiently marked to cause general alarm. The cholera seems to have lingered all winter long in parts of France and Spain, though the number of deaths caused by it were comparatively few. Since the warm weather began, the epidemic has been spreading and increasing in virulence until at Brindisi, Italy, the daily average of deaths has run up as high as eighty-eight. The disease has appeared at Lattaro, Trieste and other cities and towns in the region of the Adriatic, and has created a panic in the province of Croatia. The epidemic has also struck the Japan Islands, and is said to be rapidly spreading in the country. Under the circumstances it behooves the health authorities of our seaboard cities to adopt every possible precaution against the introduction of the disease.

Details of the great volcanic eruptions in New Zealand last month have come to hand this week. The eruptions are said to have been the most destructive in the world's history. Earthquakes, accompanying the eruptions, did much damage. The entire country over an extent of 120 miles was a mass of flame and hot crumbling soil, which in places rose 4,000 feet high. Numerous small native villages were totally destroyed. Wairoa was covered to the depth of ten feet with dust and ashes. Rahtomahana was completely engulfed, as were also some other small villages. Twenty-one persons are known to have lost their lives, among whom were several English residents. The loss of cattle starved to death from the destruction of pasture by dust is very great, and great distress exists throughout all the Auckland Lake district. One old Maori chief at Retarua was dug out alive, it is said, after having been buried in ashes 104 hours.

The law and enlightened public sentiment have driven the lottery and lottery advertisements out of nearly every place in this country except the columns of the Roman Catholic newspapers. We know of only one paper in New York City which gives up its space to advertisements of these infamous institutions, and that paper is the Freeman's Journal, one of the chief organs of Roman Catholicism in the United States. The Journal of June 26 devotes a column to the prize drawings of a Southern lottery company with the names and addresses of the fortunate ticket holders. Of like character are the merits of certain brands of "pale ale" and "fine whiskey." The editor and proprietor of this highly moral religious paper was one of the committee that went down New York Bay to meet the Papal delegation having in charge the beretta of Cardinal Gibbons. It might be well to mention here that a bill has been introduced in Congress to exclude from the mails, papers containing lottery advertisements. If this bill should become law it would be a serious blow to the lottery companies and the Freeman's Journal.—N. Y. Observer.

"HE CARETH FOR YOU."

Yes, leave it to Him:
The lilies all do,
And they grow—
They grow in the rain
And they grow in the dew—
Yes, they grow:
They grow in the darkness, all hid in the night—
They grow in the sunshine, revealed by the light—
Still they grow.

They ask not your planting,
They need not your care,
As they grow—
Dropped down in the valley,
Sweet'ning the air—
There they grow:
They grow in their beauty, arrayed in pure white—
They grow clothed in glory by heaven's own light—
Serenely grow.

The grasses are clothed
And the ravens are fed
From His store;
But you who are loved,
And guarded, and led,
How much more
Will He clothe you, feed you, and give you his care!
Then leave it with Him, he is everywhere.
Ample store.

Yes, leave it with Him,
'Tis more dear to his heart
You will know,
Than the lilies in bloom,
Or the fir. ers that start
'Neath the snow—
Whatever the need, if you seek it in prayer,
You can leave it with Him—for you are his care,
You, you know.

PROPHETIC PROBLEMS.

The Apocalypse, its Date, Contents and Design. Preliminary Problems. 1. Date of the Apocalypse? 2. Place where? 3. Language, how interpreted? 4. Great Problems of the Book? 5. Objections answered. Date of the Revelations.

Dr. Lardner, in his "Credibility of the Christian Scriptures," having made an exhaustive examination of the problem of dates, says that the Revelations were given by a message from God to John, A. D., 96, Isle of Patmos, where he was banished by Domitian, the Roman emperor. This being true, the Protestants (such as hold to the doctrines of the Universalists) have no proof that the events have anything to do with the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, A. D. 70. 2. The place (Patmos) we have given. 3. The language is principally symbolic, and the proper interpretation will be found in the book itself, or in some other parts of the Bible, for it is strictly true that every tropical word (a word used out of its literal, ordinary meaning) must, somewhere in the Scriptures, be interpreted, in order to make it a part of the Divine Revelation. This is quite evident.

4. The great problem of the Book, that we propose to discuss and for which we propose to work out an affirmative solution, may be variously stated as follow, 1. The events of the world's church-history for the last eighteen centuries have shaped themselves into the form of the Apocalyptic visions as truly and perfectly as the molten fluid shape itself into its own proper mould. 2. In other words, the numbers and characters of the historic agents of the eighteen centuries, now closing, shape themselves to the Apocalyptic agents and their characters as truly and perfectly as the molten fluid to its mould, or, in other words, the Apocalyptic visions are mirror reflections of the last eighteen centuries. They fit each other as the ball its mould; or, the Apocalypse is a chart or map of church history; it allows us to see in advance the events of eighteen centuries. The Apocalypse is the pattern (like that seen by Moses in the Mount) to be followed by the world's church history for the last eighteen centuries. These illustrations will furnish a full text of the problem about to be discussed. Before entering upon its investigation, it will be well to answer the position of the Futurists. We do this the more readily as it fully antagonizes the position above stated; for, if the agents of the Apocalypse are all in the future, never yet been actors on the stage, and the book leaves the world, with all its persecutions, sins and woes, an utter, unsolved mystery.

Futurists, passing over the Continuation, make the book a prophetic picture of events confined exclusively to the age of judgment. Their theory is founded upon an error of translation and construction of the original of which is as follows: [illegible] The futurists translate it "I was in spirit in the day of the Lord." King James' Version says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." The Authorized and Revised Versions agree, and we have but the two renderings of the original Greek text. Which translation is correct? The ordinary reader may not notice any special [illegible], as the two renderings. One says "in the day of the Lord," the other, "on the Lord's day." What shades of variation are there between "Day of the Lord," and "Lord's day"? The Futurists say that "day of the Lord" here signifies the day of judgment, which, in John's day, was eighteen centuries in the future; and that the holy seer was, in vision, carried forward into the judgment age and saw and described events belonging to that age and onward, passing over, and, as it were, ignoring the trials and bloody persecutions of the Bride, through the Gentile times, during the absence of her Lord in a "Far Country."

The expression, "Lord's day," means the Christian Sabbath, so called because it was the day of the Lord's resurrection, a name given to that day even in the apostolic age. Ignatius in A. D. 108, called it the Lord's day to distinguish it from the seventh, which interpretation has the sanction of the original Greek text? This question we now propose to answer by the divine record, requesting the reader to render his unprejudiced judgment on the face of the testimony.

We have in our Authorized Version two passages where the original Greek word κυριακος is translated Lord's (possessive case), Rev. i. 10, and 1 Cor. xi. 20, and these are the only places where the word κυριακος (adjective) is found. 1 Cor. xi. 20 reads (this) is not to eat the Lord's supper (ουκ εστι κυριακον δειπνον φαγειν.) In Rev. i. 10, we have, Εγενομην εν πνευματι εν τη κυριακη ημερα. I was in the spirit on the Lord's day. Notice the order of the Greek texts. Each has the same order: kuriaki (fem.) first, followed by deipnon and hemera, Lord's supper, Lord's day, or the Lord's resurrection day.

Let us now examine the Greek texts of some of the passages where the future day of judgment is the topic. Matt. xi. 22, 24; and xii. 36, εν ημερα κρισεως, in the day of judgment. The word, day, comes first in each, and they have the same order. The like expression occurs in Mark vi. 11, with the same collocation. In 1 Cor. i. 8, is the following, εν τη ημερα του κυριου ημων Ιησου χριστου, in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. 2 Cor. i. 14, reads, εν τη ημερα του κυριου Ιησου, in the day of the Lord Jesus. Phil. i. 6, ημερας Ιησου χριστου; vs. 10, εις ημεραν χριστου, until and in the day of Jesus Christ; the word day comes first; as also in ch. ii. 16, εις ημεραν χριστου, in the day of Christ. 1 Thess. v. 2, η ημερα κυριου ως κλεπτης εν νυκτι, the day of the Lord....as a thief in the night. The same order is followed here also. 2 Thess. ii. 2, η ημερα του χριστου, the day of Christ. 2 Peter iii. 7, εις ημεραν κρισεως, against the day of judgment; vs. 10, ηξει δε η ημερα κυριου ως κλεπτης εν νυκτι, but the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night. 1 Jno. iv. 17, εν τη ημερα της κρισεως, in the day of judgment. From the passages the reader will be able to see that when the day of judgment is the theme, the apostles, Paul, Peter and John use similar language and expressed in the same order as if that day had, with them, a common appellation. Paul and John only have used the κυριακος. Paul says, κυριακον δειπνον, Lord's supper, and John, κυριακη ημερα, Lord's day. Such a rendering the original forces us to give it. The notion that John, in vision, was carried forward to the judgment has no authority from Rev. i. 10. We shall now attempt to demonstrate that the visions of the book do not teach any such idea.

4. Great problem of the Apocalypse. Mirror views of the church of the Christian era. We propose to establish this position from the plan and design of the book. (a) Its plan is that of scenic visions. (b) Its design is that of a mariner's chart, of special use during the voyage, and not simply at or near its close, to show every danger of the voyage, whether at the beginning, middle or terminus of the tempestuous sea passage. In our provinde to outline the chart delineated by the angel to the apostle, and to show the import of each vision. Our remarks will be very brief, directing the reader to "The Coming Age" for a full and extended discussion of these problems.

I. The messages to the seven churches will claim our first attention.

II. The book of seven seals will then be taken up and discussed.

III. The seven trumpets will be examined as to sequence and time.

IV. The vials will be discussed as to time and special import.

V. The special characters of the book, civil and religious, will come under review.

These points will be discussed to ascertain what periods of history they cover. In this order we design to follow the Ezekiel of the New Testament.

1. The seven churches—their messages. That these seven churches then existed in Asia, at the time the revelation was given, is distinctly declared: "John to the seven churches which are (not shall be) in Asia." Rev. i. 4. That they had been established for some years is clear from their numerous evil practices and spectacles. They were, therefore, literal congregations, having officers and ministers (angels), such as could visit John in his lonely banishment, administer to his wants and carry messages to the churches. So far as it concerns name, locality and character, the messages were letters of admonition and instruction, and not prophetic. The prophetic element is their declared destinies. So far our views are fully established by the messages. Bishop Meds omits to notice these seven epistles to the churches, and begins with the sealed roll. They form no part of John's scenic visions. Have these churches a tropical meaning? This question, by many, is given an affirmative answer, that these seven churches represent seven phases or states of the church. (a) We are forced to say that they are not symbolic churches, since churches do not symbolize churches, they being of the same class. A woman may symbolize a church, since they belong to different classes, but by the laws of symbols a church cannot symbolize a church. Neither are they typical of seven stages of the church. Any one familiar with Ecclesiastical History can point out at least twice seven phases, and, in various parts of the world, can discern these features in existence at the same time. We have, in the Apocalypse, the true and apostate churches symbolized by cities (Jerusalem and Babylon), and by temples, the sun-clad woman and the harlot. We view the seven epistles, though sent to real churches and given for their special benefit, as being full of wise and useful instruction for the people of God in every century of the Christian era. Like the epistles written by Paul, Peter, James and John, they abound in reproof and comfort. That the seven churches are neither symbolic nor typical is evident from the fact that there is no interpretation or explanation of the language. Types and figures must be interpreted to make them a part of Revelation. Take the symbols of Daniel or of the Apocalypse as illustrations. The symbols are defined as to their meaning. So have we symbols of these churches, defining them to be churches and not seven phases of the one church. John sees seven golden candlesticks, and in the midst of the seven candlesticks (one) like unto the Son of man (Jesus, the Messiah). He had in his right hand seven stars. The stars and candlesticks are interpreted, "The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches; and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches." i. 12, 13, 20. The Christian church, the chaste virgin bride espoused) has its distinct symbols. As a community it is a city [Jerusalem]. As an organized congregation of believers, it is the sun-clad woman. The apostate church has its symbols also. As a community it is a city (Babylon), not seven cities. As an organized congregation of professed believers it is a woman, a harlot, persecuting the sun-clad woman. So clear and distinct are these symbols, and so fully are they interpreted that nothing is wanting in the book's prophetic church history. Another lesson is also very distinctly taught. The church, the chaste virgin, and betrothed spouse of Christ, is not mixed up with the apostate church, the harlot, the agent of persecution. These symbols correspond with facts of church history; nothing more is required in this prophetic chart.

Many valuable lessons are taught us in these seven letters to the churches. 1. From the latter to the church at Ephesus we learn the character of the churches, her virtues, works, labor, patience, haters of evil, testers of false apostles; also its imperfections: the church had left its first love, and though haters of the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, still, repentance and return were required. 2. Similar lessons, in spirit at least, are taught in the other epistles, also its imperfections: the church had left its first love, and though haters of the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, still, repentance and return were required. 3. Similar lessons, in spirit at least, are taught in the other epistles; Pergamos had its special trials which developed their virtues and vices. The location was unfortunate, producing apostates. 4. Similar lessons are taught in the epistle to the church at Thyatira. 5. The latter addressed to the church at Sardis is full of severe reproof. Their actions had been very faulty, and their destiny was to be severe. 6. The church at Philadelphia had kept the word of his [Christ's] patience; the church was highly commended. 7. The church at Smyrna was in tribulation. They were commanded to be faithful unto death. 7. The church at Laodicea was neither cold nor hot, a character hated by God.

It is worthy of special note that the cities in which these churches were located shared in their then future, lasting kingdom, the fifth "Universal Monarchy." The resolution that was offered in a full meeting of the conference against the "Josephite" error, was passed without a dissenting voice.

Yours, etc. E. Hott.

CURRENT HISTORY.

BULGARIA AND EUROPE.

The Conference of Constantinople called to settle the Bulgarian question broke up last December without accomplishing anything. The object of this Conference was to induce the Turks to send an army into Eastern Rumelia to restore the status quo ante. This plan, devised and supported by the Empires, under the lead of Russia, was resolutely opposed by England, and did not please the Sultan.

At the end an attempt was made to act without England, and to force the Turks to take action. It failed ignominiously; chiefly through the unexpected courage and wisdom of the Bulgarian authorities at Philippopolis.

Prince Alexander then entered into direct negotiation with the Sultan, and a settlement was soon agreed upon between them.

It was agreed, 1st. That Prince Alexander should be appointed Governor-General of Eastern Roumelia for life.

2. That certain Turkish villages, with 30,000 inhabitants, should be detached from Eastern Roumelia and given back to Turkey.

3. That, in case of any attack upon Bulgaria, Turkish troops should aid the Bulgarians, under the command of the Prince. If European-Turkey was attacked Bulgarian troops should aid the Turks.

4. That a commission of Turks and Bulgarians should revise the Organic Statute of Eastern Roumelia and adapt it to the new circumstances, Prince Alexander having full powers until this work was done.

It was understood that, under this arrangement, the Union would be practically complete.

During these negotiations Russia took no action at Constantinople, but her agents in Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia exerted themselves to create discontent and disturbance. They have continued to do so ever since.

After the completion of this arrangement, Russia notified the Powers that her respect for the Treaty of Berlin would not allow her to tolerate any arrangement which was not formally sanctioned by the Great Powers.

Just at this time there was, unhappily for Bulgaria, a change of Ministry in England and a change of Ambassadors at Constantinople. The policy of the Government was unchanged; but the new men could not at once take up all the tangled threads of this negotiation, and they lost their lead. Russia gained it.

Long and complicated negotiations followed, involving all the Powers concerned. These were still further complicated by the determination of Servia not to sign a peace with Bulgaria, and by the warlike attitude of Greece. The Powers finally compelled the Servians to make peace and, with the Bulgarians, to disband their armies.

The next step was to revise the arrangement made between Prince Alexander and the Sultan in such a way that it would be agreeable to Russia, it being well understood that no other Power objected to this arrangement, but that nothing would satisfy Russia, unless it was so arranged as to give her an opportunity to overthrow Prince Alexander. To bring about such an arrangement the Greeks were encouraged by various manœuvers to hold out against the remonstrances of the Powers.

Last week the Conference met again, and in spite of the protest of Prince Alexander, imposed upon him and the Turks a settlement which was satisfactory to neither of them.

Article 1st of the original convention is modified so as to omit the name of Prince Alexander, and make the Prince of Bulgaria Governor-General of Eastern Roumelia for five years.

Article 2d remains unchanged.

Article 3d is struck out altogether.

Article 4th requires that the changes made in the Organic Statute be submitted to a European Conference for its approval.

This arrangement has been accepted, with certain reservations, by Prince Alexander. He could do nothing else under the circumstances, and in one or two respects the arrangement is not unsatisfactory. It legalized the revolution of last September, and formally puts an end to the status quo ante. It leaves the Turks and Bulgarians on good terms. It commits the government of Eastern Roumelia unreservedly into the hands of Prince Alexander, until the time when the modifications of the Organic Statute are agreed upon. Four months is the time mentioned for the work of the Commission; but it may be a much longer time.

On the other hand, the decision of the Conference leaves the door open for Russia to continue her revolutionary propaganda in the country, to use money and influence to overthrow Prince Alexander. It enables her to tell the Bulgarians that she will never consent to a complete union unless they drive out the enemy of the Czar and throw themselves into the arms of Russia; that they will have no peace until they do this.

It cannot be denied that the Russians are having some success in this mission of brotherly love. They have formed a pro-Russian party, under the lead of M. Zankoff, and there are many who are not openly of this party who would not object to a Russian occupation, and who do not see in this any danger of the loss of their liberty. But, so far as I can judge, the intelligence of the country is almost all on the side of the Prince and enthusiastically loyal. The Bulgarians have no desire to be on unfriendly terms with Russia. They are grateful for what Russia did for them in the Russo-Turkish war, and would be glad of her sympathy. It should never be forgotten that the present conflict did not begin with the Bulgarians, but with the Russians. In their opposition to Russia, they are simply standing upon the defensive. Neither they nor their Prince have done anything to injure Russia; but the Czar has openly and violently attacked them, and used all his influence to prevent the realization of their hopes, and the development of their country. He has been more hostile than the Sultan.

If Russia, as she professes, really desires the union and prosperity of the Bulgarian people, she must, in the end, change her policy. If she does not, nothing remains for the Bulgarians but to defend themselves as best they can. Their case is not so hopeless as might at first appear. There are other Powers besides Russia in Europe, and Russia is not likely to gain influence by the changes which will follow the death of the Emperor of Germany.

The Russian papers have demanded a Russian military occupation of Bulgaria, but there seems to be no present danger of it, so long as the Bulgarians keep the peace. It could not be done without danger of war with Turkey and Austria.

If the Greek question is settled, there is no reason why we should not anticipate at least one more year of peace in Europe. If war begins in earnest between Turkey and Greece, no one can say where or when it will end.—George Washburn, D. D. President of Robert College, Constantinople, in Independent.

"There Shall be no Pain There."

This promise is one of the golden clusters that grow on that vine planted for the healing of the nations—the Bible! How blessed a promise of the life that is to come is this one, those only can know who have walked long and repeatedly under the shadows of weariness and suffering.

"No pain there," to struggle with, and endure; no burdens to lay upon the eager spirit, which the weak frame cannot sustain, no work under which heart and strength fail, and which is at last laid mournfully aside; no long hours of fever and restlessness; no overtasked brain and nerves in the homestead of those whom God shall number as his Jewels.

So be comforted, ye that mourn! Green and shining rise the banks beyond the dark valley, and sweet healing is in the winds that blow off from the meadows, freighted with blossoms fairer than the roses and lilies of earth!

Take, through the pilgrimage, this promise—let it be a new incentive, and strength, and comfort to you—"There shall be no pain there."

The eminent explorers who are working for the Palestine Exploration Fund in Jerusalem, are, it is understood, on the eve of most important discoveries. It is well known, writes the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, that there are three walls of Jerusalem, of which the first is attributed to the time of David, and the second to that of Nehemiah, while the third was much later, and not more than an unimportant outwork. In the days of Christ, the second was to all intents and purposes the city wall. Portions of a wall have lately been uncovered which, on account of its characteristic old Jewish workmanship, experts aver is beyond all doubt the second wall. Now this seems to travel in such a direction that the Holy Sepulchre would be included in its ambit. If further excavations should prove this conjecture to be true, it would be shown to demonstration that the so-called "holy places" cannot be what they are said to be, for it is certain that the Sepulchre must have been outside the walls.

ALDRICH.—Fell asleep in Jesus, the Life Giver, at Raisin, Lenawee Co., Michigan, June 26, 1886, Sister Eunice Aldrich, wife of Charles Aldrich.

Her death was caused by cancers on the liver. She was a great sufferer for about two or three months and then fell asleep in Jesus. For many years she has been looking for the Lord's return and the establishment of his kingdom on the earth, and to reward his saints with eternal life. And this hope cheered and comforted her in her last moments. She was a half-sister of Levy H. Chase, well known throughout the State of Michigan and somewhat known in other States for his zeal in presenting the gospel of the kingdom of God, and aunt of L. O. Chase, who is pastor of the church of which she was a member at her death. In her death the church loses a valuable member and one who was always found at her post if she could well get there. The husband looses a kind wife and an affectionate companion, one who stood side by side with him in all the trials of life. Children she had none to leave behind, but a large number of relatives by whom she will be greatly missed. But we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we believe that Jesus died and rose again and all them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. We believe she is asleep in Jesus and will come forth in the morning of the resurrection when Christ comes to be glorified in his saints and admired by all them that believe. A large concourse of people was addressed by the writer from St. John xiii. 3, setting forth the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the dead and the rewarding of the righteous with eternal life. May God bless the mourners and keep them to his kingdom is my prayer.

He Knows.

He knows the bitter, weary way,
The endless stirring, day by day,
The souls that weep, the souls that pray.
He knows!

He knows how hard it fight hath been,
The clouds that come our lives between,
The wound the world hath seen.
He knows!

He knows when faint and worn we drink;
How deep the pain, how near the brink
Of dark despair we pause and shrink.
He knows!

He knows! O heart, take up thy cross,
And know earth's treasures are but dross,
And he will prove as gain our loss.
He knows!

A CONVERTED CATHOLIC.

To his Eminence, Monsignour Gibbons, Cardinal of New York:

As you are the representative of the pope in the United States, it is to your eminence that I must address the solemn document of my renunciation from the church of Rome.

Born in Kentucky, of wealthy and influential Protestant parents, I was persuaded to become a Roman Catholic, by a deceitful Roman Catholic governess, who, though pledged never to interfere with my religion, perfidiously spent the greater part of her time and wile in filling my young intelligence with the doctrines of popery.

When my dear father and mother began to suspect that they had kept and nursed a viper in their house, who had inoculated the poison of Romanism in the veins of their darling child, they tried to show me my error; but it was too late. I respectfully but firmly told them that I was a Roman Catholic—that I had been (secretly) baptised by a priest of Rome, and that I would live and die a Roman Catholic. More than that, I told them that I intended to be a nun.

No words can express the distress of my aged and loving parents. They died soon after broken-hearted, after having disinherited me from that portion of the fortune which should have been mine.

But I so sincerely believed that I was to have a throne in heaven and an eternal crown of glory after death if I were a faithful child of the church of Rome, that I did not care in the least for the loss of my earthly fortune.

I entered the nunnery of the Sisters of Providence, Terre Haute, to prepare myself to become a nun. But it was there that my merciful God had prepared the antidote to prevent me perishing at the feet of the idols of Rome, far away from the regions of light, truth and life, inhabited by the followers of the Lamb.

I was not long under the training of the sisters of that nunnery before I began to suspect that there was nothing but lies and deception behind the highly colored and so well white washed walls of those monachal institutions. It became more evident to me every day that their vow of poverty was only a mask to become rich, that their vow of celibacy was a snare to entice accomplished young ladies into a life which my pen refuses to write, that the people would not leave a stone standing on a stone of all those nunneries, could they but know what I learned of the mysteries of iniquities concealed behind those high and thick walls.

Thinking, at first, that I was mistaken in the new views I was taking of the life of the nuns, and that what was going on, under my eyes, in that nunnery, was an exceptional case, I thought I would never tell it. I gave up the church of Rome and went to my Protestant friends. A few months later, through failing health and persuasion, I went into the convent of the Poor Franciscans, hoping to regain my "lost faith," but this was a dream never to be realised.

Then and there I became convinced that my first impressions of the nuns were correct. Full of an unspeakable disgust and indignation, I forever left them to throw myself into the arms of an evangelical Protestant church.

However, though I was fully sure that Roman Catholicism could not be the church of Christ, my poor heart had received so many shocks, my mind had passed through so many terrible trials, that though sincerely desirous of being a good Protestant Christian, there were still many dark and threatening clouds on my religious horizon.

It was then, by the good providence of God, that I was permitted to read two volumes published by Father [illegible] Years in the Church [illegible] The Priest, the Wo[illegible]" and also and Protestant family, so perfectly coincided with my personal experience of Romanism, they gave such a clear knowledge of its deep (though well concealed) hatred for the doctrines of the gospel and the word of God, that all my doubts were forever removed.

By the kindness of a friend I was permitted to enter the Chicago Training School for Christian Women. There, by the earnest study of the blessed word of God, and by the encouragement of those from whom God had removed the iron chains of Rome, I realized the unanswerable proofs of the errors of your church. I saw clearly what is so completely ignored in the church of Rome, that salvation—eternal life is a gift; that forgiveness of sins is a gift; that Jesus himself, the Lamb of God, is a gift; my mind was brought clearly to understand the glorious gospel truth, that if Jesus saved me, I am saved! Yes! saved by him and him alone!—that I have nothing to do but to accept that great salvation—that unspeakable gift, eternal life. And, thanks be to God, I looked to the gift and saw its beauty. I opened the lids of my Bible and my soul accepted its promises.

Now, rich and happy in the full possession of that great gift, like the Samaritan woman, I want to go back to my people and say to them, "Come and see the One who told me all my sins and took them away. Come! He is the Savior of the world. Come! He is the way, the light, the life of the poor sinner who receives and loves him as the gift of God."

The short limit of a letter will not allow me to give you more details of the reasons why I have left the church of Rome. But, in short time (D. V.) it will be my privilege to give utterance through the public platform to the good news of salvation through Christ Jesus, and my experience will shortly be published. The book I will have the honor to present to your eminence, to show you more clearly that I did right to give up the heavy and ignominious yoke of the pope to follow Christ alone.—Elizabeth Heady.

Editor Restitution:

My prayer is, you may continue on your course till the resurrection of all things spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began is accomplished, and Jesus seated on his Father David's throne, to order and establish it from henceforth forever and ever. Then we will have peace like a river and righteousness like an ever flowing stream.

O, how I long to see that day,
When the redeemed shall come,
To Zion clad in bright array,
Their blissful happy home.

Then there will be no more parting with our loved ones, for the former things will have passed away and all things become new.

My dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, gird on the whole armor of God, that you may be able to stand in the evil day. Satan goes about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. Keep close to the Savior, and watch and pray lest you enter into temptation and lose your reward, the crown of life, which is promised to those that hold out faithful till Jesus comes. The signs are thickening around us. Be ye also ready, lest he come suddenly, and he find you sleeping, and your lamps gone out. It will be too late then. They that are ready will go in and the foolish virgins will be shut out. What a lamentable scene that will be, when the last invitation has been given and refused, and they must say the harvest is past and I am not saved. O, Lord help them to come, and come now, is the prayer of a servant of Christ. MRS. L. WHITAKER.

Editor Restitution:

I received from my sister at Waukesha, not long since, a RESTITUTION, which had been sent to my mother, and with it, I am requested to write you of our dear mother's death, which occurred the 27th of last April. Had she lived till the 10th of July, this month, she would be 77 years of age. She was baptised into the faith which your paper advocates 35 years ago and held it faithfully to the last. As there had never been a church of her kind in the place where she lived, she attended the Baptist church and Sabbath School until the last three years, which have been invalid years to her. Through them all she was uncomplaining, only waiting and watching for the rest awaiting her. In 1862 she buried her only son, and in 1878 her husband died. My sister, Miss A. M. Sackett, of Waukesha, Wis.; and myself, are her only surviving children. We feel her loss deeply for although so aged, we looked to her for counsel and guidance, still cheerful, loving, kind to all, none ever tired of her company. Her name was MRS. S. S. Sackett.

Yours truly, MRS. S. J. TEED.

Children's Hymn.

From the sunny morning
To the starry night,
Every look and motion
Meets our Father's sight.
From our earliest breath
To our latest year,
Every sound we utter
Meets our Father's ear.

Let us, then be careful
That our look shall be
Brave and kind and cheerful,
For our Lord to see.
Help us, O our Father!
Hear our earnest plea—
Teach thy little children
How to live for Thee.

What My Little Boy Taught Me.

"Tommy, come to mamma."

A sullen little face, with scowling brow and pouting lips, appeared at the door.

"What have you got to do?"

"I've got to stay in bed all day." And with the words Tommy jerked off his jacket, and kicked one boot across the chamber floor.

"What naughty thing have you been doing?"

"Spoiling the calla lily."

The words, tone and manner of the little boy of six were so hard and defiant that a vague alarm seized me, and I said gently—

"Come here, my poor little laddie, and get into mamma's bed. You look very cold."

The downcast eyes were lifted in a strange, glad surprise, and the remaining garments were laid aside softly. Slowly, shyly, and questioningly the little fellow crept in by my side and lay quite still.

"Now, Tommy, tell mamma all about it."

"I only just pinched the littlest leaf. I wanted to see what it was rolled up so tight for. There's ever so many more."

"Yes, Tommy, but no more like this one. All the year you have seen these little rolls unfold into broad, glossy, green leaves; but this one, Tommy, was a bud. If you had watched without touching it, you would have seen it grow larger and lighter in color, until some bright morning you would have run down stairs, to shout and clap your little hands over the most beautiful flower you ever beheld. It would have looked up lovingly into your face from its heart of gold, and its pure velvet lips would have smiled upon you for letting it live and bloom. I am so sorry you hurt the dear little bud, that now can never be a flower."

"Can't it be mended, mamma?"

"No, dear."

"You mended the cup I broke."

"Yes, darling, a broken china cup may be made whole again, but a sweet little bud, waiting to become a rich, golden flower, pinched and torn by cruel fingers can never be restored."

"And cannot God restore it, mamma?"

The penitence, pathos, and despair of the child's face were indescribable. I drew the little form to my breast in silent awe.

"I'm almost as bad as Cain, mamma," he said, sobbing heavily.

"How is that, dear?"

"I've killed something. But, mamma, I did not mean to, truly. I didn't know I was hurting the little bud. I'll never touch a plant again—only look at it, mamma, and love it, and wait for the morning when it'll be a great beautiful flower."

Precious little teacher! What a lesson for us mothers! In the hurry and worry of this toiling, moiling world, are we not in momentary danger, as we walk in the garden of our homes, of pinching, if not killing, something? Think of the tragedy it would be if, through our haste and heedlessness, we should crush and destroy the bud of tenderness—so full and bursting in the heart of a child—and give to society a callous, unfeeling man or woman! There are such in every community. Did the good God, whose name is love, make them so? And where shall he or she be found in that great and awful morning when the Lord of the garden shall demand the sinful and glorious flower which was to have been developed and perfected from the sweet little bud given into the bosom of father and mother?—Home Guardian.

Dear Children:

Come with me into the wilderness, and let us rest our thoughts awhile, for my wakened spirit is seeking Israel's portion which is not lost, but scattered. They called it Manna, Jehovah having made the promise, "Behold I will rain bread from heaven for you." They may have imagined the bread would have been in the form of a cake, or small loaf. When they arose in the morning a heavy dew lay on the ground, but as soon as the eastern portals of the sky began to open to the light, the sun's warm breath gathered those brightest sparkling drops of dew into little clouds, but when the dew was gone up, behold upon the face of the wilderness, a small round thing, small as the hoar frost was upon the ground. The people had seen nothing of the kind before deposited by the evaporation of the dew, therefore they inquired of one another, What is this? It is Manna, or "A portion," for they wist not what it was. The lawgiver whose name signifies, "Drawn out," said, "This is the bread which Jehovah hath given you to eat." Each man had to gather according to his eating, but none to gather less than an omer, but if hungry he could gather more. This was to be done every morning early, except on Saturday, this was the Sabbath, or sweet rest. On that day no Manna fell, but on Friday a double portion fell. If left until morning, it bred worms and stank. Ordinarily it would not keep from morning to morning, but in the Manna gathered on Friday this tendency was restrained, and it remained perfectly good, and did not stink, neither was any worm therein. When gathered they ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar and made cakes of it, and baked it in pans. The taste of it was as the taste of fresh oil, and like a coriander seed. These seeds are regularly hemispherical, so that two of them joined together by the flat side represent a sphere. The color was bdellium which is of a dusky hue. Now let me draw your young minds to the New Testament, for the things that happened to Israel in the wilderness was not confined to that generation, they are written for our admonition. According to Paul the Manna was spiritual meat, for it represented our Lord Jesus Christ, the true bread from heaven, which if any man eat he shall live for ever. Jesus said, Moses gave you not the bread from heaven, but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven, for the bread of God is "He which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. I am the living bread."

The sweet singer of Israel said, Man did eat angel's food, or every one did eat the bread of the Mighty, (margin), which he called the corn of heaven. Israel perceived not the true meaning of the heavenly portion which Jehovah had designed should nourish them. They only saw material bread therefore they loathed it, and called it too light, but how beautiful the figure. When they first looked at it, it was concealed, the heavenly dew covered it, thus to them it was hidden Manna. It was given in the morning, so that there was a night of darkness, 'at which time the distilling dew was falling' between the promise, and its fulfilment. Every morning they had to gather it.

Thus we must feed intellectually upon the living truth, keeping daily in memory the ever blessed gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. This will be life manna to us. Moses was commanded to put an omer of manna into a golden pot, and lay it up before the testimony to be kept. It was preserved for centuries in the Ark of the Testimony with the rod which budded. The Manna which did not corrupt was a type of Jesus, whose flesh saw no corruption, and the corruptible Manna was a figure of his dear children, though dead, their life is hid with Christ in God. The good seed, or the word of the kingdom having taken root, will prove to the resurrection to be the incorruptible seed, or the precious seed of God, sown in dishonor but raised in glory.

May you, my children, and I, truly eat of Israel's portion.

Your affectionate teacher,
E. COFFMAN.

Or, A Scriptural View of the Second Coming of Christ, with the Wonderful Signs that will Precede it, and the still more Wonderful Things that will Follow it.
—BY SILAS HENN.—

NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS:

The book is truthful, reverent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Rainbow.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Certainly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Lyceum Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry.....The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a worldly, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

THE COMING AGE
—OR—
Nature and Proximity.
—By J. P. Westhee.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a theme which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting to the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are answering the "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. Indeed largely in political history, abounding in clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current [illegible]. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone Ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the courses of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to consummate preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Uncomprehensible Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 4, 1886. NO. 29.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months the same rate.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint helps with him in the government of the nations, the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for Restoration.

The Mystery of the Union of Believing Jews and Gentiles in Christ; and the Mystery of the Blindness which in part has happened to Israel till the fulness of the Gentiles is come in.

EPH. III. 1—14; ROM. XI. 25.

That which St. Paul speaks of here as one of the mysteries of the Christian revelation, that Jews and Gentiles are made members of one body in Christ, now appears to us so natural and obvious a truth that it is difficult to understand, in modern times, how it can have been otherwise regarded in former generations. Besides this, the almost national and universal rejection of Jesus as the Christ, still persisted in by the Jewish people, has deprived the question apparently of practical interest. A few thousands only of the Jewish millions accept Christianity, and the last thing which interests the masses of Israelites or Gentiles is the idea of union in the Christian Church. The truths, however, which are concerned in this mystery are so important that it is worth while to describe the state of things between Jews and Gentiles in the age of the Apostles, and to show the bearings of those facts on the present and future position of the Israelites in the world.

I. Let us then note, first—that, in the previous dispensations of God towards Abraham and his descendants, the kingdom of God had established a [law] and discipline for the [Jews] of the [Age] which [was] in full force [when] St. Paul [wrote] the Epistle to the Ephesians.

This discipline was one of separation from the world around, which most effectually transmit into the surrounding darkness the light of truth and godliness. It was not, for example, the worldly all-embracing Church of Rome which most effectually spread abroad the knowledge of Christ in France, but the select and secluded churches of the Huguenot Reform. It has not been the national Church of England, which baptizes and confirms the whole population, which has most effectually kept up amongst the English people the sense of religion, but the small, selected, and ancient societies of Puritan and Methodist origin, among whom religion has been a reality, a separation, and a daily sacrifice. When a light is intense, it attracts attention, though enclosed within whatever barriers. When it is faintly diffused, like an aurora or the zodiacal lustre, it becomes most invisible. If the Israelites had observed fully this law of separation, not only the Queen of Sheba, but a hundred kings and queens would have come to the brightness of their revelation. (3) Their separation was a necessary preliminary for a future mission as the luminaries and evangelists of the whole world. Within the sacred shrine of the Temple worship, and in the sacred books of Moses and the Prophets, were concealed in germ, in symbolic representation, the mysteries of redemption; but these could not be made known to men indiscriminately, apart from a previous discipline under the Law and its shadows. The Law was a preparation for the Gospel. It is thus that the ear of corn is first hidden in the blade, before it blooms and issues in the open sunlight.

Very gradual was this process of preparation. At length the residence of Jews in Alexandria necessitated the translation of the Scriptures into Greek, the language of the civilized world. About 250 years before Christ this great event in the intellectual history of mankind spread the knowledge of the Hebrew treasure among all civilized nations.

When Christ appeared, the sentiment of race had combined with that of a haughty religious culture to fill the Jews with the persuasion that they were the present teachers and the future masters of the world. Their feeling towards the surrounding heathen and their religions can be but faintly represented by existing distinctions between ourselves. You must add together all the pride of race which a high-born Englishman or German feels towards the plebeians of Europe, all the arrogance of the white man towards the black, the brown, and the yellow races of Asia and Africa, all the intolerant isolation which an orthodox High Church clergyman or squire practices towards heretics and dissenting secretaries, all the lofty disdain which a Moslem in Turkey feels towards a "dog of a Christian," all the spiritual repulsion which a Brahmin in India feels for an unclean sudra, in order to represent the feeling of an orthodox and cultivated Jew for an idolatrous and ungodly Gentile of Christ's time. It was "not lawful for the Jews to eat with him," or "to eat any thing common or unclean."

And these were the people who were to be brought together by Christ into the unity of the Church of the Gospel. It was a harder task than persuading the Ethiopian to change his skin, or the leopard his spots.

And yet the gospel accomplished it; and it was accomplished by Jews who preached this gospel. St. Paul was a "Hebrew of the Hebrews, as touching the law a Pharisee;" and it was by the preaching of Jesus, the crucified King of the Jews, that this special miracle was brought to pass. If you had entered into one of the Churches founded by St. Paul in Greece or in Asia Minor, you would have seen this spectacle: here sat together, at the holy "Communion of the body and blood of Christ," the negro, the Greek, the Roman, the Asiatic, the converted Pagan, the dreamy philosopher, the once-profligate voluptuary, the moral leper, and the [broken] slave—all clothed in the [garb] of one common righteousness [in] Christ—and the [Jew] sat, or stood, [in] the midst of them, lead[ing] the song of adoration to their one common Savior, Christ in the heavens.

This was a moral miracle, the like of which the world had never seen before, and it must certainly have been a work of supernatural grace. For it is simply impossible and inconceivable that any Jews, high or low, rich or poor, learned or ignorant, left to themselves, could or would have invented a religion which thus equalized all nations and races, and brought into one brotherhood men of all nations in the hope of a common immortality. No! The Apostles never could have invented Christianity.

The New Testament contains innumerable illustrations of this physical, intellectual, and religious separation between the Jews and the Gentiles. The Samaritan woman wondered that Jesus should even ask drink of her at Jacob's well. The Jerusalem Jews "contended with Peter, saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat them!" And again, at Antioch, when certain came from James, Peter, fearing them of the circumcision, withdrew himself, and led the way for other Jews, who refused even to sit down to dinner with converted Greeks and Romans and Syrians—until St. Paul took this Galilean fisherman by the shoulders, and gave him a severe lesson on this mean, cowardly, and retrograde treatment of the converts from heathenism.

II. The next point to notice is that the Hebrew prophets, ages before the coming of Christ, had foretold that when the Messiah came, this "middle wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles" would be broken down, and all who served God would be brought into one church of the true worshippers.

Isaiah predicted (ii. 2, 3) that "in the latter days all nations should flow unto the house of Jehovah, and many people should say, Let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; and he shall judge among the nations, and they shall not learn war any more." In chapter xlii. 1, he says that God's Servant, in whom his soul delighted, should "bring forth judgment (that is truth) to the Gentiles, and the Isles shall wait for his law, and that his praise should reach from the ends of the earth. It is a light thing that thou shouldst be My Servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob. I will give Thee for a Light to the Gentiles, that Thou . . . mayest be my salvation to the ends of the earth," xlix. 6. "The isles shall wait for Me, and on Mine arm shall they trust," li. 5. Jeremiah iii. 17 says: "At that time shall they call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of Jehovah; neither shall they walk any more after the imaginations of their evil heart." Zechariah says viii. 22: "Yea, many people and strong nations shall come and seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and pray before the Lord." And so in fifty other places.

But this great mystery of the future of Jehovah-worship by united Jews and Gentiles was entirely hidden from the eyes of the Jewish people until it was proclaimed and asserted by the Apostles of Christ. "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and there shall be one flock and one Shepherd," John x. 16. But the mere mention of such a purpose seemed a profanation to the Jews of Jerusalem. When Paul, standing on the steps of the Castle of Antonia for a pulpit, harangued the raging Jewish people in the temple court below, and narrated his conversion, they heard him until those words, "Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles,"—and then they broke out into ferocious outcries: "Away with such a fellow from the earth, for it is not fit that he should live;" their theory of the survival of the fittest not including any man who believed that the Messiah should be "preached to the Gentiles, that they might be saved."

Now, then, we are in a position to understand the God-inspired teaching and conduct of the Apostles, when, breaking away from the mad fury of Jerusalem Judaism, with its principles of religious caste and haughty isolation, they represented the Father of mercies as receiving with kisses and open arms the prodigal sons of Gentile heathenism, and instituting a festival with "music and dancing" on the occasion of their return to the forsaken home.

And we can plainly imagine what must have been the effect of the first proclamation of the glad tidings among the pagan nations of that apostolic age. They were sick and weary of their own absurd mythology of gods and goddesses—the magnified and glorified images of their own vices and sins—weary of their contradictory philosophies, their fatalistic Stoicism, of their pleasure-seeking Epicureanism, of their Platonism, with its romantic dreams, which settled nothing, and ended in universal doubt, but left them to battle unarmed with the terror and the sting of death. They were weary of the "husks which the swine did eat"—weary of feeding on the outsides of things, and longing for realities, for the solid nutriment of truth and the hope of a life beyond. And then—just then—there came along the crowded highroad of Europe and Asia this sublime and triumphant procession of the preachers of the Gospel of Christ, with the resounding song of myriads of Salvationists, crying "Hosanna to the Son of David!"—with the promise of the life immortal and the blast of the trump of God; and then the nations "flung their idols to the moles and to the bats," and united themselves in every land to the Churches which stood with open doors to receive the new subjects of the King of kings. The devil raged at his shaken kingdom: the angry and envious Jews raged at Thessalonica, at Antioch, at Colosse, at this spectacle of wretched heathens and profligate pagans flocking to the "feast of fat things" set forth by the crucified Christ to his followers and converts, and "would not come in;" but all in vain. The mighty work proceeded in every land, and has gone on for near two thousand years, until now, at length, after infinite experiments in thought and government, the whole earth resounds with a crash of falling superstitions and philosophies, and of the rotten fabric of Rabbinical Judaism, the human race begins to cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

For though the vision tarry we shall wait for it, and the words of Daniel shall receive their accomplishment, "I saw in the night visions, and one like unto a Son of man came on the clouds of heaven, and there was given unto him a kingdom, that all nations, peoples, and languages should serve and obey him."

Oh, my friends, sad are the spectacles of the derelict and God-abandoned wrecks floating down to us on the troubled sea of modern history, the saddest of all, to my mind, is the spectacle of the illustrious Jewish nation tossing, rudderless and smitten with the lightnings of heaven, ever since its general rejection of Jesus as the Holy One of God. It has outlasted the successive empires of Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, and still stands amidst the great nations of the nineteenth century—the source of our highest civilization, and of all our hope of the life eternal—yet steadfastly closing its eyes to the Truth which has renovated the world and opened the gates of heaven to mankind. We who daily offer homage to the Lord of lords through the great High Priest who "sprang out of Judah," and of whom we believed that he is at this moment Sovereign of the Universe, are doomed to sorrowfully look over the earth, upon the scattered remnants of the great people to whom we owe all these transcendent blessings, without ephod, without temple, without a king, without a priest, a people now hazardously balancing between a formal adhesion to their own lofty traditions and the frightful negations of scientific infidelity. First in philosophy, first in the world of music, first in their sublime lineage, and first in their historic renown, their name is still a "byword and a proverb," and their persons, almost everywhere on earth, except in England and France and America, the objects of persecution and scorn among the outlying nations. Oh, when shall it end? When shall they "look upon him whom they have pierced?" When shall they cry to heaven, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord?" When shall they joyfully recognise in him the fulfilment of all past predictions and the fountain of all their glories? What a time will that be when "the veil is taken away" which at present conceals the true glory of Moses as the prophet and forerunner of the Savior of the world; when the Jewish nation shall be reborn in a day, and shall cry to him, "Hosanna to the Son of David!" There will then be such an intellectual revolution among mankind as has never been known before. All Asia will bow before him when Israel repents and believes the Gospel—all Asia, from Palestine to Japan—all Europe, from the Ural Mountains to the Atlantic—all Africa, from its Moslem frontier to the Cape of Good Hope—all the Pacific and the Australias—and all America, from the snowy north to Cape Horn, where the southern ocean beats upon the Patagonian shore—all shall "break forth into singing," because Israel has come in, and the nations are made glad at the brightness of their Daystar's rising.

III. For, lastly, let me remind you that although the Gospel of Jesus has established the spiritual union of all believing Jews and believing Gentiles of any name in one spiritual Church, so that they form one body in Christ, a body of which he is the Head of glory, on which rests the Shekinah of Deity, "His countenance above the brightness of the sun"—still, so long as the earth lasts, this spiritual union of Jew and Gentile has not abolished the nationality of the Jew, any more than it has annihilated the nationality of the Englishman or the Spaniard, the German or the Dane.

Not a little of the fixed hostility of the modern Jewish people to popular Christianity is occasioned by the errors of Gentile Christians. Some of these are purely theological. One of them, I believe, consists in adopting the scholastic language of the Greek metaphysical disputers of the Nicene age in the mode of setting forth the mystery of the Godhead and the Incarnation of the Word, in preference to the much similar language of the Son of God himself and of his Apostles. The mischief done by the adoption and enforcement of the Athanasian Creed in relation to the conversion of Jews and Mohammedans is, I venture to think, simply incalculable. The Jewish unbelief is not a little due to those intellectual exercises on Christian belief which have found a place in the established Churches of Rome, England, and Germany.

Among these errors ought to be reckoned the popular Christian notion of the abolition, by the extension of Christianity, of the Jewish nationality, with all its heritage of privileges and promises for the sons of Abraham. What should we think of Christianity if we were told, or left to believe from the absence of contradiction, that the condition of bestowing on us the blessings of redemption to eternal life, of the pardon of sin by the death of Christ, was that we, by faith and entrance into the Church of Christ, cease to be Englishmen, and lose all the honor and prospects of our British nationality?—that the privilege of faith really consisted and resulted in gradually losing our race position, our special hope as a great people, and, at last, our very existence as a distinct and congenial nationality, by absorption and intermarriage with a crowd of Germans, Poles, and Manchu Tartars, who had also become Christians! Can you imagine a more dangerous stumbling-block set up to prevent the belief of Christianity among the English people? Yet that, without the least exaggeration, is precisely the way in which Christianity is now set, for the most part, before the Jewish people by the English Protestants—when it is set before them at all; for one result or this way of thinking is that the generality of English Protestants, and especially the Nonconformists, make very slight efforts indeed to convert the Jews to the belief in Jesus. They too often regard it as a hopeless enterprise, and no wonder! I fear it is too often taught in colleges and pulpits that it is but a delusion and a snare to [encourage] Jews the idea that they can retain their nationality in the Christian Church, with its glorious hopes set forth in the ancient prophecies. No; all those glorious descriptions of the return of the Jews to Palestine, and of the splendid destiny of their nation in the latter days, signify really spiritual blessings for the true Israel, which are the Gentile nations and those of the Jews who believe in Jesus without any such "carnal expectations!"

And yet these same Protestant Gentiles, without the slightest sense of inconsistency, without the faintest notion of the effect of such gratuitous "wresting of the Scriptures" on the Jewish mind, will coolly insist on it that all the threatenings contained in the Old Testament against the Israelites, of slaughter, of banishment, of exile, and of down-treading were intended to be taken literally, and have been fulfilled literally in the history and experiences of the Hebrew people. I can only say that it makes one's blood boil to think how Scripture is sometimes handled! How large a part of college training consists in an elaborate education in the art of wresting Holy Scriptures, under pretense of spiritualizing it, until both Jews and Gentiles are ready to fling Divine Revelation to the moles and bats. The inevitable effect is to harden the heart of the Jew against all you can say of the "spiritual blessings of Christianity."

No! no! God hath not cast away his people whom he fore-knew. He who has literally fulfilled all his threatenings against them will literally fulfil all his promises to their nationality, and these eighteen hundred years of down-treading and expatriation will be followed by a long period of restoration and prosperity in the "glory of all lands." The future of the earth belongs to Christ; "salvation is of the Jews," out of whom the Son of David arose. He who wept over Jerusalem weeps still over the scattered nation, and will again "gather them;" and weeps, I think, most of all over those Gentile perversions of Christianity, which have had, quite as much as Gentile cruelties, to do with the continued unbelief of Israel.

And when the hour shall strike for the "restoration of all things which God hath promised by the prophets," I imagine the spectacle which will be presented in Western Asia, all over the area now blighted and desolated by the accursed Mohammedan rule, which hastens to its doom. Think what it shall be when Jerusalem shall rise again from the dust of ages, when the hills and valleys of Palestine shall flow again with corn and wine, when the Hebrew race shall cover the whole territory given to Abraham, from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates, and when both Euphrates and Tigris shall flow again through one Paradise of rebuilt cities and cultivated lands; when the ancient routes of commerce shall be restored in every direction from the sea-board to the remotest East; when a new Assyria, and a new Babylonia, and a new Egypt, and a new Ethiopia, and a new Persia, and a new India, and a new Arabia shall resound with the praises of God, and shine in the lustre of a restored and ennobled civilization; when all the earth shall be united by a spirit of peace, and a multitudinous population of working people in all lands, now for the first time protected in their labor against the rapacity of priests, landholders, and kings, shall celebrate in one unbroken psalm of praise to God the blessings of the government of the Righteous One.

And in the centre of that renovated world shall shine Jerusalem the Holy, shall labor, and pray, and rejoice that Hebrew race, now become zealous lovers and servants of their once-crucified King; and all nations, with them, shall form One Catholic and Apostolic Church, a Church of the Spirit, which leaves unchanged, except to bless them, the nationalities of all tribes of mankind. And this was the mystery, once hidden, which God hath now made known, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs and partakers of the promises in Christ by the Gospel, a blessing which includes earth now and heaven hereafter; time and eternity; the growing brightness of earth's future history, and the final inheritance in the heavenly places which Christ is gone to prepare.—*E. ### The Judgment Day—the Fiery Doom.

The period, the time is "as 1000 years." 2 Peter iii.; Rev. xx. But this fiery doom applies to its subjects in their several relations.

1. "The Babylon, the Beast and False Prophet" at "the end" of their career. Dan. vii. 2–9; Rev. xvii. 1–18; xviii. 8; xix. 17–20. This commends itself by its propriety.

2. The special judgment on "the devil" is at "the end" of his confinement through the 1000 years. This will mark the contrast between "this age" of his reign and that "age to come," while he is bound and Jesus has "the kingdom." Amen. Psa. lxxii. 20. His doom is to be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone where the beast and false prophet had been cast 1000 years before!

3. Then in verses 11–15, not repeating the 1000 years, we have some special notes of "The same day, the great white throne," as in Dan. vii., at the opening of the judgment day, the 1000 years. Then the opening of "the books and another book, the book of life, from which the small and great were judged" (by their record). Those "not written in the book of life are cast into the lake of fire!" "This is the second death!" (It can't belong to the first death, any way or how; it is the second death).

Note. All may then see "how God knows to deliver the godly and reserve the unjust to the day of judgment to be punished!" 2 Peter ii. 9. A great moral end is thus reached by ridding earth of evil.

"Those who sin without law, perish without law!" Rom. ii. 12; i. e., without being judged by law, not being responsible beyond their natural endowment. In the parable of the talents, those only who received the talents were called to account. Math. xxv. 14–30. "God's ways are equal," all right and just, for a gracious end.

Hence "the just" are those justified by believing the gospel. "The unjust" are those who bury their talent and accuse their lord like "the unfaithful servant." Thus "this second death" applies to "the unjust." They have despised their gospel grace, "the word of life," and so are not raised as "heirs of promise," but to the destiny of "the Beast, False Prophet and Satan!" All keep their own company to judgment.

ALTHOUGH somewhat lengthy the articles of Edward White are well worthy of careful perusal.

TWO short and instructive articles from Brother B. Wilson have come to hand. More contributions of a like character from his pen would be welcomed by our brethren. Will give these a place in our next issues. Also Brother L. Skeels' article will appear in our next.

DEAR brethren and sisters, in these closing days of this dispensation let us live the life of prayer, and the life of faith on the dear Son of God. The church is now doing its last work in the world. Soon, very soon, for the last crown of glory the one worthy will be found. Who of earth's millions will gain that heavenly prize?

THE July number of The Woman's Magazine has one of the best articles ... has come to our notice for many a ... title is "My Mother and I," ... the pen of Frances E. Willard. The calm, soothing, satisfying pleasures of a home life are drawn in the finest pencilings by the gifted authoress. The mother was one to whom,

"The sweetest flower that blows can give Thoughts which do often lie too deep for tears."

And one again who hoped to see the faded flowers once more in the new spring-time,

"Where blooming in those everlasting gardens,
Where angels walk, and seraphs are the wardens."

The world-home, with its garden of fading flowers, is, by the presence of such a mother, made a temporary paradise, as an earnest of the "incorruptible, undefiled and fadeless Paradise of God."

THE July number of The Berean Quarterly is devoted to the Clear Signs of Christ's Second Advent. As one of the heralds of our soon-coming King it gives no uncertain sound in proclaiming the return of Jesus Christ to this world, as being an event now even at the doors. The expectant eye of "a groaning creation" is peering through the shadows, with imploring anxiety, for the first radiant streaks of the coming dawn. The "left-over" part of the church of the living God is waiting for its transformation and translation, and the sleeping myriads for resurrection life and glory. O, come Lord Jesus, and bring to thy church its immortality and blessedness, and to a sin-blighted world its re-genesis.

PAPAL ROME, No. 6.

Samuel Hanson Cox D. D., in his continuation of Bower's History of the Popes says—"To one who has become acquainted with true Christianity, as exhibited generally in the oracles of God, it is inefably monstrous and overwhelming to contemplate the orgies and the impieties of the papacy! The man of sin, the son of perdition, that wicked, and other such designations of Holy Writ, are plainly fit and proper; and to a mind well informed and unprejudiced, or uncommitted to the interest of the Beast, their applicability and their truth are plain and indubitable. No wonder the popes oppose the distribution of the Scriptures among the people. It is in their impartial and eternal light, that the abomination of the whole system, both foundation and superstructure, appear in all their lurid horror—the invention and the master-piece of hell!" We take the course we have taken in the preceding numbers, to place before our readers some of the atrocities of Papal Rome in its past history. We do this in the present number by extracting from two Standard Encyclopedias, the account each gives of the horrible scenes enacted on St. Bartholomew's Day. We preface these extracts with a little clipping from a cotemporary journal with its appropriate heading, in which Bishop Ryan's remarks—printed in a previous number—are reprinted in connection with what the Romish clergy declare to be their purpose regarding Ireland. We rejoice to know that the Heaven-appointed doom of the Mother of Harlots is impending.

IRELAND AND ROME.

The weekly Witness of June 24, 1886, quotes the following from the London Christian. From this it appears that the question in Ireland is not "Home Rule," but "Rome Rule." And if the success of the Home Rule bill would be to pass Ireland helplessly over into the hands of the papacy, as so many intelligent and discerning people declare, then every Christian will cheerfully acquiesce in the overwhelming defeat of that measure. The Christian says:—

"Party politics are not within our province, and we could not ourselves take up either side in this controversy without seriously interfering with the design and intention of this paper.

"We must, however, urge upon our readers of all opinions in this matter, that the true question is not Home, but Rome; and we will bring a few plain facts before them as to the present temper of Rome. What it has been in the past, let the Holy Inquisition bear witness.

"The Roman Catholic Bishop Ryan, speaking at Philadelphia quite recently said:—

"'We maintain that the Church of Rome is intolerant; that is, that she uses every means in her power to root out heresy. But her intolerance is the result of her infallibility. She alone has the right to be intolerant, because she alone has the truth. The church tolerates heretics where she is obliged to do so, but she hates them with a deadly hatred, and uses all her powers to annihilate them. If ever the Catholics should become a considerable majority, which in time will surely be the case, then will religious freedom in the Republic of the United States come to an end. Our enemies know how she treated heretics in the Netherlands, and how she treats them today where she has the power. We no more think of denying these historic facts than we do of blaming the holy God and the princes of the church for what they have thought fit to do.'

"In the interests of true Christianity, it is most desirable that England should know the line that will be taken by the Roman Catholic clergy if they can. Here is one expression of their feeling:—

"'If there is to be but one Catholic country in Europe, Ireland will be that country. We will make a clean sweep of heresy from sea to sea in three provinces. We will give you the alternative, to conform or leave the country.'"

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S DAY.

From Zell's Encyclopedia:

In 1572, in the reign of Charles IX., many of the principal French Protestants were invited to Paris, under a solemn pledge of safety, on the occasion of the marriage of the King of Navarre, afterwards Henry IV., with the French king's sister. Though doomed to destruction, they were received with caresses, loaded with honor, and treated with every mark of courtesy and confidence. In the midst of their security, the warrant for their destruction was issued by their sovereign, on whose word they had relied; and in obedience to it, their countrymen, their fellow-citizens and companions imbrued their hands in their blood. This horrible butchery began on the 24th of August, being St. B's day, on which, and the two following days more than 10,000 Protestants, without distinction of age, sex, or condition, were murdered in Paris. A butcher boasted to the king that he had hewn down 150 in one night: and De Thou, a celebrated French historian, affirms that he had often, with the utmost horror, seen a goldsmith named Ornes, who boasted of having killed 400 with his own hands. A like carnage ensued in the provinces, where upwards of 25,000 more were destroyed by other blood-thirsty fanatics. Sully says that the number massacred throughout the kingdom amounted to 70,000. This horrid deed was, however, applauded in Spain; at Rome, solemn thanksgivings were offered to God for its success, and medals were struck at Paris in honor of it; while, as a mark of Protestant detestation, Elizabeth and the English court put on deep mourning, and received the French Embassy in solemn silence.

FROM CHAMBER'S ENCYCLOPEDIA, BARTHOLOMEW'S (ST.) DAY.—Fr. La St. Barthelemy; Ger. Bartholomaus-nacht, i. e., Bartholomew's night, or Bluthochzeit, i. e. blood-wedding,—the appellation given to the massacre of the Protestants in Paris on the night of St. B. D., between 24th and 25th Aug., 1572. After the death of Francis II. 1560, Catharine de' Medici, as regent for her Son, Charles IX., a minor, in order to annoy the Catholic party of the duke Francis of Guise had granted an edict of toleration to the Reformed, at whose head was the Prince of Conde. Both parties took up arms, and there ensued a war which lasted for eight years, the cruelties of which, through mutual exasperation, are almost incredible. The duke Francis of Guise was murdered by an assassin, and the Prince of Conde was taken prisoner in the battle of Jarnac, in 1569, and shot. The young prince, Henry of Bearn, afterwards King Henry IV., a nephew of Conde, then became leader of the Reformed, along with admiral Coligny. It was not till the strength of both sides was exhausted, that the peace of St. Germain-en-Laye was concluded in 1570, whereby the Reformed obtained the free exercise of their religion. Catharine de' Medici now expressed much friendliness towards the Reformed, and even endeavored to lull them into negligence by the marriage of the youthful Henry of Bearn with her daughter Margaret, 18th Aug., 1572. Admiral Coligny was drawn to Paris, and the king not only made him costly presents, but gave him an office in the council of State. However, all this was the basest hypocrisy. When, by the means of the marriage of Prince Henry, the most eminent of the Reformed had been allured to Paris, Admiral Coligny was wounded by a shot from a window of the palace on 22d Aug., 1572. The King, indeed, hastened to him and swore to avenge him; but on the very same day, the King was persuaded by his mother that the Admiral sought his life. "By God's death," he exclaimed, "let the Admiral be slain, and not him only, but all the Huguenots, till not one remain to that can give us trouble!" That night Catharine held a council, and appointed St. B. D. for carrying into effect the long contemplated massacre. After Coligny has been murdered, a bell in the tower of the royal palace, at the hour of midnight, gave the signal to assembled citizens for a general massacre of the Huguenots. The King himself fired from his palace upon those that were fleeing past. The prince of Condo and the king of Navarre only saved their lives by going to mass, and appearing to conform to the Catholic church. The provinces were at the time summoned to similar slaughter; and although in some of them the officials were ashamed to publish the murderous commands which had been transmitted to them, there were found blood-thirsty fanatics enough, who perpetrated the greatest horrors for several weeks together in almost all the provinces, so that it was reckoned that 30,000 (some authorities make the number 70,000) persons were murdered. The Pope celebrated the events of St. B. D. by a procession to the church of St. Louis, a grand Te Deum, and the proclamation of a year of Jubilee. Many of the Huguenots fled to the pathless mountains and to Rochelle, to which the duke of Anjou laid siege. Upon receiving intelligence, however, that he had been elected King of Poland, he made an arrangement on July 6, 1573, according to which the King granted to the Huguenots an amnesty, and the exercise of their religion in certain towns.

DISCOVERIES IN EGYPT.

In addition to an article taken from the N. Y. Observer, and printed in our paper last week, we take another account more full and complete in its details from the Independent on discoveries made by Mr. Flinders Petrie of "Pharaoh's House in Tahpanhes," as well as of the ruins of the town itself. We are prompted to dwell upon this matter at greater length from the fact that discoveries of this kind corroborate the truthfulness of the Scripture records. The story of the olden times, as told in the Bible, is preserved on the tablets of Nineveh, on the bricks of Babylon, and on the slabs of Egypt, and is exhumed in this "time of the end" to confound and silence the infidel.

TAHPANHES.

This town has always been one of the most obscure points in both Egyptian and biblical history. On no dark problem of antiquity could light be more unexpected or welcome.

Its origin had been referred, with highest probability, to the era of Shishak, who reigned in Egypt between the year 966 and 933 B. C., (Brugsch) and who was supposed to have bestowed the name on the newly founded palace or fortress in honor of his queen, Tahpanes. Or, if her name was simply Hanes (like that of the first wife of King Amasis) the place would naturally be styled, both Hanes, as in Isaiah, xxx. 4, and Tapo Hanes "the City of Hanes," most commonly. But, whenever the site may have been first selected, built upon and named, the discoveries about to be described clearly show that the great stronghold, whose ruins survive to the present moment, was founded and erected by Psamtik I, who ruled between 666 and 612 B. C. It is well known that this king was the first in his dynasty, of Sais, and that his dynasty was the last Egyptian one, prior to the advent of the Persians. The Greeks had become so numerous in the land that they could not be suppressed, and Psamtik was the first to undertake the difficult task of harmonizing the native and foreign elements of the population. His plan for doing this so far as the army was concerned was by posting the native troops afar in the South, at Elephantine, to guard that frontier against the Ethiopians, and by separating the Greek troops, the mercenaries of Caria and Ionia, to whom he owed his elevation to the throne, in a permanent settlement at the Stratopeda. "Camps," near or identical with the Daphne on the Pelusiac arm of the Nile, to guard the land against the Arabians and Syrians. Thus the spot became the very earliest foothold of the Greeks in Egypt, where they remained about one century, until, under a succeeding king, Amasis, they were removed, probably because the Pelusiac arm of the Nile was becoming unnavigable, westward to Naucratis on the Canobic arm, where deeper water and a more central position afforded better facilities for developing a foreign emporium.

Meantime, the little kingdom of Judah, between two fires, had been extinguished. The princes of the King of Babylon had entered the city, burned the king's house, and broken down the walls of Jerusalem. Zedekiah, unable to escape across the Arabah, and brought before Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, at Riblah, had witnessed the execution of his sons as the last vision of his own eyes. Nebuzaradan had liberated the prophet Jeremiah from the prison in which he had been so long shut up. Gedaliah, the governor for the King of Babylon, at Mizpah, had been slain by the treacherous Ishmael: and Kareah, having delivered from a threatened captivity among the Ammonites, all the residue of the people, even the king's daughters, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, moved them down to Bethlehem, to go to enter into Egypt, because they are afraid of the Chaldeans. It was a foregone conclusion that they should go down into Egypt; but it is a familiar story how the form of consulting the prophet Jeremiah was gone through with, how he promised them safety and plenty, from the Lord, if they would remain in their own land, but death by the sword, by famine, and by pestilence, if they persist in going away. But they persisted; weary of war and murder and fire, they forsook their wasted city and devastated country, for a place where they should see no war, nor hear the sound of a trumpet, nor have hunger of bread. So Johanan, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people—all the remnant of Judah that were returned from all nations whither they had been driven—even men, and women, and children, and the king's daughters, came into the land of Egypt; for they obeyed not the voice of the Lord; thus came they even to Tahpanhes, carrying Jeremiah by force with them, together with Baruch the scribe, and surely the prophet's savior, who put his trust in the Lord, Ebed-melech, the Ethiopian. Jer. xxxix—xliii. 7.

Psamtik I. had passed away; and after him his successors, Necho, his son, and Psamtik II., his grandson; and now Haphris, Apries of the Greeks, or Hophra of the Bible, was the reigning sovereign, from 591 to 572 B. C. By the latter the remnant of Judah, the king's daughters, the prophet of the Lord, the captains and others were hospitably received, and assigned to "Pharaoh's house," as their place of residence, the palatial fortress raised by Psamtik I. Having been the friend and ally of King Zedekiah, Hophra could not be otherwise than kind to his daughters, the princesses, or any refugee from his enemy, the Chaldean rival. Here all the troubles of the people of Judah would appear to be at an end. They were reinstalled on the borders of the land of Goshen, in the fertile grazing country lying between the lakes extending to the Red Sea on the east, the pools of Wadi Tumilat on the south, and the Pelusiac branch of the Nile on the northwest, and spreading over to the Tanitic arm—the very land where their ancestors had resided during nearly five centuries, and where their nation was born. It may like going home to them; for it was not from Goshen that their forefathers fled, but only the oppression of Pharaoh and Memphis. Nor were they the first to return: for, from the beginning of the disruption of the kingdom and the captivities in Babylonia, a small, yet probably a continual, emigration had turned in the direction of the South Country and Egypt. Isaiah had so denounced to arrest the movement, without effect. Some pitched their tents at Rameses; but the greater part, and particularly the inhabitants of Hebron, flocked to Egypt. Whether any, even very few, had remained over from the time of Moses and the Exodus cannot be known, yet, that some were left behind would not be impossible. However, these who survived the adversities which soon followed, clearly formed the nucleus and source of that large body of Jews who at length scattered themselves through the Delta, who peopled Alexandria from its foundation, and who in the third century B. C. began to turn the Hebrew Scriptures into Greek.

The siege of Jerusalem, with the destruction of the temple, and this flight into Egypt, probably occurred about the year 587 B. C. No sooner had the disobedient people of Judah arrived in Tahpanhes than, faithful to his mission, and by the command of the Lord, Jeremiah took great stones in his hands and sunk them in the mortar of the pavement of brickwork which lay at the entrance of the palace, predicting in the sight of all the people that, so far from abiding him, even the servant of Jehovah, Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Babylon, having followed and overtaken them, would spread his royal pavilion on that pavement of brick and set up his throne over those very stones; that he should smite the land of Egypt, arraying himself with it as a shepherd his garment, kindling a fire in the houses of its gods, breaking the images of Heliopolis; and then that he would depart in peace. This prophecy was speedily and literally fulfilled, Nebuchadnezzar, though detained thirteen years by the siege of Tyre, in the year 572 B. C. pressed on and invaded Egypt. That he struck the geographical point of Tahpanhes is attested by the witness of three clay cylinders, bearing his name, parentage and titles, found in this vicinity by Arabs, and sold to the keepers of the Bulaq Museum, where it ... existence, which not ... his footsteps, but in the ... are precisely such cylinders as ... with them for the purpose of marking the scenes of his victories. That he actually took the fortress of Tahpanhes is attested by its total wreck; and that he then applied the torch is proved by the marks of fire everywhere visible—by the fact, indeed, that what remains remains because it was burned. That he spared not the fugitives of Judah, but cut off all except a few that may have escaped, is to be inferred. His object evidently was accomplished when he had vented his rage on the refugees, and had punished those who had given them shelter. He did not come merely to raze the walls of the fortress, nor did he come to conquer and hold the whole country; and when he was satisfied, he quietly returned to his own land to live ten years longer, in luxury and in pride, and then to die in peace.

Tahpanhes must have been the place where the Lamentations of Jeremiah were composed. Only two other occasions may be considered: the one, immediately after the fall of Jerusalem before the princes of Nebuchadnezzar; the other, during his attachment to Gedaliah at Mizpeh; both, however, too short in duration for the construction of such carefully elaborate elegies. The broad retrospects of disastrous events, the complete solitude of the city, the depth of emotions expressed in the terms and forms of true poetry, the uniformity of rhythm and parallelism, the acrostic arrangements—all demand leisure, and such care as the writer could bestow only in the long days and weary nights of the retirement in Egypt.

BRIEF JEWISH NOTES.

From the Occident we reprint the following extracts. A marked change is fast taking place in the social and political condition of the Jewish nation, and, as a result, they are returning to the land of promise. It is a circumstance worthy of note that this long exiled people have commenced colonizing East of the Jordan in that very land that first came into the possession of Israel after leaving Egypt. The "Everlasting Nation" is coming to the front to act their part in the grandest crisis of human history now imminently impending.

JERUSALEM.—MR. A. M. LUNER, the blind author in Jerusalem, has issued ... advance sheets of his annual entitled "Jerusalem."

Like the first volume, the new publication promises much useful information which cannot fail to be of interest to the friends of Palestine. The work will be published partly in Hebrew, and partly in the English and German languages. Among the contributions in the former language is one on "Haifa and Mount Carmel" by Mr. Lawrence Oliphant, districts on which no one is more competent to write than this lover of the Holy Land, and author by Mr. Merrill, the United States Council in Jerusalem.

The Legacy of $50,000 left by Samson Simpson for improving the condition of Hebrews in the Holy Land, will probably be given to the colony of Safed Jews east of the Jordan. There are forty-six families, numbering about two hundred individuals in all. They are all Turkish subjects, who have bought good land and need only a little aid to become self-supporting.

THE APPROACHING STORM.

The recent riots have an aspect of much greater gravity and significance than that which attaches to them as a temporary ebullition of mob fury. Taken in conjunction with threats of similar tumults elsewhere, and interpreted in the light of sundry menacing tendencies that are visibly at work, we regard the incident as a premonitory outbreak of a spirit of lawlessness that is rapidly gathering force under ground, and that is destined, sooner or later, to come to the surface in disastrous fashion. These angry mutterings are but the subterranean rumblings that presage the upheaval; the ground swells on the beach that foretells the coming storm. And the hurricane is approaching. Statesmen may do their utmost by repressive measures on the one hand, or ameliorative reforms on the other, to stem the rising tide of anarchism, but in vain. It is too late. "What a man soweth that shall he also reap," is the inexorable law for nations, even as for individuals. And the nations now among the rest, have a dark and dire record behind them from which they cannot ... about by ... thus shall the golden year of ... be introduced. The nations have sown to the wind, and they must reap the whirlwind. Nemesis is on their heels. Not the ghost of former crimes to haunt them, but the angel of justice, swift, and strong, and unerring, whose glittering blade shall not fall in its appointed mission. It is an easy matter to close one's eyes to the march of events, and to refuse a hearing to their most obvious lessons, but the indifference, or laughter of the fool, will not stay the storm in its path.

But it is not on any doubtful reading of the hieroglyphics on the political horoscope that we rest our conviction of impending catastrophe. "We have the word of prophecy made more sure," and whatever view we may take of the predictions of Scripture, it is impossible to overlook the fact, so clearly revealed, that the present dispensation will close among scenes of unprecedented tribulation and distress. The final struggle between good and evil will be their greatest. Unparalleled manifestations of Satanic power and violence will be followed by a signal outpouring of Divine judgments, and in the conflict the fabric of society will be shaken to its base. The world that has rejected the Son of God and bowed the knee to the usurper, must receive its due reward, and in the hour of reckoning, the elements of its own disorder and rebellion will become the instruments of the Divine retribution.

But what attitude must Christians take in view of the facts? Seeing the world is hurrying to irrevocable doom, are we to stand helplessly aside and look on? Assuredly not. Since judgment is certain, and the time is short, there is the great necessity laid upon us to work with untiring energy for the deliverance of those that are ready to perish. But in the presence of the eternally practical, and the materialistic spirit that pervades all classes of society, we must have some definite and tangible remedy to propose. Doctrines, and pious phrases, and the restraints of religious custom, have had their day, but that day is closing. We must tell men of something that can help them now, as well as in the future; something that can appease their heart-hunger, that will nerve them for the battle of life, that will uphold them in its necessities and trials, that will give ...

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first of January, 1886, and consequently is six months past due now. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June, "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

NAOMI'S QUESTION TO RUTH.

"Where hast thou gleaned today?"
'Tis a voice of the olden time,
Awakening echoes from far away,
To mingle in a solemn chime.

"Where hast thou gleaned today?"
Bring the searching question home:
The distant hills are growing gray
In the gathering night shade's gloom.

"Where hast thou gleaned today?"
The harvest indeed is great;
The Lord of the harvest pray,
The fields for the gleaners wait.

"Where hast thou gleaned today?"
Hast thou followed those who reap?
Or do the fields by thy delay
Their scattered stalks still keep?

"Where hast thou gleaned today?"
Hast thou sat with folded hands,
Or idly followed by the way,
Aloof from the reaper bands?

The fields stretch far and wide,
And, before we kneel to pray,
May we look at each over side,
"Where have I gleaned today?"

MICA PEN NOTES.

With kind respect for those who think differently from Mica-Pen let me courteously suggest a few things. If futurism, so-called, or what it would define the latest or fullest development of prophecy, after a prior typical one, is not true, we may quietly await the disproof by the event. Meanwhile, first let me cite a little from A. R. Fausset, of St. Cuthberts, York: "The ten kingdoms—denoted by the toes—have been sought for in the invading hosts of the fifth and sixth centuries. But the dignity of emperor still continued, so the ten-fold division cannot be looked for before 331 A. D. But the East is not to be excluded, five toes being on each foot. Thus no point of time before the taking of Constantinople by the Turks, 1453 A. D. can be assigned for the division. It seems therefore that the definite ten will be the ultimate development of the Roman empire just before the rise of Antichrist, who shall overthrow three of the kings, and in three and a half years, be himself overthrown by Christ in person. [illegible] made by opponents [illegible] from the great towers [illegible] Little [illegible] the other ten," are [illegible] the universal monarchies attempted by the Papacy, Charlemagne, Charles V. and Napoleon have failed, the iron not amalgamating with the clay. In the king symbolized by the little horn, Antichrist, the man of sin, the son of perdition, the God-opposing, haughty spirit of the world represented by the fourth monarchy finds its intensest development. It is the complete evolution of the evil principle introduced by the full.

Popery seems to be a fulfilment of the prophecy in many particulars, the pope claiming to be God on earth, and above all earthly dominions, but the spirit of Antichrist prefigured by popery will probably culminate in one individual, to be destroyed by Christ's coming. He will be the product of the political world powers, whereas popery which prepares his way, is a church become worldly. As eyes express intelligence, and the serpent's promise was man's eyes should be opened, so Antichrist shall consummate the self apotheosis begun at the fall, high intellectual culture, independent of God. Nonuchadnezzar's human heart, given him on his repentance, contrasts with the human eyes of Antichrist, the pseudo son of man, viz, intellectual culture, while heart and mouth blaspheme God.

The "little horn" continues without intermission to persecute up to Christ's second advent. Antichrist rises after the ten, at first little, but after destroying three of the ten, he becomes greater than them all. The three being gone, he is the eighth, a distinct head, and yet of the seven. As Antiochus Epiphanes, the Antichrist of the third kingdom, was the personal enemy of God, so the final Antichrist of the fourth kingdom, his antitype.

The church has endured a pagan and a papal persecution; there remains for her an infidel persecution, general, purifying and cementing. He will not merely, as popery, substitute himself for Christ in Christ's name, but "deny the Father and the Son." As the persecution is to continue up to Christ's second coming, the hour of blasphemy cannot be past, for now there is almost a general cessation of persecution. Three attributes of Antichrist are specified. 1. The highest worldly wisdom and civilization. 2. The uniting of the whole civilized world under his dominion. 3. Atheism, antitheism and autotheism in their fullest development. The present external Christianity is to give place to an almost universal apostacy.

That literally three and a half years is to be the term of Antichrist's persecution is favored by chap. iv. 16, 23, where the year day theory would be impossible. If the church, moreover, had been informed that 1260 years must elapse before the second advent, the attitude of expectancy which is inculcated on the ground of the uncertainty of the time, would be out of place. For the first four centuries the days were interpreted literally; a mystical meaning of the 1260 days then began. Walter Brute first suggested the year-day theory in the end of the fourteenth century. It is possible that the year-day and day-day theories are both true.

But I will not continue these citations of which a small part may be referred to Tregelles. I wish to suggest incidentally, and I think pertinently, that the tendency of the times is manifestly toward lawlessness. There is marked contempt of authority. This is too plain to need elucidation. Notice the revolutionary declamation of hundreds in the principal cities. Observe that in some places the police are afraid to break up assemblages of turbulent and insurrectionary men, because of the threats of secret anarchism and conspiracy of law-defying organizers, against society and order and law. And that wicked one who was to be revealed is really Anomos, the lawless one; and the grand fabric of the last day opposition to God is based on the overthrow of law and society, church and government as hitherto existing. And it is worth noticing that as the world was a unit in evil, at the building of Babel, so again is its unity nearly ready to be revealed by the stimulating power of unbelief, with the wonderful facilities of steam and telegraph, which may be the complete servant and minister of evil, very quickly indeed. Says Dr. Morgan Dix, "In our day it looks as if the foundations of Christian education here been undermined so effectually [illegible] the great towers [illegible]

[illegible] Sister Kemp lost a dear mother of late who fell asleep in Christ. She is the oldest child of the family and her father is quite poor. The sister is a devout reader of THE RESTITUTION, but it is difficult for her to raise the money to pay for it. We know of no evangelist in the State. Our desire is that the brethren would rally to the standard and put one in the field. I feel that there is a great work ahead in the near future and that the Lord requires us to make a move. Let us be up and a doing that we may not be found wanting. Your brother in the faith.

Take Courage.

"The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him, in them that hope in his mercy." "The Lord taketh pleasure in his people."

Take courage, waiting ones! The Lord taketh pleasure in you. You fear him, you hope in his mercy, you expect to be saved by his strong arm. He delights in you. It pleases him to do you good, to preserve you from harm, to watch over you. He takes pleasure —comforting words! O precious, priceless book! What springs, what life-giving fountains are in thee!

Hitherto and Henceforth.

"The Lord hath blessed me hitherto." Josh. xvii. 14.

Hitherto the Lord hath blessed me,
Cheering all the way;
Henceforth let me trust him fully,
Trust him all the day.

Hitherto the Lord hath loved me,
Guiding by his eye;
Henceforth let me love him better,
Live for him alone.

If thus far the Lord hath blessed us,
Pardoning all our days;
Henceforth let us live to bless him,
Live to show his praise.

The Indian Boy's Revenge.

Several years ago Mr. Kay was in the northern part of California, near the Trinity river. He and his party had been trudging a long, long way that day, and were very tired and hungry. They came at last upon a camp of Indians on the river's bank, who were busy drying the fine salmon they caught there. These fish looked so good and tempting, that the white men [illegible] to taste them, and ventured to [illegible] would have but one. My [illegible] to buy the fish [illegible] to go to [illegible] bought some pret[illegible] which often please [illegible] better, as it is not easy for [illegible] get such things, living as they do away off among the wild forests and mountains of our great country. But these Indians seemed cross and sullen, and would not let the white men have their fish at all. They have been so badly treated by their pale brothers, that it is no wonder they feel hateful and want nothing to do with them oftentimes.

There was one, however, who cast a longing look at the beads, as if he was sorry not to get any for his squaw in the wigwam close by, and this gave Mr. Kay a bright thought. Holding up the string of beads again, he pointed to them and then to the fish in the river, saying in Chinook (a sort of Indian language), "You get us a fresh fish out of the water, and you shall have these beads." Snatching up his gig and spear, with which they catch these great fishes, he was off in a moment to get it. Another Indian standing by, seemed anxious to do the same, and Mr. Kay told him to follow and he should have some beads, too.

After the two men were out of sight, a little Indian boy stole softly up and looked so wistfully at the pretty beads lying there, that Mr. Kay bade him go and get a fish, too, and he would pay him in the same way. The boy gave a spring of joy and was gone like a flash toward the stream, in another direction from that taken by the men, as they would have been displeased with him if they knew he was fishing, too.

It was not long before the two men came back, each with a large fish, for which they got their string of beads. Soon the boy was seen also, running up the bank with a proud, happy face, lifting his fine fish to show what he had done, and perhaps thinking of the dear little Indian girl who would be very glad to get the beads he had earned so nobly.

Just then a strange thought came into Mr. Kay's head, for which he said he was always ashamed. He had often heard that the heart of the Indian was only bad—that the only good Indians were those who were dead. He wondered what this boy would do if he said he did not want the fish now, and so he could not have the beads. It would have made a white boy very angry. How would this untaught heathen child act? He would try and see.

As he sat there upon a rock, resting beside the beautiful river, he drew a long face when the boy came rushing up to him, and, with a look of his best, he said, "Be off with your fish! we have enough already without it." If the boy had been struck with a stone he would not have looked more pained and frightened in an instant the bright-ness was gone from his eyes, and there seemed to be no life in him, he was so stunned with unkindness and disappointment. After awhile, without a word, he turned slowly and sadly away towards the river, dragging the fish along behind him in the dirt, which a few moments before he had held aloft so proudly.

As if he could not believe the white man could be so false, he turned to look at him again. What was it that he saw? Down dropped the fish at his feet, and the fleet-footed boy was flying again up the bank toward Mr. Kay, giving him such a hard and sudden blow that he thought he had been shot with an arrow, perhaps, as he started up from his seat to feel himself all over to find how and where he was hurt. Was this the Indian boy's revenge? If it was, it only served him right, for he ought to have known better than to try his temper so severely. But the boy is pulling him up the bank still further, earnestly beckoning him to follow him up the hillside, away from the river, and he quickly does so, wondering what it all means.

The boy then pointed down to the spot where he had been sitting, and there was a deadly rattlesnake, coiled up behind the rock, just ready to spring upon him had he staid a moment longer. With manly tears of shame and gratitude, Mr. Kay looked at the noble boy beside him, finding no words to express his feelings. But he must in some way show his appreciation of the boy's conduct. How should it be? He should have more than his string of beads, anyhow. Feeling in his pocket, my friend found there his silver pocket comb, which he knew would be a wonderful prize to the Indian, who takes so much pride in his long black hair. This he handed to the child, who caught it eagerly, and, like a breath of wind, vanished over the brow of the hill and was seen no more.

Remember, this was one who had never learned the Golden Rule as you have, and yet returned good for evil. Have you found "the more excellent way" of "charity that suffereth long and is kind"—that "never faileth," but ever seeks to overcome evil with good?

Dear Children:

It is written, "The faith of the just is as a shining light, shining more and more unto the perfect day." Truly the memory of such is blessed. Among the seven who were chosen to be deacons, was a holy man whose name signifies "one crowned." He was full of faith and the Holy Spirit, and so powerful were his arguments for the truth of God that the learned Jews in the law were not able to resist the wisdom and the Spirit by which he spake. While unfolding God's wonderful way from the beginning, and his forbearing love toward his chosen nation, the unbelieving Jews caught him and brought him to the council. Then false witnesses were produced who testified he spake against God and Moses. The patient, noble prisoner stood alone in the Court without a person to plead his cause, but being mighty in the exposition of the Scriptures, he wielded this weapon of warfare to condemn his accusers.

His arguments were of a very weighty character, which attracted the council's earnest attention, and they steadfastly gazed on him while he was pleading for the truth, and as they looked on the intelligent face of the prisoner, his beaming, beautiful countenance was like the face of an angel. This impressed the council so much that they seemed willing to give him a hearing. The High Priest then said to him, "Are those things so?" Being greatly encouraged that the Jews, who were his brethren, would listen to him, he continued his discourse until he proved to them, that, "They, like their fathers, had resisted the Holy Spirit, persecuting the prophets and putting to death those who had spoken of the Just One." He faithfully told them they were betrayers and murderers.

This fidelity on his part aroused extreme bitterness in the cruel Jews, who were cut to the heart and gnashed upon him with their teeth. But he being full of the Holy Spirit looked up steadfastly into heaven and saw the glory of God and Jesus standing at the right hand of God, and said, Behold I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God. Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord; and they cast the noble prisoner, who was a faithful witness, out of the city and stoned him to death. And the accusers laid down their clothes at a young man's feet whose name signifies "death, or the grave." And they stoned the "crowned one" while he was calling upon God and saying, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." And while he was dying from the cruel effect of the heavy stones cast upon him, he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge, and when he had said this he fell asleep.

Surely such an one is fit to wear a glorious crown. O, if we could only be a faithful witness for the blessed truth of God as he was, such a noble soldier for the mighty conflict between good and evil! No doubt when he entered the synagogue his earnest zeal filled him with hope that he might be the means of leading some of his Jewish brethren to acknowledge that Jesus whom they had crucified was their true Redeemer, especially as it is testified that many priests had become obedient to the faith. His dying breath was poured forth like his blessed Master's, in earnest supplication for the forgiveness of his murderers.

Your affectionate teacher,

E. COFFMAN.

A PRAYER FOR THE RESTORATION OF THE JEWISH NATION.

ROMANS X. 1.

"Father of faithful Abram hear
Our earnest prayer for Abram's seed,
Who wander homeless far and near,
In suffering, sin, reproach, and need;
Whose good things we by faith obtain,
And Christ, by their rejection, gain."

No man, who does not take a deep interest in the gathering together of Israel to their own land, knows the glad tidings of salvation revealed in the Scriptures; because our own salvation is so intimately connected with it. Paul in writing to the Romans (x. 1) says, "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved." If this was Paul's great desire and prayer it will be ours if we know the purposes of God. Israel have not been "saved" since Paul's day, but are still wandering, homeless, scattered in every nation under heaven, on account of their sins. Ere they settled in the land of Canaan, after leaving Egypt, Moses, their leader, warned them in the most plain and emphatic language (Deut. xxviii., 58–64) that if they did not fear this glorious and fearful name, "The Lord thy God," then (v. 63) "it should come to pass that as the Lord rejoiced [illegible] you to do you good, and [illegible] you, so the Lord will rejoice [illegible] you to nought, and ye shall be plucked [illegible] from off the land whether thou goest to possess it; and the Lord shall scatter thee among all people from the one end of the earth even to the other." Nevertheless they rebelled against the God who had chosen them to be "An holy people unto Himself;" they sinned against "His glorious and fearful name," and, in the language of the faithful prophet Isaiah (i. 4) they were a "sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters." Notwithstanding the constant warnings of the prophets whom God raised up amongst them from time to time, they waxed worse and worse, and when "the Lord of the Vineyard" sent "His well-beloved Son" to them, they said "this is the heir, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours." They rejected Christ, not by their rejection of him we, the Gentiles, who by nature are "a wild olive tree" (Rom. xi. 17), have, in God's mercy, been privileged to be grafted in, and to partake of the root and fatness of the olive tree" if we accept God's plan and carry out his will.

"Outcasts from Thee and scattered wide
Through every nation under heaven;
Blaspheming Him they crucified,
Unsaved, unpitied, unforgiven;
Branded like Cain, they bear their load,
Abhorred of men, and cursed of God."

Though scattered in every nation, they are still an unrepentant people; though persecuted as they have been in all countries, they still blaspheme him they crucified; they still disown him as their Messiah, and, like branded Cain, they wander in the earth, "an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word among all nations whither the Lord has driven them." Deut. xxviii. 37.

"But hast Thou finally forsook,
Forever cast Thine own away?
Will Thou not bid the murderers look
On Him they pierc'd, and weep and pray?
Yes, gracious Lord, Thy word is pass'd;
All Israel shall be saved at last."

We believe Israel has drunk the cup of God's wrath nearly to the dregs, and that the day is fast dawning when their hard hearts will be broken, when their blind eyes will be opened, and God will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and supplication and they shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for his firstborn." Zech. xii. 10. Christ "will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried, and they shall call on my name and I will hear them." He will say, "It is my people," and they shall say, "The Lord is my God." Zech. xiii. 9. Let us, therefore, join in the prayer:

"Come, Hope-ful of Delaware, come,
The well from Jacob's heart removed:
Bless Thy ancient people home.
Christ—quickened by Thy deathless love—
In Christ re-every we may find Life from the dead for all mankind."

THE BIBLE.

No fragment of an army ever survived so many battles as the Bible; no citadel ever withstood so many sieges; no rock was ever battered by so many hurricanes, and so swept by storms; and yet it stands. It has seen the rise and downfall of Daniel's four empires. Assyria bequeathe a few mutilated figures to the riches of our national museum. Media and Persia, like Babylon, which they conquered, have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. Greece faintly survives its historical fame; and iron Rome of the Cesars has long since ceased to boast. And yet the book that foretells all this still survives. While nations, kings, philosophers, systems, institutions have died away, the Bible engages now men's deepest thoughts, is examined by the keenest intellects, stands revered before the highest tribunals, is more read and sifted and debated, more devoutly loved and more vehemently assailed, more defended, more denied, more industriously translated and freely given to the world, more honored and more abused, than any other book the world ever saw. It survives all changes, itself unchanged; it moves all minds, yet it is moved by none; it sees all things decay, itself incorruptible; it sees myriads of other books engulfed in the stream of time, yet is borne along till time shall be no longer.—H. N. Lane.

If we say that life is rich, full, and satisfying, the tendency is towards a material and luxurious use of it; if we hold that it is gloomy, bitter, and despicable, then the sooner it is over and done with the better; but if we discriminate and avoid all one-sided inductions, if we estimate it from the proper standpoint, then will it appear worth redeeming and ennobling, and we shall find that the action and reaction, the flux and reflex influences, the circling and circulatory movements, going on everywhere, may be turned to the best account. Consider the [illegible] advantaged by human character, and that character gets its finest development not through blind choices or chances, but the fellowship and service of the divine, then you may prophesy that condition of things which Emerson says: "When a man lives with God, his voice shall be sweet as the murmur of a brook, and the rustle of the corn."—J. R. Kerr, D. D.

for only Twenty-five Cents for Three Months. We feel certain that if we can get two persons to take our paper and read it for Three Months, at least one of them will not do without it. If we can get One Thousand names of this kind added to our list, we think Five Hundred of them will continue to be subscribers.

Will [illegible] one who knows send us the present address of W. J. McIntosh, formerly of Eau Claire, Wis. He went to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and there we lost track of him. We are anxious to find his present address. Can any one tell us of him?

ON OUR BOOK SHELVES.

Paper cover, former price, 50c.; now 25c. Friends, you who are at work in the Master's vineyard, think of this chance offered you from week to week to get the book that gives the foundation of our hope in the clearest manner possible, for so little money. It is not right for these books to remain long on our shelves. There is work for them all over the land. "Key Words" is another work by the same author, former price 25c.; now 15c.; and "Thanatopsis," former price 10c.; now 5c.

Have you any smart infidels in your neighborhood? Do they sneer at and ridicule your views of the Bible? If you have we have a little work here that will aid you in routing them completely, and if you have none near you now you can scarcely stir many miles without meeting one, and if you are posted in their theories you have already won half of the battle. Sister Steed's little book, "Creation vs. Evolution" is the work we refer to, and all should possess a copy. Price 25c.

Our lamented Brother Magruder's "Reply to Ingersoll" is another book that should be more largely circulated. It is just what its name indicates—a Reply to Mr. Ingersoll—a reply that Mr. Ingersoll or any other infidel will not even try to answer, so it stands, for its foundation is laid in God's holy word. Price 50c.

The Gift of Life Eternal through Jesus Christ is the great subject for us. Eternal Life a Free Gift. Brother J. H. Pettengill has written a book on this subject, and all who read it say the work is well done. We can send you a copy for $1.00.

We write and talk much of the Kingdom and its Restoration. Brother Silas Henn has written a book on this subject that will aid us very much in our study of the Kingdom and the wonders of the Restoration. One dollar will place it on your table.

There have been different ages and dispensations in the past—we live now—there is an Age to Come, and Bro. Weethee has told us in his work on this subject, the result of his life-time's search as to the nature and the proximity of the age coming hereafter. This is a large book of over 500 pages. Price $3.00.

Space will not admit of mention of half what our shelves contain. The Emphatic Diaglott, by B. Wilson; Christ's Kingdom, Where is it and What is it? by Jos. Lacier; A Translation of Matthew's Gospel, by Chas. Gardner; that grand work, A Letter to a Friend, by Mrs. Woodruff; Which is Right? or is Christ's Throne in Heaven or on the Earth? by [illegible] Then Shall Thou [illegible] Sermon; A L[illegible] ister, by Daniel H[illegible] of Baptism, besides a [illegible] little silent leaflets that work [illegible] times. When you are resting, being wearied, they keep on. Who will help circulate these books? They are all good. There may be an isolated expression that some might object to, but the teaching in the main is endorsed by all our best writers and thinkers. We are ready to fill your orders. See advertisements in other parts of this paper.

MARCHING TO CANAAN.

Shout! the Lord is coming soon, oh exalt it forth in song,
Sing it with the spirit and the happy strain prolong;
Sing as we ought to sing with hope and faith so strong,
While we are marching to Canaan.

Chorus:
O shout! O shout! the song of victory
O praise! O praise! the Lord who makes us free;
So we'll sing his praises till he brands the publican,
While we are marching to Canaan.

How our pulses quicken as we hear the joyful sound!
How so earnestly we'll tell it to the world around—
May this hope, as ever, cheer us till our heads are crowned,
While we are marching to Canaan.

Long the church has waited through this mystery of times,
Robed in weeds of widowhood for eighteen hundred years;
Now, with head uplifted, breaks she forth in lofty cheers,
As the bridegroom fair Canaan.

Christ the Lord is coming soon, repeat the glad amen,
Sound it from the mountain top, proclaim it to the plains
Raise all tongues the anthem high to hail his coming reign,
While we are marching to Canaan.

Hail the heir to David's throne, obey and praise him now,
At whose feet the great must fall, and nations humbly bow—
Brighter crowns will deck your heads than deck the monarchs brow,
When all get safely to Canaan.

Editor Restitution:

Let me say once more to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, that I am still in the field trying to spread the good news of a coming kingdom.

On the second Sunday in June, I was in Linn Co., at what is called the Battlefield School house, near the spot where the famous Price, the Rebel General, made his raid on the Union soldiers, or rather citizens that lived in their quiet homes, over twenty years ago, near our Bro. Perry's and his once happy family, but made lonely by the death of Sister Perry, who now is asleep in Jesus. Well, it was at that school house that I began to battle with error, Friday evening, before the second Sunday, in June. I used the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God, and error had to suffer, while truth cut its way, and by [illegible] were released—two [illegible] and two from [illegible] assisted [illegible]ist by baptism, and [illegible] then made free from sin, and became the servants of righteousness. We all enjoyed the meeting. I formed the acquaintance of B. Grayton, and others. And then I met Bro. Kinsey, the old soldier of the cross, still as determined to fight his way through as ever. And C. Deming, and many others. Well I need not say that Bro. Perry did not do his duty in the way of making the brethren and friends comfortable, for he always does that, and more, he always remembers them that labor in word and doctrine. He knows that a man cannot live and preach without something besides the preaching, so he is always liberal. On Thursday before the third Sunday in June, I went to the Potasa School house, where our beloved Bro. Isaac Searight, formerly lived. There we met with many old friends, but were still on the same field of battle where the same Rebel General Price made his raid. And another battle commenced, and the result was that Green Searight, the oldest son of the Searight family, who is past 50 years of ago, and who was a universalist all his life until he found that man had to seek for immortality, and who like a good soldier when he found out that he was fighting against God, did not confer with flesh and blood, but was at once buried with Christ by baptism. Go thou and do likewise. Well into the hands of God we commended them and left for home. When I got home there was a letter for me from Chautauqua Co. Kan. from Bro Arey Barnes, one that I buried in baptism some 18 years ago. On July the 2, in company with Bro. Barnes we started in an open buggy for the above Co. by land 78 miles. The weather was warm, dry and dusty. We landed at Cherryvale the first day where we expected to talk for our Seventh-day Adventists. But they concluded that a prayer meeting would be better than to let a free man —a man under grace—talk to them. The third day came and off we started for a 44 mile trip. We landed at a place called Havanah. There we stopped to feed and rest up a little and also feed the outer man. There we met about 5,000 people celebrating the 3d day of July. And also met some old time friends, and nothing would do but that I must give them a little song—the old "Thousand year's Restitution" and give them a little speech.

But as I had not taken any part in anything of that kind for over 25 years I did not know what to say. So to begin with I gave them as a foundation Acts iii. 19, 20, 21, and Rev. xx. 21, 22, and raised quite a little stir amongst the people. Bid them farewell and started for Peru 12 miles further on to Bro, A. Barnes' where we met sister Barnes and family, partook of some refreshments and then two miles further to the place where we expected to do some talking. There we made acquaintances with Bro. and Sister Tile, had a good time and gave them a discourse on the plan of the ages. But there was one thing lacking or missing at Bro. Barnes. For old Sister Barnes was not there, though she was there 12 years ago. but now lives in Chicago, Ill., if still alive. Well we had a good time. On the 4th day of July, 1886, Bro. Baker put on Christ by baptism in a nice beautiful stream, and we broke bread and partook of wine that same evening being some seven in number. So our little meeting closed with singing.

My journey was only a flying trip as I am poor and the brethren are poor, and, as my help was needed at home, on Monday, in the same buggy we started for Havanah 12 miles. There at just 4 o'clock I took Nahum's chariot, and started for home, and on Tuesday just 15 minutes after 4 o'clock I landed at home and found all well. May the good Lord bless and comfort the new converts, and keep them unto his Heavenly Kingdom is my prayer. And may those that have the means send out laborers into the field for what is done must soon be done. Yours in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

JOHN FOORE.

Editor Restitution:

I have had it in my mind to write to you from the time I left New York for a visit to old associates and associations in Ireland, Scotland and England, but somehow my time was so fully occupied that I was absolutely unable to carry out this wish; and since my return (one month ago) I have been so engaged that I have deferred until now. Among the first things I did on my return (I was absent about ten weeks) was to go through the accumulation of RESTITUTIONS and cull therefrom some very precious morsels, well suited to the appetite of a healthy stomach.

[illegible] contemplate, is now virtually annihilated, and we go and we come long distances, not as journeys, but as matter of course! Here especially is this true, where men of business have to cross the ocean several times a year; to them and to their families and friends it has become a thing of very little count.

"Birds of a feather flock together," so, whenever I could find any who were holding "life" views, and hoping the coming of our Lord Jesus, you may be sure I was not slow in making my way thither. I carried with me a "Letter of commendation" from "the Church of God" with which I here associate, and it proved a passport into "good society"—the very best; for if the sons and daughters of men, by a changed relation, even by the obedience of faith, can become the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ, what higher or nobler beings tread this our earth?

I cannot too highly commend the practice of arming a brother or sister, whose purpose it may be to visit new scenes and form new acquaintances, with a "letter of commendation". It serves a double purpose, it saves those who carry it from embarrassment, and saves those among whom said visitor should go, for there are those who "creep into houses," etc., and such seldom carry such letters. I can heartily and thankfully express myself towards the churches at Glasgow and Edinburg, for there I was made perfectly at home, and to me it was an exceedingly pleasant matter to associate with such brethren as R. K. and Matthew Strang, Hitchcock, Norrie, Laing, Wilson, Dowie, Hay, and a host of others, whose memories hold a fixed place in my affections.

While in London I visited at "Mizpah Chapel," where the very excellent scholar and teacher, Dr. Leask, for many years sounded out "Life and Incorruptibility" to the dying sons of men. His absence was felt by me, for as a reader of the Rainbow I had so often pictured him before his charge, the church, to whom he so ably ministered! But the enemy against whom he so long waged war, has entered in and numbered him among those who "cry, how long?" Here I met with Brother David Strang, who is doing a good work for the truth of God in showing men how they may escape the judgments and stand before the Son of man justified by faith! I also renewed the acquaintance of N. Starkey, who now ministers where Dr. Leask did. For many years these "chapel" walls have echoed the call to come to Christ; here many have gone out to carry the news, so strange to many, and to us so glorious, of "life and incorruptibility through Jesus Christ" and of a coming King and kingdom.

However others look upon and act, I could but express, and do so express, my sympathy and aid, in every movement having for its end the exaltation of Christ and the glory of his name! Men are but mortal and ever erring; he is immortal and the offspring of the Eternal One, with whom is no variableness or shadow of turning. I have a growing feeling looking to results other than to means; not in anywise do I set aside the foundation principles given us in the Holy Writ. Many men have many minds, and in the mass (of humanity) are fish of many kinds," and if it were not so, then what Jesus said fails of its significance. "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men."

I have no desire to "find fault" with the existing tone and temper of our brethren here or there; but simply to suggest that while on the one hand we see much that savors of fanaticism among the "sects," is there not something among them we could well imitate and profit thereby? It is said, "The proof of success is success," and while to a lamentable extent there has been too much hand and glove business with the church and world, are we so circumscribed that we must for ever and ever go on as we have, not having the "unity of the Spirit" as we should and might have; but little or no unity of action as a body of "called out" ones, to herald the most glorious truths that were ever sounded in mortal ears?

Recently an effort has been made to get the sense of certain "leading" men as to a conference in which the questions of conditional immortality, and the pre-millennial advent of Christ" should form the topics of consideration. The result thus far is, with one or two exceptions, a decided want of interest, some expressing themselves fearful lest by their showing hands in this, they may lose "cast" in the denomination they now are, or some petty reason (?) why they prefer to stay where they are. The fear of evil will not call a dog, but bad dog," is ever before [illegible] is on the Lord's side, come out and help slay this monster error which makes man an immortal by nature! Think of the trash which warps the mind and is retailed in blank verse. Here is a specimen:—

"Blest be the stroke that bursts those fleshly chains!
That bold the immortal spirit clogg'd and bound,
Grov'ling indeed and confined to the earth:
Then shall this better part, this heaven-born soul,
Spring from its prison and quit the quivering clay;
Fly on free wing exulting up the sky,
And in a moment reach the throne of God;
Then shall I know, and love, and serve him more."

If, it was once asked of a certain "Professor" of theology, if the sun should come between heaven and the escaping soul, what would it (the soul) do? to which the learned Professor said, Why, go right through it!

Thirty-two years had elapsed since my former visit to England, and I confess I was greatly surprised at the wonders wrought. The people were unlike what they were, and I did not marvel greatly at it, for the intercommunion of the two nations was so great that identically they seemed one people, and I would stand and question, am I thirty-five hundred miles from home, or is it an illusion?

While in London I had the pleasure of hearing Edward White, author of "Life in Christ," etc., etc., make an address at an annual gathering of a Baptist Church association, with which I was well pleased. I regretted my inability to visit at his home; want of time and not want of disposition prevented me. I am glad to be at home, and again privileged to mingle with those of like precious faith—more precious than ever, because so much error abounds.

GEO. W. YOUNG.

Editor Restitution:

On Sunday, July 4, 1886, we met with a few of the brethren of like precious faith, for the purpose of organizing a church or a congregation of the Church of God. The place where we met is Fairview School House, Furnas Co., Neb. Your correspondent preached to a goodly number in the morning on the "Restoration of Israel." After the sermon we called the meeting to order and proceeded to organize a meeting for the purpose of adopting a constitution. Brother A. Adams was elected chairman pro tem. The constitution was then read and adopted, after which the meeting was adjourned sine die. The meeting was at once called to order and we proceeded to organize a church according to the constitution. Brother A. Adams being chosen pastor took the chair as moderator. The deacons then were elected by formal vote without public nomination, one to go out of office each year. R. P. Story Senior Deacon, N. H. Hornaday Junior Deacon, C. L. Story Church Clerk, A. N. Harlow Treasurer; no Trustees from the fact that the brethren have no church property, but all this is provided for in the constitution.

We then adopted twenty-five articles of faith simply as a definition of our belief subject to amendment when found necessary in order to teach right doctrine. A covenant was subjoined which was also adopted, after which thirteen names were subscribed. Church was then dismissed, after which a meeting was held for the purpose of organizing an Executive Committee to be comprised of all preaching brethren in southern Nebraska; A. Adams, President, and J. S. Miller, Secretary. The church then requested that A. Adams be regularly ordained to the work of the gospel ministry. The conference meeting then adjourned till September 10, when we should meet in the capacity of an Annual Conference of Southwestern Nebraska, the first organization of this church in this State. All preaching brethren will please send in their names to J. S. Miller, Sec., Cambridge, Neb.

At 5 o'clock p. m. we met again in the capacity of a church with a good attendance. Meeting opened by song service, prayer by A. Adams and sermon by J. S. Miller, "The Downfall of Babylon," after which Brother A. Adams was ordained to the work of the ministry. Ordination prayer and charge by J. S. Miller; benediction by the candidate. J. S. Miller was then engaged to preach the first Sunday in each month hereafter until further notice. Brother Miller has been offered a church and a salary by the Congregational church if he would renounce the doctrines and preach for them as they believe. But he prefers to work at his trade and cling to the truth as he now understands it. He preaches the truth to a large audience in his own home besides other places where he has organized Sunday schools.

Fairview is situated seven miles southwest of Arapahoe on the B. & M. R. R. Preaching and Sunday school every Sunday. We want all the preaching brethren in this or any other State to come and help us on to success in our annual conference meeting which is to be held in the Great Republican Valley, beginning September 9; see notice. H. V. Reed and C. C. Ramsey are requested to let us know by letter what will be the expense of getting them out here and back again. Also Mrs. H. V. Reed, will you please write us and let us know if you can come, and if so what will be the expense. Address,

J. S. MILLER,
Cambridge, Neb.

Or, A Scriptural View of the Second Coming of Christ, with the Wonderful Signs that will Precede It, and the still more Wonderful Things that will follow It.

—BY SILAS HENN.—

NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS!

The book is truthful, exegetical and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to gratuitous speculation.—The Restitution.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Certainly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Sydney Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in the inquiry.....The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and to restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a wealthy, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

THE COMING AGE,

—IN—

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WESTHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which in late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the highest mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the numerous enquiries "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research, covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of startling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents tested views confident either with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensation yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $1.25. Send to this office for this work.

PAUL'S GOSPEL.

Reader, will you please read attentively and carefully what follows, while I inquire of the Scriptures as to what was Paul's Gospel. Remember, Paul was "the apostle of the Gentiles," and therefore we ought to be interested in his message; for he was sent by "the Lord Jesus, to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in him," Acts xxvi. 18. Then was his gospel different from the other apostles, or was it the same? "According to my gospel" is a phrase used by him three times in his epistles, Rom. ii. 16; xvi. 25; 2 Tim. ii. 8. Another passage implying the same thing is found in 1 Tim. i. 11, "according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust." Probably the reason why he called it "my gospel" was this, "I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me, is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ," Gal. i. 11, 12. "By revelation he made known unto me the mystery,....that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel; whereof I was made a minister," etc., Eph. iii. 3–7. Was any change made in the gospel by this special revelation of it to Paul, and by his appointment to publish it to the Gentiles? In order to ascertain the truth of the matter, let us appeal to the record of his preaching to both Jew and Gentile, as given by Luke in the Acts of the Apostles, and also what he wrote about it in his own letters.

Paul when writing to the brethren at Rome, said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," Rom. i. 16. This gospel he was sent to preach. "Necessity is laid upon me," said he to the Corinthians, "yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel," 1 Cor. ix. 16. The preaching of the gospel included the preaching of the cross of Christ, which was esteemed as foolishness by some, "but unto us which are saved it is the power of God," 1 Cor. i. 18. In verses 23 and 24 he says, "But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God." And again he says to the Corinthians, "Brethren, when I come to you, I come not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified," 1 Cor. ii. 1, 2. Paul's letters to the congregation at Corinth, are full of allusions to the gospel. He reminds them that "though they might have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet they had not many fathers; for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel," 1 Cor. iv. 15. As his beloved sons he warned them when he heard of them going astray, or in danger of denying the faith. When some of them denied the resurrection of the dead, he took occasion to remind them of the gospel he preached unto them by which they were saved if they kept in memory that which he had declared unto them. "For I declared unto you first of all, (en protois, among first things), that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried; and that he rose again in the third day according to the Scriptures," 1 Cor. xv. 1–4. These facts were essential items of the faith, and could not be set aside or denied without endangering their salvation; but there was something besides these three great facts which Paul included in his gospel. These things were among the first or chief things, he declared for gospel to them. What did Paul preach besides these things?

Turn to Acts xviii. for the introduction of the gospel into Corinth. Paul found Aquila and Priscilla there. Aquila was a Jew and a tent-maker, so was Paul; he lived and worked with them. On Sabbath-days he went into the synagogue and reasoned and persuaded both Jews and Greeks. Luke does not record what he said, but we may reasonably infer that he spoke of the Messiah and his glorious kingdom. Probably told them what Jesus told the two disciples, when on the road to Emmaus, that the Messiah was to be a sufferer before he could enter upon his reign of glory. At last, when Silas and Timothy joined him, he "was pressed in spirit;" or became more courageous, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ, even that Jesus of Nazareth whom they had rejected and crucified. That declaration roused up their angry feelings. They would not believe in a crucified Messiah. They had been taught that he would not die, but would live forever. Hence they opposed and blasphemed. "The cross of Christ was to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness." Paul preached first, Christ and his kingdom; second, that the crucified Jesus was the Christ. This necessarily included his death and resurrection. These were among the first or chief things he preached at Corinth.

There are many professing Christians at the present day who think that if they believe in Jesus as their Savior, that he died for their sins, and rose again for their justification, that they have believed all that is required of them, though they may ignore, or be ignorant of the gospel which Paul preached for the salvation of both Jew and Gentile. Now let us again inquire of the record as to what he preached. He said he was not ashamed of the gospel, but was ready to preach it at Rome also, the capital of the Roman empire. He went to Rome as a prisoner; but the word of God was not bound. The chief men among the Jews, at Paul's invitation came to see him, and asked him to speak to them, for they were anxious to hear for themselves what this "ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes" had to say for himself. Then they appointed a day, "and when there came many into his lodging, he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening," Acts xxviii. 23. Those who had heard him could not agree among themselves, for some believed, and some believed not. Then Paul quoting Isa. vi. 9, and applying it to them, concluded by saying, "Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it," ver. 29. After this conference with the Jews, we read that "Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him," verses 30, 31. The gospel which Paul preached and taught to all who came to hear him while prisoner at Rome, was 1st "The Kingdom of God; 2nd Those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ."

Again, while Paul was at Ephesus, we read that "he went into the synagogue, and spoke boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God." But when the Jews were hardened, and began to speak evil of that way publicly, he left them and separated the disciples, and disputed daily in the school house of one Tyrannus. "And this continued for the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks," Acts xix. 8–10. "The word of the Lord Jesus" was the word which God sent by him to the children of Israel, Acts x. 36, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, which was the gospel of the kingdom of God. See Luke iv. 14, 43, 44. Jesus himself was sent to preach the kingdom of God, then he sent his twelve disciples to preach it, and afterward seventy other disciples, Luke viii. 1; ix. 1–6; x 1, 6. All his preaching was to the Jews before the death of Jesus, and did not include the cross of Christ, or "the things which concern the Lord Jesus." These were added after the crucifixion and resurrection, when the apostles were sent to preach the gospel to every creature, and to offer salvation to all in the name of Jesus. Paul evidently had received the same gospel by revelation for he taught the same things. To the elders of the church at Ephesus, he said that he had while with them preached the kingdom of God, and declared unto all the counsel of God, Acts xx. 24–27.

One more reference to Paul's practice will suffice. See Acts xvii. Following his usual practice everywhere, at Thessalonica; he went into the synagogue on Sabbath-day, and reasoned with the Jews out of the Scriptures. He showed them that the Messiah was to die, and rise again from the dead, and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ. Some believed; but the unbelieving created an uproar, and took some of the brethren before the rulers of the city, charging them with treason, and with saying that there is another king, one Jesus. This incidentally shows that Paul's gospel was about a king and a kingdom, and that they thought Cæsar's reign might be interrupted or cut short, if these men were allowed their liberty. Then Paul went to Athens, the philosophic and idolatrous capital of Greece, and preached "Jesus and the resurrection," and that "God had appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead."

Though Paul received his gospel by special revelation, see Gal. i. 11, 12, yet it exactly agrees with that preached by the other evangelists. See Acts viii. Take Philip's preaching at Samaria, as an illustration. Philip preached Christ to the Samaritans; and "when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Exactly the same gospel Paul preached, and just the same method of making disciples, viz., hearing, believing, and being baptized. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism," Eph iv. 5.

And what kingdom was this that Paul, Jesus, and all the apostles preached so much about? It was the kingdom of God or of heaven, referred to over 100 times in the four gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. To his disciples, whom Jesus sent to preach this gospel of the kingdom, he said, pray ye, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." It was the kingdom of David promised to Jesus, Luke i. 32, 33. It was that which Jesus promised to the little flock, Luke xii. 32, and over which the apostles were promised rulership, Luke xxii. 28–30. This kingdom was that of Israel restored. Acts i. 6, 8; whose throne Jesus was raised from the dead to occupy, Acts ii. 30. It is the kingdom which the God of heaven will set up, immediately after the complete destruction of the last of the four universal empires, foretold in Dan. ii. and vii. It will follow right on as the fifth universal monarchy, which will have rule over all nations. What! Say some, an earthly kingdom! When Jesus plainly declared, "My kingdom is not of this world." We answer, not an earthly, but an heavenly kingdom, and located on earth. It was once located in Palestine, with Jerusalem for its metropolis, before it was overturned; and so it will be again when restored. Then the throne and tabernacle of David, which have been so long in ruins will be set up and rebuilt; "and in mercy shall the throne be established; and he (Jesus) shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging, and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness," Isa. xvi. 5; "then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously," Isa. xxiv. 23. It will be truly an heavenly kingdom, having an heavenly king, "the Lord from heaven," even Jesus; heavenly rulers, the apostles who preached the gospel concerning it, and those who believed and obeyed their word; heavenly laws, "minded on righteousness and truth;" an heavenly country, the land restored, and made like Eden, the garden of the Lord, Isa. li. 3; the restored tribes of Jacob, forgiven, and blessed as the subjects of the kingdom; with "all nations blessed in the seed of Abraham," as the dominion under the whole heaven. This kingdom will be everlasting, will have no successor, as all earthly kingdoms have, "it will stand forever." Its king and rulers will all be immortal, and consequently will be able to administer the affairs of an heavenly and enduring government.

In conclusion, I would ask you, dear reader, whether there is anything contained in Paul's gospel worthy of your attention. This gospel believed and obeyed is God's power for salvation. You are called by it to his heavenly kingdom and glory, to be a joint-heir with Christ, to a share in the government. Surely this gospel invitation is a high calling, a holy calling, a heavenly calling. It is a call to obtain glory and honor, a call to eternal life in God's kingdom. "Now is the accepted time, now is the appointed day of salvation."

May be this will be read by some minister who has been preaching that which is called gospel. Please compare notes. Have you preached Paul's gospel, or that of men? Paul speaks with authority to such. See Gal. i. 6, 9. If salvation is connected with Paul's gospel, how is it with yours? "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." The incorruptible seed by which we are begotten is that word which by the gospel is preached unto us. See 1 Pet. i. 23–25. "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things," Rom. x. 15; Isa. lii. 7.

B. WILSON.

[illegible]ennial [illegible] the Kingdom of Glory.

"BATTLE OF THAT GREAT DAY of the Almighty is drawing near, when we shall see the nations come down into the prophetic valley of Harmagedon for a spoil and a prey against toy people Israel. But the sacrifice will be made, Gentile times will end, while the Jews bury them there to fulfil Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. This brings us to Daniel's time of trouble, Dan. xi., and Jewish day of vengeance and year of redemption, Isa. lxiii. 1–4, and xxxiv. 8. This year of trouble is the final culmination of all present conditions, the end of the world and age, bringing the resurrection and the new heavens and new earth.

THE RESURRECTION.

And it is during this time of trouble that the sun and moon refuse to give their light, the stars withdraw their shining, the earth reels to and fro like a drunkard. But before, she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child. Isa. lxvi. 7; this is the first resurrection; blessed and holy is he that hath part in it. And now the second resurrection transpires, of the unjust; for as soon as she travailed she brought forth her children; Isa. lxvi. 8, and onward, shows who they are, while verse 20 shows their haste to return to Jerusalem and for what purpose and in what manner; verse 22 brings us to the new heavens and new earth once more, and in the next verse begins the worship of all flesh before the Lord. And when these events transpire this class of Scripture will be fulfilled, and we are nearer to it than most men suspect.

Will God accept them? Yes truly, saith the Lord God, there will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings. I will accept you and be sanctified in you, etc. Ezek. xx. 33–45. Again he says, I will cause the captivity of Judah and Israel to return, and I will build them as at first, and I will cleanse them from all their iniquity and they shall praise the Lord of hosts. Jer. xxxiii. Thus we have the return of Israel, their acceptance by God, and the confirmation of the new covenant with them so long ago promised them in Ezekiel xxxvi. 24–38, while the land is as the garden of Eden before them; Restitution. And when these things come to pass "in that day," this class of prophecy and God's word will be fulfilled. Fourteen hundred and twenty years after Sodom was burned, when the Jews were in captivity, God foretold of their return in the latter days by a new covenant, at which time also Sodom and Samaria would also return to their former estate. Ezek. xvi.

Again, "in that day," the ancient Egyptians and Assyrians shall know the Lord, and shall do sacrifice and oblation, yea they shall vow a vow unto the Lord and perform it; shall return to the Lord and he shall be entreated of them and shall heal them, in the great millennial age. Isa. xix. 19–25. Pharaoh and his hosts will be there comforted. Ezek. xxxi. 16–18; xxxii. 31, 32. Evidently the dead nations existing previous to Babylon the Head, will be restored at the second coming of Christ. This is the beginning of the restoration of all things. Acts iii. The Adamic race is one of the things spoken of by all the prophets to be restored to harmonious relations to God, and the restitution involves this necessity. For God hath appointed "a day" in the which he will judge "the world"—not the church—in righteousness, not in damnation and annihilation, by that man, that righteousness which is by faith, mercy and truth; compare Rom. iv. 5; Prov. xvi. 6, and Psa. xcviii. 9; Isa. xxvi. 9, 10. And the fact that non-age-to-come believers do not believe this does not make God a liar nor thwart his purpose, nor is he mocked.

All of these nations mentioned never were taught of God; for long centuries they have slept in the dust of the earth. Dust to dust was the Adamic penalty for himself and his race, and when that sentence is executed the requirements of God are met. That account is balanced and closed—paid; once to die, Heb. ix. 27, not twice as claimed by Christ Advents. But when they come forth in the resurrection it is for the purpose stated throughout the Bible. And in "that day" of 1000 years, God will make this proverb in Ezek xviii. 2, 3, 20 to cease; and there in verses 20, 21 is the covenant he has promised to make with "all mankind," with the rewards and punishments specified: the just shall live, shall not die; but the wicked will be cut off, ultimately. And in all this class of prophecy we have the history of the nations in the millennial age, and the conditions are also specified, especially in Isa. lxv. 17–25; Zech. viii. 22, 23. While the law goes forth out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

Thus we see that the wicked dead are to be put on probation for eternal life in the ages to come; and they are not only to be judged by Christ, the living word, John v. 22, but they are also to be tried according to their works, the written word and spirit. John xii. 48. And there are also others, judges, 1 Cor. vi. 2. Who are they? Who are those princes that are to rule in judgment? Isa. xxxii. 1. Who are these that shall be kings and priests of God in the resurrection? to reign with him the thousand years. Let us return to the gospel age and learn of him.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

at hand. We believe that the gospel of the kingdom is preached in the gospel age to secure the kingdom. In the days of these kings (Romans) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom; and it—this kingdom—shall never be destroyed. Now if the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, which is to break in pieces those kingdoms, is Christ, and the kingdom which God sets up is also to consume all these kingdoms. And the saints are to execute the judgments of Psa. cxlix. 5–8. Why then does not Christ and his church in the resurrection constitute "the kingdom of heaven?"

When Jesus sent out the twelve and the seventy, he instructed them to say that "the kingdom of God" hath come nigh unto you. Now what is implied in this but that those who were preaching Christ constituted a part of this kingdom in its embryo condition?

Again, "the kingdom of heaven" is compared to a certain king who made a marriage for his son. Matt. xxii. The first seven verses of this chapter had its fulfilment in the gospel message to the Jews, their persecution of Christians, and ends with the destruction of their city in A. D. 70. The parable ends with another message which secures the guests to the wedding of the Son. And this is what Jesus likens "the kingdom of heaven" to this son and the wedding guests.

Again, because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear, he spake the parable of the nobleman, who is Jesus our high priest; for more than 1800 years he has been away, he comes again; the ten pounds represent the Holy Spirit, the earnest of the true riches. Now he returns we shall be called before him to give an account of how much or how many we have gained by this merchandise of wisdom; how many we have brought to a knowledge of the truth; how much fruit we have brought forth. Then comes the reward of the faithful—eternal life in the age-to-come. Mark x. 29, R. V. So also in this likeness we have the kingdom of heaven represented in Christ as his faithful people. Then we are also to have authority over many cities, are to be rulers over the nations, the world, or age to come, will be put in subjection to Jesus, crowned with honor and many sons, Heb. ii. 5, 8, 10 and onward. Moreover, Jesus told them, there are some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom, and after six days they saw him in his coming glory, Matt. xvii. 2, which is at hand.

Again, shall not taste of death till they see "the kingdom of God." Luke ix. 27. Reader go with me to the Mt. of Transfiguration and look upon the glorified Jesus as he will be in that great coronation morning. He took them there to see the kingdom of God, that is, the kingdom which God is so soon to "set up." What did he show them to represent this kingdom? Answer, his own glory; and also Moses and Elijah in this glory who also talked with him; and his disciples also saw them. And with this array of parables in the New Testament, together with the scene on the mount, it does not seem to me that it required a philosopher to discern of what and whom "the kingdom of heaven" is composed.

Soon he comes, the nations are gathered in the valley of Jehoshaphat, Joel iii., the sign of the Son of man appears in heaven, the first resurrection takes place, the angels are sent forth to gather his elect. We shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob there, the prophets of the Jewish age and the elect of the gospel age, who are to be gathered to the general assembly in heaven, to the heavenly Mt. Zion, Heb. xii., to be washed and clothed with life and glorified; fashioned like unto his glorious body; be like him and see him as he is. And this elect glorified body of heavenly people, having celestial glory, 1 Cor. xv., and infinite power, constitute the "kingdom of heaven" in the millennial age, if there is any meaning in language. The final gathering will be in the clouds of heaven; proof in 1 Thes. iii. 15–18. Above Mt. Sinai "in the cloud," Gal. iv. 20–26, from which the line of march is taken up to Jerusalem in a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night. When God comes from Teman, the Holy One from Mt. Paran, his glory covers the heavens and the earth is full of his praise, to fulfil this class of prophecy. Hab. iii.

No pen can portray the scenes of that coronation morn. The sacrifice is made here, the devil is cast out and bound; in 1000 years the second resurrection of these dead nations occurs; and the kingdom of priests, the kingdom of heaven; the Christ reigns in them the thousand years, instead of the god of this world, Eph. ii. 2; over them personally and before his ancients gloriously. And in that day this question will be asked by these nations. Who are these that fly as a cloud and as doves to their windows? Isa. lx. 8, and the answer is in verses 9, 10, etc. The sons from far, their kings shall minister unto thee, unto the nations and Israel. These are "the kings and priests of God" that minister. Rev. xx. 6; v. 10. The abundance of the sea, the nations are to be converted unto thee. Isa. lx. 5–12, unto the Christ.

And again, those that have afflicted and despised God's people in this world, are to come bending to this kingdom of priests, and bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet. And they, the wicked, shall call thee the city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel, (vs. 14), the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord, the priests of the Lord, the ministers of our God, Isa. lxi. 6, and lxii. 12, "the kingdom of heaven." And it is for the manifestation of these sons of God that the groaning creation for long centuries has been waiting to see.

And those who attain to this glory and are leaders, are to shine as the firmament and as the stars for ever and ever; no more to turn to corruption, no more sorrow, sighing or death. But to live with him and reign with him the thousand years over the nations, and in them by his spirit and power. Then cometh the end (of the reign) when in a moment the kingdom, this kingdom of priests, the kingdom of heaven, is delivered up (not down) to God the Father, 1 Cor. xv. 24; and we pass into the sphere of fire, to the throne of God, and to the glory of immortality, a glory beyond flesh and blood. 1 Cor. xv. 50. And the next scene of the bride is in the likeness of God, having the crystal and jasper stone glory, and descending from God to fulfil Rev. xxi. 9, 10, and a vast amount of law and testimony. The blood signified not only the Holy Spirit, but the way into the holiest. Heb. ix. 8. First to the glory of the sun; second, and ultimately, to the likeness of the eternal God and Father. This is the goal, beyond which lies another order of resurrection when other conditions will obtain on earth, Rev. xx. 12, 13, and xxii., and probation for this class follows. In the millennial age there will be an earthly Jerusalem and people offering to the Lord in clean vessels, the corruptible having their sins washed away through the Christ, keeping the commandments of God, the law, and the testimony of Jesus.

Again there will be a heavenly Mt. Zion, an eternal city and people, now seen by faith, the strongholds of the daughter of Zion, and then, oh tower of the flock. Micah iv. 8 and Heb. xii. 18–23; 2 Cor. iv. 18; Rev. xxi. 2. The Incorruptible, the Christ, who is to sprinkle the former with clean water, and lead them in a way which they know not; in short, a double system of worship is to obtain, of which more anon.

Jewish Superiority.

In the Anthropological Section of the British Association the most important subject brought forward was that of a paper by Mr. Joseph Jacobs. It was entitled, "A Comparative Estimate of Jewish Ability." Mr. Jacobs aimed at throwing light on the greatest of all ethnological problems, viz., the persistent pre-eminence of Israelite humanity in all ages. The Germans are the kings of modern thought, science and war. Yet all the world knows what is the intolerant mortification of Teuton pride. The conquerors of the Gaul are conquered by the Jew, who is the real master of Russia, Poland, and Hungary. Persecution of the most bloody and barbarous kind has availed nothing. The Israelite financiers are masters even of our British market, and they quietly hold the kings and emperors of Europe in golden bonds. The Jew is amongst all nations the one persistent type. Dutchman and Swedes and Irishmen persist for a generation or two after emigration, but then they become Yankees, but the Jew, never. He abides in each land age after age. Now, Mr. Joseph Jacobs, after much investigation, tells us, as the result of his researches, that there is considerably greater chances of finding distinguished men among a million Jews than among a million Englishmen. We are convinced that Mr. Jacobs is right. The number of eminent Jews in England is far beyond all proportion to their numbers.—Christian Commonwealth.

It is faith that spans the great gulf between the known and the unknown, the visible and the invisible, the present and the future, with a bold bridge over whose springing arches there is a walking to and fro of the faithful soul, like the angels ascending and descending upon Jacob's ladder. Without faith, indeed, as deep a night broods over the soul and its pathway into eternity, as that which hangs like a pall before the eyes of the blind. And all the torches of philosophy and reason will be as vain to enlighten it, as to set an electric or a Drummond light before the rayless eyes of a man that has lost the sense of seeing.—Shearer's Correspondencies of Faith.

In our news column will be found a short account of the deposition of Alexander I., king of Bulgaria, from his throne last Saturday. The Chicago Journal makes the following remarks on his dethronement, and of its probable bearings on the Eastern Question. As this is the grand question of our age, in its connection with prophecy, let us watch its development.

"Russian diplomacy and military activity are carrying all that stands in the way of Russian progress. The expulsion of Alexander I. from Bulgaria by the Czar's intrigues is but a part of the Muscovite policy which includes the ultimate capture of Constantinople. A branch of the same policy was carried out in the establishment of Batoum as an armed seaport and fortress commanding the east half of the Black Sea. Another branch is the slow but steady advance of Russian occupation in Afghanistan. From every available point Russia is crowding toward India and obtaining control of the approaches that its progress in that direction will require.

The coup d'etat in Bulgaria is a decided surprise to the public, but it is claimed that Germany, Austria and England had notice a day or two previously that it would occur. Judging by the remarks of the foreign press, none of the great powers has decided, or knows, what course to pursue. Of course Russia is prepared to maintain its advanced position, and will not recede unless driven back by overwhelming force. It will keep what it has got at the risk of a general war.

Prince Alexander I. of Bulgaria, who was forced by the people to abdicate the rulership of that country last Saturday, was born April 5, 1857. He is a son of Prince Alexander of Battenberg (Hesse), brother of the late Empress of Russia and is the brother of the husband of Queen Victoria's daughter Beatrice. Alexander was elected Prince by unanimous vote of the Constituent Assembly, April 29, 1879, and assumed the government June 28, 1879. The principality of Bulgaria was created by the treaty of Berlin, July 13, 1878, article first of that treaty ordering that Bulgaria should be "constituted an autonomous tributary principality under the suzerainty of His Imperial Majesty, the Sultan." Bulgaria lies between Roumania and Eastern Roumelia on the north and south, and between the Black Sea and Servia on the east and west. Its area is about 24,360 English square miles and contained in 1881 a population of 2,007,919. About 70 per cent. of the people are of the orthodox Greek church, the remainder being Mohammedans and Jews."

Typographical Errors.

In Brother Monerieff's article on "Reason and Faith," in the sixth line from the commencement, read have for has; in the article on the "Millennial Age and the Kingdom of Heaven," in second column and fourth line from the foot, for lament read servants. The Editor was not at home to read proof sheets.

JUDGMENT. No. 2.

In pursuing this subject I shall enquire, have all men been judged by the gospel of Christ? To my mind, the man who assumes that all men, in all past ages, have heard the gospel, and have been put on trial under the gospel, or judged by the gospel, manifests a total ignorance of the history of our world both past and present, as also intense ignorance of the Scriptures on this point. I have proven in a former article, that all men must be brought into judgment under the preaching of the gospel. If they have not been thus judged, their judgment is yet future. Let us look at the world as we find it in this enlightened nineteenth century. About thirteen-fourteenths of those living at the present time are as ignorant of Christ and of the gospel as so many blocks of granite. Go back to those centuries denominated the dark ages. History informs us that during these years of papal barbarism, "The Scriptures had died out of the memory of man." It is a well known fact, that during those years of almost total religious darkness, the common people did not have the Bible at all, and they knew nothing of the pure principles of truth taught therein.

Even the lower orders of the priesthood hardly ever even heard of the Scriptures. Gibbon tells us that "For ten centuries Europe received her religious creeds from the oracles of the Vatican." The only religious doctrine taught or tolerated was the creed of the Harlot of Rome, except in a few isolated cases, by a few who by almost a miracle of divine interposition had secreted parts, and in very rare instances, whole copies of the Bible. From Pentecost down to 1877 not one out of a hundred of all that have lived on the earth have had any knowledge of the gospel of Christ. If the people of this dispensation have been so destitute of the knowledge of Christ, how much more destitute must they have been in the Old World? The Bible tells us plainly of the condition of the world back of the time that Christ was born. I will cite a few portion of Scripture that speak plainly on this point. "He sheweth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for his judgments, they have not known them." Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20.

This one Scripture, written by a prophet of Israel, one who had every facility for knowing whereof he wrote, one who wrote by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, declaring that in that old dispensation no nation under heaven save the nation of Israel, had known God or any part of his word; is amply sufficient to settle the question as to the condition of the world before the commencement of the Christian dispensation. There is, however, more proof on this point. I will give the testimony of another of the prophets of God. "Hear this word that the Lord hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, saying, You only have I known of all the families of the earth." Amos iii. 2.

The above Scripture is very emphatic, and declares in unmistakable, plain language that not one nation in that old dispensation was known of God save the nation of Israel. Again, "We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you, that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein; who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways." Acts xiv, 15, 16. This Scripture assures us that in the times back of this age, God made no effort whatever to save those "all nations" who never knew him. He suffered them to pass into death without so much as making one attempt towards making them acquainted with him or of knowing his plan to save, and if that death is eternal, God is eternally unjust; and this is the charge preferred against the God of the Bible by those who reject the truth, that there will be probation for those nations and those individuals who have had no opportunity to know God, and hear the gospel in this life. I pity the impious folly of such men. May they be led to repent before it is too late.

God, however, did not design that those nations should have a knowledge of himself in those past ages, or be brought into judgment under the gospel during this life. This is plainly taught in the following Scripture: "God that made the world, and all things that are therein, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things, and hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us." Acts xvii. 14-27. The plain teaching of the above Scripture is this: 1. God has created the world and everything in it. 2. He has made of one blood all nations of men, to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath given to them life, and breath, and all things. 3. He has determined the bounds of their habitations, that is, he has fore-determined the portion of the globe that each nation shall occupy. 4. He has determined the times before appointed, when each of these nations shall have an opportunity to seek after God. The individual that would dare assume, after seeing this Scripture in its true import, that God cares nothing whatever for those nations who have never as yet gained a knowledge of himself, or heard the gospel of his Son, must be hard pressed for means to evade a reasonable conclusion.

I am told by some, with hands uplifted in horror, "Why! this position involves a resurrection of these nations." Well, what of it? Has God made a mistake and involved himself in an inextricable difficulty? Is it indeed impossible for God to raise men who are not believers in Christ? Is anything too hard for the Lord? Who will attempt to sustain a purely humanly devised creed, by limiting the Holy One of Israel? One thing is impossible with God. It is impossible for him to lie. He will therefore keep his word in this case, and cause that all the nations, yea, that all men, shall have an opportunity to seek the Lord; they shall all be judged by the gospel of the Son of God; have the privilege of hearing the words of Jesus, and being saved if they believe those words. All this is as sure as it is impossible for God to lie. Do the Scriptures teach a resurrection of both classes of the dead? Certainly, and that so plainly that it has always required a large amount of special pleading to fritter away the true import, rather than receive the plain teaching of those Scriptures. I propose to deal kindly but faithfully with this part of my subject. "I first refer to Rev. xx. 11-15. The first statement in this portion of the Apocalypse is this: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God." Who are these dead ones? They certainly are not the saints. The saints are raised but from among the dead ones. Paul earnestly labored and suffered for this purpose, namely, "If possibly I may attain to the resurrection out of the dead ones." Phil. iii. 11, Em. Dia.

Those who obtain that resurrection will be equal to the angels, and will die no more, because they are like the angels. Luke xx. 35, 36. Em. Dia. Mark, it is those who obtain that age, and that resurrection, who will be thus privileged. What resurrection? "That out of the dead ones." "The dead ones" from among which the saints are raised, and saints are surely two classes. Again these dead ones are raised to be judged. I have proved that the world is to be judged according to the divine plan, by the gospel only. The saints who are raised when Christ comes, have already been judged by the gospel. They have heard it in this life, believed and obeyed it, and as a reward get immortality by a resurrection out from among the dead ones, at the appearing of Jesus, the Messiah. This resurrection to immortal life is the execution of judgment in their case, and is necessarily the last act of judgment. They cannot, therefore, be brought forth to be judged.

Christ declares plainly that the saints shall not come into the judgment beyond this age. "Indeed, I truly say to you, He who hears my word, and believes him who sent me, has aionian life, and comes not into judgment, but has passed out of death into life." John v, 24. Em. Dia. The word translated judgment is krisis, and is rendered condemnation in the Common Version. Its only correct rendering is, undoubtedly, judgment. Thus I prove that into that judgment which the word of God locates beyond the coming of Christ, the elect saints will not come; therefore the dead spoken of in Rev. xx. 12, who are raised to be judged, cannot possibly be the "dead in Christ." The man who says they are, virtually charges Christ with falsehood. The second statement made in this prophecy is as follows: "And the books were opened; and another book was opened which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Mark, the dead were not judged out of the book of life, but out of the things written in the books. What books? Having clearly proved that all men are judged by the gospel only, it necessarily follows that the "books" out of which these raised dead ones are judged, are those books which contain a record of the gospel of Christ.

To be judged by these books, they must first be put on trial by having the contents of these books, the gospel, clearly made known to them, and second, according as they either believe or reject the gospel, so will decision be entered either for or against them individually; and third, that decision will be executed, by giving to endless life to believers, and eternal death to those who willfully reject the gospel of the Son of God. Such is the order of God's judgment, whether administered in the past, present or future ages.

In order seemingly to doubly enforce the great facts already stated in this chapter, it is added as an explanatory paragraph, "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hades delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works." Vs. 13. So sure as there are unregenerate dead ones in the sea, in death and in hades, they will at some future time be "delivered up," brought out of the sea, death, and hades, that they may be judged, or this record is false. Nothing can be more clearly stated than the facts named above, and the record is true, and woe to the man that falsifies the record God has given us. Not one of the saints, however, is numbered with this company. They passed their judgment in this life, and had been previously raised out from among the dead ones.

Then is noted the winding up of the great drama, when death and hades shall be destroyed, and "then all the race shall have been judged out of "the books," by the gospel of Christ, an examination of the book of life is made, all who are not found written in the book of life die "the second death." The reason why the book of life will be opened in the judgment of the future ages, is that all who believe and obey the gospel, may be recorded in that book; I earnestly believe that the above view of the judgment is, in the main, entirely correct. Dear brethren and sisters, a great and important and glorious work is before us, one that will last through a long, uncounted succession of ages. None save those who have a thorough preparation for that work will be permitted to enter upon it when the ages of glory shall dawn. God has been preparing such a people, a [illegible] tion of judgment and years. The work of p[illegible]n is still going forward. He is preparing his elected ones, perfecting them in suffering, to hold this three-fold honorable position of king, priest and judge. The work is evidently almost completed. The number of the elect ones is nearly full. Every indication seen through the prophetic telescope shows the ushering in of the ages of glory, by the appearing of our Messiah, to be emphatically near. May we all see to it that we make our calling and election sure, that we may share in the glory of the endless ages.—S. W. Bishop, in Bible Examiner.

OVERCOMING.

"Only a mortal's powers, Weak at their fullest strength."

"Strength, made perfect in weakness!" "He knoweth our frame, He remembereth that we are dust."

To the poor, frail mortal, with all the pains and infirmities of the flesh to combat, and the evil inclinations of the heart to overcome, it seems out of the question, ever to attain to a likeness to the divine and perfect Savior.

And, is such a thing possible? Can even a faint picture of that glorious life, be formed out of our lives? Can we "overcome by the blood of the Lamb" and come off "more than conquerors through him that loved us?"

It is possible, "whosoever will may come." The will, the desire of the heart, may be made captive to God's will and desires, and the rest is easy. To feel all the time a consciousness that we are God's subjects, that the claims of his law and love are about us; that we are bound to him and must not sin, is one great secret of the Christian's power. Obedience to the law of adoption has been rendered. The helpless, sin-burdened one has through compliance with that law been made a child of the great and holy family of God. He must now bear himself as becomes the child of such a mighty King, must put on the behavior of divine royalty, must form a character that will make him "meet for an inheritance with the saints in light."

He must now do, not as he pleases, but as God pleases. His heart must melt and soften, until he can go against his own will and pleasure where God wants him to go, that he may please God. His likes and dislikes must be laid aside. He must go to meeting because it is God's will that he should go, not to be pleased, but to please God, and because his going will benefit and bless others.

Oh, I tell you dear ones, our wills must give way, if we would be Christ-like! The stubborn "I won't," and the disheartening "I don't want to," must find no place in our vocabulary, if we would ever attain unto that world and to that resurrection from among the dead. We must love men; must treat them with Christ-like compassion, if we would bring them to Christ. He that would overcome, must be considerate of the feelings of others, he must not wound by avoiding or shutting himself away from those, whose personal peculiarities, are distasteful to him. Others may wound but he must bless: others may curse but he must save.

Oh for more of the love of God shed abroad in our hearts! less of self and more of God!

We want to strive for this until we can say from the inmost depths of the heart,

"Higher than the highest heaven,
Deeper than the deepest sea,
Lord, thy love at last has conquered,
None of self, and all of thee!"

It is love of self, that keeps us from overcoming, love of self, that makes us dislike and shun men. But think; God has loved us, so loved us that he has given his only begotten Son to die on our behalf. While we were yet sinners, Christ died. Was there—Is there nothing unlovable in us? no weakness, no infirmity? We know there is, we know that we have no worth nor worthiness of our own to commend us. Let us then be compassionate for others, pitiful, forgiving. God is, Christ is. We want to be like them; we want to bear the image of Jesus. We want to shine as the stars in the ages of glory. How can we do it? How can we overcome? By a constant crying to God for help, and by a constant binding of the will to the Divine will. Bring yourselves to love and to do good to those whom you now hate. Let your conduct, your words, be such that they too may be led to glorify God.

I used to think that when suffering from intense pain, we could not help speaking hasty words, could not help being fretful and hateful. We can help it. God's grace is sufficient even here, we can overcome, or God's word is not true. But it is true, bless his holy name, forever and ever! I have found it true. I rejoice every day in having found a place of refuge; in having laid hold of the strength that comes from on high.

There is no temper, nor disposition of the human heart, that cannot be changed. The bluest melancholy, the veiest mirth, the restlessness of illness and the selfishness of self, the hatefulness of hateful hearts, the blasphemous oath, the most frightful temper, all vanish when we are indued and in truth, brought into subjection to the law of God. These things have no place in the divine life. It is "to walk in newness of life" that we have been raised from the watery grave. We are to walk as we imagine we shall walk over there, behave as we think we shall behave over there, feel as we think we shall feel over there.

I want you all to feel that you can overcome, that you must overcome, to have any part or portion in the kingdom of God. That self must be put down, and the God-like disposition be made manifest in your lives. Put away all anger and wrath and malice and evil speaking. Bring forth the fruits of the spirit, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, meekness, patience," and "to him that overcometh" says Jesus, "will I grant to sit with me on my throne!"

Yours in brighter light, more hopeful faith.

S. ROXANA WINOR.

Editor Restitution:

As I can't see all the dear ones in Michigan individually, I would like to have a little talk with the brethren through our dear old RESTITUTION. We are living in the perils of the last days. The church is doing its last work in this age. Are we making a faithful record? The world has so much to do. With the multitude the cry is, the world, the world, the world. So many things to draw our attention; people have but little time for serious thought. Are we as a people doing our best? Are our prayer meetings well attended? Let us remember, the fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much. Then do we keep up our family worship? It is a poor, cold way for a family of believers to live without ever asking God's blessing on them. Prayer is the golden key that unlocks heavens richest treasures. Then do we parents, take that interest in the Sunbath School that we ought, or do we stay at home and let the children take care of themselves? If the church ever wanted the whole armor on, it is now.

Yes, are we doing all we can for the Master? But we hear it said so often, times are so hard, money so close. Then the more effort—a little more sacrifice. I hear it so often, I am too poor to take THE RESTITUTION, but I can afford money to go to Barnum's great show. Yes, and I have money to go to the fairs, perhaps two or three. Yes, and I have money to join the Good Templars, perhaps two or three different societies. Yes, and we can find money to keep up our dues, but we can't find $2 00 for the dear RESTITUTION. So our best and most faithful preacher is left to beg and starve. Our dear Savior became poor for us. Yes, he gave all for us, his life also. My dear brethren we are making up our own record. The good Lord has committed great truths to our keeping—he will require much at our hands. May God help us individually to see and then do our duty.

To the Church of God in the Abrahamic faith in Michigan: We expect to have our annual conference in a few weeks. Now don't let us think for a moment that we can live careless lives all the year and then go to conference and have a good meeting. If we would have good conferences we must begin at home. We want to go with our hearts full of prayer and praise to the Great Giver. Now we want the good meeting of last year when our dear Father Chaplin was with us, repeated; only we want to make a true report and be able to say this meeting was even better than the last. Let us all remember that it is our individual duty to work for THE RESTITUTION. R. W. WOODWARD.

Editor Restitution:

The book (The Gospel of the Kingdom) has been received, for which accept my most sincere thanks. This book is too good for the price, made up in the very best style of cloth binding, type, paper and subject, and Brother W. Jones has done the brethren a great favor. The subject, so far as I have read it, is treated in the most splendid manner. If the brethren saw the work, and looked over it as I have done so far, you would not have one of them on your shelves in two weeks. Such is my present idea. I am very much pleased. I cannot leave the house myself, being now about half through my 89th year, although I have no sickness whatever, thank my Lord. My locomotion is good enough, but my breathing will not allow me to walk more than a few yards. I thank you very much for sending me THE RESTITUTION. I find the last one very interesting and instructive. I am, dear brethren, yours in the faith.

THOS. CHURCHILL.

TEMPERANCE MISCELLANY.

That see where the wild-blazing Grog-shop appears,
As the red waves of wretchedness swell,
How it burns on the edge of temperance years—
The horrible Light-House of Hell!

ONLY ONE FAULT.

I was riding through a bowery country town in Vermont, when I chanced to notice a concourse of people in the church-yard evidently encircling an open grave.

It was a warm day and I had ridden ten miles, and I drew the rein under some trees that arched the road, to allow the horse to cool and rest.

Presently a villager came toward me, and I said.

"There is a funeral today in your town?"

"Yes—Stephen. He was one of the largest hearted men I ever knew. We all owe something to Stephen." Then he added in a tone of regret. "He had but one fault."

The light fell in pencil rays through the trees. I sat in silence enjoying the refreshing coolness.

The man resumed the subject: "He had great abilities, Stephen had. We sent him to the legislature three times. They thought of nominating him for Governor. But," he added sadly, "Stephen had one fault."

I made no answer. I was tired, and watched the people slowly disperse, leaving the sexton to his solitary work. "A very generous man Stephen was. Always visiting the sick—he was feeling—when any one was in trouble. The old people liked him. Even the children followed him into the street."

"A good man indeed," said I indifferently.

"Yes; he had only one fault."

"What was that?" I asked.

"Only intemperance."

"Did it harm him?"

"Yes; somewhat." He did'nt seem to have any power to resist at last. He got behind-hand and had to mortgage his farm, and finally had to sell it. His wife died on account of the reverse—kind of crushed and disappointed. Then his children, not having the right kind of bringing up, turned out badly. His intemperance seemed to mortify them and take away their spirit. He had to leave politics; 'twouldn't do, you see. Then we had to set him aside from the church, and at last his habits brought on paralysis, and we had to take him to the poor-house. He died there—only forty-five. There were none of his children at the funeral. Poor man, he had only one fault."

"Only one fault!"

The ship had only one leak, but it went down. The temple had only one decaying pillar but it fell.

"Only one fault." Home gone, wife lost, family ruined, honor forfeited, social and religious principles abused; broken health, poverty, paralysis, and the poor-house.

One fault, only one.—Youth's Companion.

PITY FOR RUM'S VICTIMS.

Brethren and gentlemen, I appeal to all of you, I appeal to every sensible and sensitive heart in England and America, to this divine feeling of pity. Do we not, must we not, feel pity when we think of the hundreds and thousands of men who become the victims of a dead product which is potent enough to destroy souls for whom Christ died? Must we not feel pity for the ravages which are caused by this deadliest of all human curses? Do we not feel pity for the men whom we have probably seen and known, who because of drink are living in its pollution and going to deaths of blasphemy, and are giving lust to the God who made them nothing but the dust of their bodies and the shipwreck of their souls? Have we no pity for the thousands who are pouring poison into the ranks of youth until its root becomes as bitterness and its blasphemy comes up as fruit? Have we no pity for the families, the husbands and wives on whose hearthstones are burning, because of drink, the very fires of hell?

Have we no pity for the mothers whose hearts are rent with anguish at the fate of those their offspring? Do we not feel for the unmotherly mothers who well-nigh turn womanhood to laughter and motherhood to horror? Have we no pity for the poor miserable children? Is there no voice strong enough to plead "like angels, trumpet-tongued, against the deep damnation of their taking off of these children?"—who, in the language of Southy, are not so much born into the world as damned into the world, damned and predestined, as it were, to live lives of disease and degradation because of the drink in the midst of which they are brought up, and of which they have the hereditary taint in their veins?

Must children year after year in these our Christian lands—in England at any rate, if not in America—pass through the fire to this Moloch, in numbers infinitely greater than were ever burned in the valley of Hinnom? (Applause.) I, for one, cannot but feel deep pity for these, and I feel pity for England, which for two centuries, has been wallowing in the dark places of those licensed temptations, pity not only for England, but for the whole race of mankind, which is raising up the cry of anguish from every polluted continent, which yet cherishes and even fondles in its bosom this venomous and deadly asp. Most of every curse I have ever heard of, this is a curse in which the entail might be cut off in this very generation. And yet the race of man, bewildered by epigrams, baffled by sophistries, blinded by conceit, seduced by pleasure, and rendered callous by greed, goes on enjoying and even rewarding the production of this fatal cause of evil among themselves, until one is forced to cry, "Let the heavens burst and drown with deluge of rain the feeble vassals of lust and wine."—Canon Farrar's Speech, in New York.

A BRUISED REED.

Lord, all thy wondering saints have told
Thy faithfulness from years of old;
Yea and amen, thy word shall be,
Though flame devoureth land and sea.
That changeless word my trust I make,
"A bruised reed he will not break."

When tempests sweep the noon-day sky
And bow the forests with a cry,
Though trembling in the rush I wait,
So weak, so lone, so desolate,
Sure shelter still this rock doth make,
"A bruised reed he will not break."

When in the midnight gloom I fear
The nameless terror prowling near,
Out of the night's immensity
This star of promise shines for me:
My refuge in this word I take,
"The bruised reed he will not break."

A bruised reed! A worthless thing,
With every light breeze shivering!
By earth forgotten or unknown,
Yet sheltered by a heavenly throne,
His promise all my trust I make—
"A bruised reed he will not break."

The Character of Paul.

Paul, in his natural character, before his conversion, resembles Bonaparte more than any other man—I mean both in his intellectual developments and energy of will. He had the same indexibility of purpose, the same utter indifference to human suffering when he had once determined on his course, the same tireless, unconquerable resolution; the same fearlessness both of man's power and opinions, and that calm, self-reliance and mysterious control over others. But the point of greatest resemblance is in the union of a strong, correct judgment, with rapidity of thought and sudden impulse. They thought quicker, yet better than other men. The power, too, they possessed, was all practical power. There are many men of strong minds, whose force nevertheless wastes in reflection, or in theories for others to act upon. Thought may work out into language, but not into action. They will plan better than they can perform. But these men not only thought better, but they could work better than all other men.

The same perfect self-control and perfect subjection of his emotions—even terror himself—to the mandates of his will, are exhibited in his conduct when smitten to the earth, and blinded by the light and voice from heaven. John, when arrested by the same voice on the Isle of Patmos, fell on his face as a dead man, and dared not to stir or speak till encouraged by the language, "Fear not." But Paul, (or Saul) though a persecutor, and violent man, showed no symptoms of alarm or terror. The voice, the blow, the light, the glory, and the darkness that followed, were sufficient to upset the strongest mind; but he, master of himself and his emotions, instead of giving way to exclamations of fear, simply said: "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" With his reason and judgment as steady and strong as ever, he knew at once that something was wanted of him, and ever ready to act, he asked what it was.

From this time on, his track can be distinguished by the commotion about it, and the light above it. Straight back to Jerusalem, from which he had so recently come with letters to legalize his persecutions, he went to cast his lot in with those he had followed with violence and slaughter. His strong heart never beat one quicker pulsation through fear, when the lofty turrets of the proud city dashed on his vision. Neither did he steal away to the dark alleys and streets, where the disciples were concealed, and tell them secretly his faith in the Son of God. He strode into the synagogues, and before the astonished priests preached Christ and Him crucified. He thundered at the door of the Sanhedrim itself, and shaking Jerusalem like an earthquake, awoke a tempest of rage and fury on himself. With measuring dignity his footsteps, he at length left the city.

But, instead of going to places where he was unknown, and where his feelings would be less tried, he started for his native city, his father's house, the house of his boyhood, for his kindred and friends. To persecution, scars, scorn and violence, he was alike impervious. To Antioch and Cyprus, along the coast of Syria and Rome, over the known world, he went like a blazing comet, waking up the nations. From the top of Mar's Hill, with the gorgeous city at his feet, and the Acropolis and Parthenon behind him—on the deck of his shattered vessel in the intervals of the wreck of billows, in the gloomy walls of a prison, on the borders of the eternal kingdom, he speaks in the same calm and determined tone. Deterred by no danger, awed by no presence, and shrinking from no responsibility, he moves before us like some grand embodiment of power. The nations bow around him, and kings turn pale at his presence. Bands of conspirators swear neither to eat nor drink till they have slain him; rulers and priests combine against him; and people stone him; yet over the din of the conflict and storm of violence his voice of eloquence rises clear and distinct as a trumpet call, as he still preaches Christ and him crucified. The whip is laid on his back till the blood starts with every blow, and then his mangled body is thrown into a dungeon. But at midnight you hear that same calm, strong voice which has shaken the world, poured forth in a hymn of praise to God, and lo! an earthquake rocks the prison to its foundations; the manacles fall from the hands of the captives, the bolts withdraw of themselves, and the massive doors swing back on their hinges.

One cannot point to a single spot in his career where he faltered a moment, or gave way to discouragement or fear. Through all his perilous life, he exhibited the same intrepidity of character and lofty spirit. With his eyes fixed on regions beyond the ken of ordinary mortals, and kindling on glories it was not permitted him to reveal, he pressed forward to an incorruptible crown, a fadeless kingdom. And then his death, how indescribably sublime. Napoleon, dying in the midst of the midnight storm, with the last words that fell from his lips a battle cry, and his passing spirit watching in its delirium the torn heads of his mighty columns, as they disappeared in the smoke of the conflict, is a sight that awes and startles us. But behold Paul, also a warworn veteran, battered with many a scar, though in a spiritual warfare, looking not on the earth but on heaven. Hear his calm, serene voice ringing over the storms and commotions of life: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course. There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."—J. T. Headly.

IN THE HOLY LAND.

Bethlehem is by far the thriftiest inland town in the whole region, as well as one of the most beautifully situated. Its well-built houses crowd along the crescent of the long hill and down its eastern slope, bordered all around with olive orchards and vineyards. Here as in Jerusalem I was impressed by the numbers of new buildings in process of erection. The new carriage road to Bethlehem from Jerusalem is as fine a road and makes as delightful a drive as any highway in the East. It is the beginning of a road to Hebron. The work was started at both ends. It is completed to about four miles north of Hebron. It is probably that the gap between the two finished ends will remain for some years to come, and it is one of the very worst roads in the country. By far the earliest and quickest way to get from Hebron to Nazareth at this season is to strike west to Beit-Jibrin, and then north along the eastern border of the Philistine plain to Sweikeh, then across low hills to Jenin, and thence to Nazareth. At this season I found the roads delightful; earlier they were muddy and impassable in many places.

The reason of the thrift of Bethlehem is probably to be found in the character of its population, which is wholly Christian. It is the place where nearly all the fine work in olive wood and glass is done for the relic trade in Jerusalem. The olive work is very beautiful, and all sorts of handkerchief boxes, rulers, paper cutters, match safes, pincholders, napkin-rings, book racks and small tables can be purchased at a reasonable rate. Rosaries, necklaces and bracelets are quite elegantly made, and the ivory and mother-of-pearl work is tasteful. There is a growing demand for such articles, useful or ornamental in the United States, and a representative of a large house dealing in olive wood was present at the New Orleans Exposition, and established depots in various parts of the country.

Everywhere I noticed the marks of industry. A steam engine used for grinding grain makes one almost quite Eastern in its aspect. Small shops for olive wood-work are scattered all about. It was pleasant to stop and chat with the intelligent-looking workmen and see their skill in turning out pretty ornaments. All travelers remark upon the beauty of the women of Bethlehem, and with good reason. They are beautiful and modest, and the children are clever and pretty.

The great attraction at Bethlehem is, of course, the Church of the Nativity, and even those who do not care for the traditions of the spot are interested in what has been rightly considered one of the finest remains of the architecture of the fourth century. Some even claim that this is essentially the original structure of Constantine. Of all the traditions of the church (so many of which are manufactured), this is the one upon which we can put the most credence. Every one must note and admire the good taste with which the church is kept. After the noisy, irreverent and almost blasphemous scenes in the Church of the Sepulchre, at Jerusalem, it was a rest to see the quiet devotion that filled the grotto of the Nativity.

Nazareth is a very different place from Nablus. Here again the population is almost wholly Christian, and its prosperity depends largely upon sentiment. It reminds me much of Bethlehem, although smaller, and in itself [illegible] beautiful. The view from the hill above the town, however, is one of the finest in all Palestine. To the west is the sea and Carmel; to the south the whole plain of Esdraelon and the mountains of Ephraim as far south as Ebal and Gerizim about Nablus; to the east is the great mountain wall across the Jordan, the deep depression of the valley itself, Gilboa, Little Hermon, the dome of Tabor and the hills of the Jaulan and Hauran; to the north is the beautiful plain of el Buttauf directly below, the hills of Galilee and Naphtali and the southern spurs of the Lebanons, with old Hermon rising grandly in the northeast, his summit streaked with snow and lording it over all the horizon, like a venerable sheikh (indeed the modern name is Jebel-esh-sheikh). The most notable buildings in Nazareth are the British school for girls, the house of Dr. Vartan, the English missionary physician, and the Latin monastery with the church of the Annunciation. A number of new buildings are going up. The hospital which Dr. Vartan has started to build (of which his house is a part) is still uncompleted. Thereby hangs a tale which I will attempt to unfold in my next letter. The people of Nazareth seem to be industrious and intelligent. A fine road is being constructed down the steep hill to the plain of Esdraelon. The population of the town has been increased of late years by the insecurity of the plain below, and will probably diminish as the people move back to their old homes.—Hartford Courant.

The True Test.

From the sweeping of a crossing to the ruling of an empire, from the most menial occupation of a domestic circle to the most weighty matters connected with the nation's weal or woe, Christ's presence may be in all, and his name should be glorified in all. Oh, it is in the common and ordinary affairs of life our noblest opportunities lie for glorifying Christ!

"In the hallowed engagements of the Sanctuary, or in the religious callings of the world, we look upon it as a matter of course that he should be honored. Such occupations are not the true test of our Christian character; for, on such occasions, even the most worldly will yield conformity to some extent. But it is in the worldly occupations, in the minutiæ of each day's life that our character as servants of Christ is tested.

"In the walk to the distant village, in the letter written to an unconverted friend, in the business transaction with a worldly trader, in the family circle when things get mysteriously and unaccountably across, and a word may stem the torrent or raise the flood, oh, it is here that Christ may be honored, or be grieved and slighted. It is on such occasions, when we are liable to be off our guard, or when the testimony would entail some new cross, that our true character comes out. Here it is that Jesus comes and asks for a place. —Voices From the Valley.

The following anecdote from the Central Baptist will bear repeating:

A good story is told of a certain Presbyterian professor in a college who was also a minister, who labored hard in the pulpit to prove that "baptizo" meant to pour, not to plunge. In the class of the professor there was a way who was called upon to translate a passage from one of the Greek authors. The passage gave an account of a man who became so enraged with another that he seized a red-hot poker and "ebaptise tis ophthalmon." Newlet, the way, with a mischievous twinkle of the eye, but with a grave manner, translated it thus: "He seized a red-hot poker and 'sprinkled' it into his eye." "How is that?" said the professor. "He 'sprinkled' it into his eye," repeated Newlet. "But," said the doctor, "the word 'ebaptise' does not mean to 'sprinkle.'" "Well, sir, it did mean 'sprinkle' on last Sunday night," replied the mischievous fellow, amid suppressed laughter from the class, who keenly relished the joke. The doctor looked grave, was silent a moment, and then remarked: "You may translate it 'plunge' here, sir."

The Savior's Sufferings Past.

As we contemplate the Savior in the garden and on the cross, we are impressed with the conviction that his sufferings were something more than ordinary. Had there been nothing more to cause them than was manifest to human observation, they must have been great, and yet no more so than many a martyr has endured for his sake. But there must have been much more than this. That bloody sweat in Gethsemane, and that piercing cry on Calvary indicate that there must have been a burden upon the Savior's soul, more oppressive than any that was laid there by human hands. There are intimations of this in those words of sacred prophecy: "It pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief." "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." And also in those words by Zechariah: "Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts: smite the shepherd and the sheep shall be scattered."

These sufferings, whatever they were, were long anticipated by the Savior. He came into the world with the expectation of meeting them. When here he well knew that every step that he took in the path of life was bringing him nearer to the cross, where he was to endure them in all their unmitigated intensity. As we read of the Savior's actual endurance of them in the Gospel narrations, and sympathize with the suffering victim, it is always a relief to us when we recall the point where he triumphantly exclaims, "It is finished," and he bows his head and gives up the ghost.

It is a pleasing thought to the friends of Christ that his sufferings are forever past, that he will no more travel the rough and thorny paths of life, that he shall no more meet with insult and abuse from mocking and wicked men, and that the flaming sword of justice shall no more be bathed in his precious blood. It is pleasant to think that, reascended to his native heaven, he now shares the joy for which he endured the cross and despised the shame. To all eternity shall he more and more see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied.—N. Y. Observer.

BALAAM'S CHILDREN.

A Methodist, living in the state of Georgia, became dissatisfied on the subject of infant baptism. He frequently urged his preacher to tell where in the Bible it might be found; but the preacher, like all other preachers, could not produce the Scriptures. At last the preacher hit on a happy plan: he told each member of his class at their next general meeting to bring the best proof text on infant baptism—the dissatisfied brother among the others. The time arrived, and all appeared equipped as directed. The first brother read, "Suffer little children to come unto me." "Well," said the dissatisfied brother, "what has that to do with infant baptism?" "Oh," said the preacher, "the inference is that Christ baptized them." The next read, "And when she (Lydia) was baptized, and her household." "Well," said the brother, "there are no infants mentioned here." "But stop," said the preacher, "the inference is that Lydia had children in her household." So they continued, until every text that Methodist skill could bring was exhausted. Then the dissatisfied brother's turn came. He arose and read, "And Balaam rose up early in the morning and saddled his ass." "My brother, what has that to do with infant baptism?" "Don't you see?" said the dissatisfied brother, "the inference is that Balaam saddled his ass to carry his children to church to have them baptized!" That convention adjourned, sine die.

The Jewish Chronicle reports that Signor J. B. de Rossi, of Rome, the great authority on Christian archæology, has found in the "Ad duos lauros" subterranean cemetery a goblet, handsomely engraved and with a Greek inscription. According to Signor de Rossi the design represents the Temple of Jerusalem, and he believes the goblet to have been the property of the Jewish community in Rome. The engraving shows a Temple standing in a court-yard. On the frieze is depicted the seven branched candlestick; the Ethrog and Lulab are also shown. Signor de Rossi has deciphered the inscription, which reads: "The House of Peace. Accept the blessing, drink and live with those belonging to thee." The goblet was apparently manufactured in the second half of the third, or the first half of the fourth century of the Christian Era.

Only a Song.

It was only a song that the maiden sang,
With a thoughtless tone, yet the echo rang
In the heart of the lad. Like a pure white hand,
It quelled his unrest and calmed his land.

Only an old, old-fashioned hymn,
Sung in the twilight, gray and dim,
By mother's side or on father's knee:
Yet time can not blot it from memory.

Only a song from the lips of one
Whose mission is past, whose brief life is done—
A simple rang; and yet, after all
I never can sing it but tears will fall.

Only a song from a feeble pen,
And a faltering hand and heart: but then,
Who knows? Perhaps some life-one sad
In sin was made to rejoice and be glad.

Brief as a song in this life of ours,
Fleeting as sunshine and frail as the flowers;
Then sing, my heart! oh, sing and be strong!
Thou shalt one day join in the "new, new song."

Pleasure of Kindness.

Ned was a poor little newsboy. One day he laid out all but twopence of his little capital in a small stock of newspapers. But he had hardly left the office before a drenching shower fell. He hurried to the shelter of a friendly awning, and waited till it became clear again. But the rain and damp had almost spoiled his papers, and the little fellow trudged off looking as downcast as a broken merchant. He had not spirit enough left even to try to sell his damaged stock of papers.

After walking a while in silence, he paused near to a poor old blind woman, who was seated on a door-step, holding out her wrinkled palm. Ned stood gazing on her with his hands in the pockets of his ragged coat, his papers under his arm, and looking very sad, for the blind woman's mute hand had touched his heart.

Three times his fingers clutched one of his remaining pennies and three times the thought of his half-spoiled papers caused him to drop it again to the bottom of his capacious pocket. At last his heart won the victory. Out came the penny, and with earnest good will he dropped it in the blind woman's palm. Then Ned's eye brightened. He turned away with a light step, and his voice echoed loudly along the streets as he cried: "Newspapers! This day's papers!"

The feat is, the gift of half his remaining fortune to the poor old blind woman had warmed his sad heart and cheered his fallen spirits, as generous deeds always do. If Ned was a penny poorer, he was a great deal happier than before he divided his little all with the blind sister of poverty.

Children! if you wish to have warm hearts yourselves, you must do good to others. As the good God pours streams of blessings on you, you must scatter his good gifts upon others. If you have much do much; if little, like the newsboy, do little, but be sure to do some kind act or speak some kind word to some one every day of your life. Thus you will be like Jesus, who went about doing good.

The Truthful Pioneer Boy.

Nearly sixty years ago a gaunt, awkward boy of sixteen looked in at the open door of a small log cabin on the outer edge of one of our Western frontiers, and pleasantly inquired, "Any chores you wish done, mother? I came home early on purpose this evening; for I want to begin that job of chopping to-morrow, and I shall want to take an early start."

"You are a good son, Abra'm, to think of me," replied the woman proudly, turning at the sound of his voice.

"I am sure I know of no one who has better right to have my thoughts," the boy returned.

The woman smiled upon him pleasantly, and then handed him a couple of buckets, saying, "If you are a-mind to give me a lift, you may fill the tubs with water from the spring, as to-morrow will be washing day; and then, if you would just see where the cow has strayed, and bring her in and milk her, I am sure I would be greatly obliged."

"I'll have her pailed in good time, mother, never fear. Come, Sallie, and ride down to the spring," he continued, perching his little seven year old step-sister on his broad shoulders.

I am persuaded that very few of my young friends ever looked upon such an ungainly specimen of humanity as was this tall, awkward prairie boy, who went striding to the spring, chatting merrily with his little sister, who declared that he was far better than real brothers, who were always teasing their sisters.

I am sure the tired woman who watched him from the cabin door thought him very beautiful in spite of his homely features and uncouth ways.

"Come, Sallie," called her mother, just as the little girl mounted her brother's shoulders for a fine race through the tall grass in search of the cow. The child, not wishing to be cheated out of the sport, showed no disposition to obey, until her brother placed her on the ground, saying, "Mother called, Sallie; run and see what she wants."

The little girl hung her head, but obeyed her brother without questioning.

"God bless the boy! He could not be any better to me if he were my own. I do not know how I could get along without him."

"'Without him!' I don't know as you need worry about that, mother," replied her husband. "Abra'm will not leave us for many a day."

"I hope he will think it best to make his home with us; but take my word for it that boy will not be shut in by brown logs much longer. You will be proud of him yet, father."

"I am in no way ashamed of him now," the old man returned. "Maybap he will make a place for himself in the world yet, for he takes to book larnin' like a fish to water."

"You will hear from him if you live long enough, father, never fear," the woman responded, with an emphatic nod of her head.

Long before the sun was up the boy had completed his work in and around the cabin. Sallie was anxious to go with him to the woods, but her mother objected, and he set out alone. With his ax slung over his shoulder, he made long strides over the trodden path, whistling merrily as he went.

When over a mile from home he was startled by a little figure springing from a wayside thicket, with, "I bust you Abra'm;" but the laugh changed into a piteous cry, for the little girl struck the ax and cut a gash just above her ankle.

"Sallie, how came you here when mother told you to remain at home?" inquired her brother, as he tried to stop the flow of blood by applying plantain leaves. After he had partially succeeded, he tore half the sleeve from the coarse white shirt he wore, and bandaged the injured limb as gently as her mother would have done.

"There now, Sis! Tell me how you got here?" And the girl told how she cut across lots in order to frighten him.

"You frightened yourself much worse than you did me," he said with a smile; "but the saddest thing about it is you disobeyed mother."

"You won't tell, Abra'm?" sobbed the child.

"No; you must tell her all about it yourself, Sallie. First, tell the truth, no matter what happens," he said, as he lifted her in his great, strong arms and walked rapidly home. Placing her on the door step, he whispered, "Now hop in and tell her the truth. Better be whipped than tell a lie. Now good-bye; I must be off, for the morning is running to waste."

Sallie did tell the truth, and received her mother's forgiveness; nor did she ever forget the two lessons—those of obedience and truthfulness—that her brother tried to teach her that bright Autumn morning. I need not tell that honest Abraham Lincoln preserved his truthfulness and integrity even in the most trying hours of our country's existence, for a boy with his sterling principles may always be relied upon. Always tell the truth, no matter what may happen.—Christian Standard.

The Tomb of Ezra Visited by Jewish Pilgrims.

Travellers from Bagdad to the port of Bassorah, touch on the way the little town of Amara, which is situated on a stream formed by the conflux of the Tigris and the Euphrates. Here is settled a Jewish congregation which is one of the oldest in Babylonia; but its fame does not rest on its antiquity. Tradition has it that Ezra the Scribe lived for some time at Amara, died and was buried there. The spot in which his remains are supposed to rest is covered by a building in the form of a parallelogram, and containing two small windows. This Mausoleum is annually visited by pilgrims from all parts of Northern Asia, who flock there in their thousands, mostly during the weeks of the Omer. Near the grave stands a large tin box, in which the pilgrims drop their gifts for the maintenance of the perpetual light which is kept burning in a silver lamp. The visitors are also in the habit of lighting a lamb on their own account, and in honor of the illustrious dead they recite the Kaddish before his tomb. Owing to the convenient situation of Amara near the sea, the place is likewise visited by Jews from Persia and India, and even by co-religionists who have settled in the Dutch East Indies.—Jewish Herald.

The church of God at Cleveland, O., will hold meetings at 10:30 a.m. every Sunday (D. V.) in Blind and Heller's Block, Room 20, 145 Ontario Street, corner of Bolivar, north of Central Market. Seats free. Brethren from abroad or like faith and all searchers after truth are welcome.

Appointments.

At Fairfield, Wis., commencing Aug. 29th, and continuing over the first Sunday in September. All lovers of truth are invited.

T. J. WHITSITT.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God, in Indiana, will meet at Argos, Indiana, commencing at two o'clock Friday afternoon, Sept. 10, 1886, and continue over the following Sunday. It is the desire of all who have been in the habit of attending these gatherings, that all the churches send delegates with reports of their condition to this meeting. Also that isolated brethren and sisters attend or send letters. Now friends, please attend to this little matter, and if you cannot possibly come send a letter to the secretary at Plymouth, Ind., and it will be presented to the Conference. If you have some good news of what the Lord has done for you, tell us of it—it will cheer us on our way. If trouble has been your portion, and the load heavy, tell us—perhaps we can aid you—our prayers shall be for you at least.

Brethren, the signs tell us that very few more of these Annual Meetings will be held. Jesus is coming. Will the Annual Meeting of 1886 be the last? Come, work while day lasts.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

We are anxious to extend our circulation, but we can do very little in this line without the aid and co-operation of our friends. We have decided to offer THE RESTITUTION to

Trial Subscribers

for only Twenty-five Cents for Three Months. We feel certain that if we can get two persons to take our paper and read it for Three Months, at least one of them will not do without it. If we can get One Thousand names of this kind added to our list, we think Five Hundred of them will continue to be subscribers.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jay" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jay6" it means your subscription expired the first of January, 1886, and consequently is six months past due now. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June, "ful" in July, "Agu" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

HE KNOWS.

I know not what will befall me! God hangs a mist o'er my eyes,
And o'er each step of my onward path, He makes new scenes to rise;
And every joy He sends me, comes as sweet and glad surprise.

I see not a step before me, as I tread the days of the years;
But the past is still in God's keeping, the future His mercy shall clear.
And what looks dark in the distance, may brighten as I draw near.

For perhaps the dreaded future is less bitter than I think:
The Lord may sweeten the water before I stoop to drink;
Or if Marah must be Marah, He will stand beside its brink.

It may be He is keeping, for the coming of my feet,
Some gift of such rare blessedness, some joy so strangely sweet,
That my lips can only tremble with the thanks I cannot speak.

Oh, restful, blessed ignorance! 'Tis blessed not to know!
He keeps me quiet in those arms which will not let me go,
And hushes my soul to rest on the heart which loves me so.

So I go on, not knowing: I would not if I might;
I would rather walk in the dark with God, than go alone in the light.
I would rather walk with Him by faith, than walk alone by sight.

My heart shrinks back from trials which the future may disclose,
Yet I never had a sorrow but what the dear Lord chose;
So I send the coming years back with the whispered words, "He knows."

The Book of Job, called Job, Son of Zare, Son of Bruguel, Son of Hesau, Son of Isaac, Son of Habraam.  According to the Septuagint.

CHAP. XXI.

1. And Job taking up the discourse, saith,

2. Hear ye hear ye my words. For this way of comforting from you is not for me.

3. Come me, but I will talk, and then ye will not laugh at me.

4. What, forsooth! Is my reproof man's reproof? Or why should I not be crying?

5. When you have looked at me, you should wonder, putting your hand upon your mouth.

6. Yea though now I am remarked, I have made haste, and woe has hold of my flesh.

7. Why do the irreverent live and why have they waxed old in wealth?

8. Their sowing is seal by seal, and their children are before their eyes.

9. Their houses flourish: fear is nowhere; and a scourge from the Lord is not upon them;

10. Their cow hath not miscarried, and she who hath in womb of theirs hath been safe and hath not stepped.

11. Everlasting flocks as it were do they abide, and their children add children to children;

12. Why take up psaltry and cithara and rejoice with the voice of a psalm:

13. They have finished their lifetime in good things, and in the rest of Hades (the grave) they have laid down to sleep.

14. And he saith unto the Lord, stand away from me; I do not desire to know thy ways;

15. Is there any sufficient reason why we should serve him as bondservants? And what advantage is there in one going to meet him?

16. For their good things were in their hands and he hath not carried off their works:

17. Yea indeed, but forsooth the lamp of the irreverent will be put out; and their catastrophe will come upon them; and woe from wrath will get them:

18. They will be like the chaff borne away by the wind; or like the fine dust that the whirl-wind taketh up;"

19. His possessions will forsake his sons; a requital will be made him and he will know it:

20. His eyes shall see his own slaughter and he shall not be saved from the Lord:

21. Because his purpose is with himself in his own house; and the numbers of his months have been taken away.

22. Is it true or not that the Lord giveth understanding and great knowledge? And doth he discriminate in favor of murderers? No.

23. With a controlling power will he condemn to death his utter stupidity, though he feel in every way well and prosperous:

24. Though his vitals be covered with fat and marrow poured through him;

25 Yea he cometh to an end by reason of a bitterness of life; because he shall eat no good thing:

26. With one accord they lie down to sleep upon the earth; and corruption hath covered them.

27. Just as I know ye will, because of the conceits of this place, we went to with daring ye lean upon my arm;

28. Just as ye would say, where is the ruler's house? And where is the visitors of the habitation of the irreverent?

29. Ask those who pass along the way and their signs will not make you strangers to the fact.

30. Because in a day of loss the wicked will weigh light; in a day of his wrath they will be led away:

31. Who will tell him his way to his face? He himself hath done it even, who will requite him;

32. Even he himself hath borne him away to burial and he himself hath walked over his mound of ashes;

33. The gravel of the spring-torrent's bed hath been sweetened with him; and after him every man will go, and before him are there unnumbered ones.

34. But how is it that ye comfort me in vain, and there is no letting up of me by you?

C. GARDNER.

NABLOUS, OR SICHOR.

Rarely have we looked upon a valley so romantic as that through which we passed on our way from Bethel to Nablous; while the hills about Jerusalem are stoniness and desolation, here they are terraced with olives and figs, while the fields abound with wild flowers of every hue. Here and there on the hill-tops are the watch-towers whence the farmers watch their fields and orchards, when grain and fruit are ripening, for many there are in this region who prefer to live on the fruits of others' industry. At Shiloh, of course, we tarried to view the place where the tabernacle was first set up, when taken from the camp at Gilgal, and the sepulchre where was buried the aged priest who, on hearing of the capture of the ark, fell back and expired. By Jacob's well, at the entrance of the Nablous Valley, we dismounted to rest awhile, as the Master had done before us. But no Samaritan woman was here to give us a drink, for the well was dry as well as deep. Instead of the Samaritan of old, we were surrounded by a number of as repulsive and loathsome looking Arab men, women, and children, as it is one's lot to meet with in that land; and our ears were deafened with the cries, "Marhaba-bah Chawadja; backshish! backshish!" The place itself is most unattractive and desolate. Underneath a dome, or arch, one side of which is entirely in ruins, is a long hole, which at the time of our visit was partly covered with a flat stone. The well is some seventy-five feet in depth, as ascertained by Dr. Wilson and others, who had it explored. We tried to read the story of Christ and the Samaritan woman, but found the task a difficult one, from the continuous din of backshish, backshish; "Chawadja."

NABLOUS.

In our saddle again we passed on a little to the north to look at Joseph's tomb, and discourse about the model youth, whose recorded history has proved a blessing to tens of thousands of his race. But it was time to proceed to Nablous, the Shechem of the Old Testament, and Sychor of the New. In doing so we passed through the valley that divides Mount Gerizim from Mount Ebal, the former the mount of blessings, the latter that of curses. Nablous, which is the Arabic form of Neapolis, the name given to this place by the Romans, is like all othe Palestine cities, famous for its narrow, filthy, crooked streets. Its chief productions are soap, cotton and oil. 'Tis here we learn the great value of the olive-tree. Though slow in coming to maturity, it lives to a great age, and is very productive. Its berries are pickled and eaten with great relish by lovers of the fruit in America as well as here. But this is not the only purpose to which the berries are put. Large quantities are turned into oil by being put into the cavity of a rock and a stone rolled over them. When thus crushed the mass is put into a rude press. The liquor flows off, is heated slightly, and the oil is skimmed from the top and poured into skins or earthen jars. In the oil all kinds of food are cooked, with it their lamps are filled, and from it their soap is produced. The location of the city for beauty and fertility is all that could be desired. It lies at the base of a hill, whose slopes are terraced all the way up to the top with rich and luxuriant gardens, and beautiful olive and fig groves. Then from the top of the hill a scene of unsurpassed loveliness opened before us; what with groves, gardens, orchards, streams and fountains, 'twas like a fairy scene.

A MANUSCRIPT HOAX.

Hearing much about the ancient the Samaritan synagogue, and for bookish were permitted to enter; but we did not take off our shoes, much to the disgust of Samaritan women. There were three copies of the Pentateuch, written on parchment, each twenty-five inches long by fifteen wide. The priest said he would show us the oldest one, which was written by Abishua, the son of Aaron, and it was three thousand four hundred years old, and then brought down the venerable manuscript out of its tin case. We inspected the parchment, listened to the priest's story, and retired, believing this was a "sell." That evening Rev. Mr. El-Karey, the native missionary, who dined with us in our tent, informed us that the manuscript we saw is only one hundred and fifty years old; that the oldest, which is but six hundred years, is only allowed to be brought from its case on three certain occasions during the year, and before touching it the priest must cleanse himself by taking a bath. Some time ago a gentleman connected with the Museum at London, and versed in antique parchments, visited Nablous, and the result of his examination is as we have given; future travelers may bear this in mind.

Leaving Nablous the next day, we rode down through the beautiful valley of Nablous, between Gerizim and Ebal, two of our number ascending the former mountain, and two the latter, while the others remained in the valley, those on Mount Gerizim reading some of the blessings, and those on Ebal reading the curses, while those in the valley shouted, "Amen." The distance across from point to point on the mountains is about a mile, yet those on one mountain heard distinctly the words of those on the other, while those in the valleys heard both. These mountains are each some eight hundred feet in height, uncultivated and barren, and here and there a few solitary olives lift their flowing heads.

Before leaving this place we must take our readers up the steep and somewhat difficult ascent of Gerizim, the sacred mountain of the Samaritans, and on the top of which is the site of the famous Samaritan temple, where was then being performed the rites of one of their feasts; hence there were drawn together a large number of that people. Close by the ruins our attention was called to some large flat stones, under which we were informed were deposited the twelve memorial stones brought from the Jordan by the tribes of Israel! This done, we remounted our steeds and turned their heads toward Samaria, where are ruins worthy of a visit—the road to which is in striking contrast to the stony, barren roads of Judea, for the whole district of Samaria is about the best cultivated as well as the most thickly populated in Palestine. Here and there were to be seen on either side snug little villages, embowered in fruitful and luxuriant orchards. At last the town of Samaria came in sight, crowning the hill of that name, which was soon climbed, and we found ourselves amid rubbish and ruins, close by the old Church of St. John, so named from the tradition that John the Baptist was there buried, now used as a mosque. Few cities have a history more eventful or consequenced than Samaria, the last and most noted metropolis of the kingdom of the tribes of Israel, whose situation equaled that of the noted metropolis Jerusalem. Here it was that Ahab built a temple to Baal, the chief god of the country of Sidon, whence he married Jezebel, but which was destroyed with many idolatries by the impetuous Jehu and a handful of Israelites. Those familiar with the histories of Elijah and Eliuha will remember that many of the stirring scenes recorded in the lives of these prophets took place at Samaria.

ON OUR BOOK SHELVES.

Brother Wiley Jones' work "The Gospel of the Kingdom." Leather binding, former price $1.50; now 75c. Cloth gilt, former price, $1.50; now 75c. Paper cover, former price was 50c.; now 25c. Friends, you who are at work in the Master's vineyard, think of this chance offered you from week to week to get the book that gives the foundation of our hope in the clearest manner possible, for so little money. It is not right for these books to remain long on our shelves. There is work for them all over the land. "Key Words" is another work by the same author, former price 25c.; now 15c.; and "Thanatopsis," former price 10c.; now 5c.

Have you any smart infidels in your neighborhood? Do they sneer at and ridicule your views of the Bible? If you have we have a little work here that will aid you in routing them completely, and if you have none near you now you can scarcely stir many miles without meeting one, and if you are posted in their theories you have already won half of the battle. Sister Reed's little book, "Creation vs. Evolution" is the work we refer to, and all should possess a copy. Price 25c.

Our lamented Brother Magruder's "Reply to Ingersoll" is another book that should be more largely circulated. It is just what its name indicates—a Reply to Mr. Ingersoll—a reply that Mr. Ingersoll or any other infidel will not even try to answer, so it stands, for its foundation is laid in God's holy word. Price 50c.

The Gift of Life Eternal through Jesus Christ is the great subject for us. Eternal Life a Free Gift. Brother J. H. Pettengill has written a book on this subject, and all who read it say the work is well done. We can send you a copy for $1.00.

We write and talk much of the Kingdom and its Restoration. Brother Silas Henn has written a book on this subject that will aid us very much in our study of the Kingdom and the wonders of the Restoration. One dollar will place it on your table.

There have been different ages and dispensations in the past—we live now—there is an Age to Come, and Bro. Weothee has told us in his work on this subject, the result of his life-time's search as to the nature and the proximity of the age coming hereafter. This is a large book of over 500 pages. Price $3.00.

Space will not admit of mention of half what our shelves contain. The Emphatic Diaglott, by B. Wilson; Christ's Kingdom, Where is it and What is it? by Jos. Lacy; Translation of Matthew's Gospel by Chas. Gaidner; that grand work, Letter to a Friend, by Mrs. Woodruff; Which is Right? or is Christ's Throne in Heaven or on the Earth? by Thos. Wilson; When Shall These Things Be? by H. Bowman; A Letter to a Baptist Minister, by Daniel Howard; the Doctrine of Baptism, besides a host of those little silent leaflets that work all the time. When you are resting, being wearied, they keep on. Who will help circulate these books? They are all good. There may be an isolated expression that some might object to, but the teaching in the main is endorsed by all our best writers and thinkers. We are ready to fill your orders. See advertisements in other parts of this paper.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath.

—BY L. G. THOMAS.—

This pamphlet contains The Law, the Covenants and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Mosaic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 350 pages, Cloth bound. Price $1.00. Orders may be sent to THE RESTITUTION Office.

Kingdom and the Restoration.

Or, A Scriptural View of the Second Coming of Christ, with the Wonderful Signs that will Precede it, and the Still more Wonderful Things that will Follow it.

—BY SILAS HENN.—

NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS!

The book is truthful, reverent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Evangelist.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it candid and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The author refers to as to evidently the product of much personal study, and deserves the careful attention of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Decidedly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Sydney Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we find as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry.....The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a worldly, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WEOTHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence, it treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the deepest sense, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The Coming Age is the product of laborious researches covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of popular interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the event of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, gossip, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

"THE DIVINE BLINDING OF MEN."

In Mr. Edward White's lecture entitled "the Mystery of Godliness" etc., reprinted from the Rainbow in THE RESTITUTION for June 23, I observe one or two points which seem to call for remark. One is indicated in his quotation, obviously from Isaiah vi. After quoting several passages such as that from Psalm cxix. "Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law," Mr. White says, "And conversely; 'Give this people eyes that they shall not see, and make their ears heavy that they shall not hear.' Seal up the law among my disciples.' And he goes on to say "In the Old Testament the wicked masses are described as given over 'to their hearts' lusts, to walk in their own counsels;' and adds "In the New Testament the same law prevails. In every page there is asserted a direct action of God in blinding wicked men to truth, because of their dishonesty and wickedness, and in 'revealing mysteries to the meek.'" Farther on he says, "No man comes to know the truth except by a personal teaching of the Spirit of God, a renewing and illuminating change which lifts him out of the condition of the animal or natural man, who 'discerneth not the things of the Spirit,' into the condition of the spiritual man, who 'discerneth all things.'"

What surprises me is that the only Scripture evidence offered from the New Testament in support of these sweeping assertions, is this last quotation from 1 Cor. ii. where even chapter and verse is withheld from the reader. This is too near an approach to what is known as the ex cathedra method to pass muster in the present day, especially when we consider that such doctrines were exploded many years ago by such men as Professors James Morison and John Kirk in Scotland, besides many others elsewhere.

It will be admitted that the drift of these statements of Mr. White is quite apparent, and but for some others which appear to look in another direction for a solution of the problem of human ignorance and perversity, they would be unmistakable. Thus, for example, Mr. White says, "Every man is either blinded by the devil, so that God and his truth are hidden from his eyes, or he is taught and enlightened by God, in different measures, according to his teachableness, and according to his needs."

It only needs to place this statement alongside one previously quoted, to see the need for more discrimination on the part of any one who would seek to enlighten his fellow-men on such a momentous subject as the Divine dealings with fallen humanity. Thus "In the New Testament the same law prevails. In every page there is asserted a direct action of God in blinding wicked men to truth," etc.

"Every man is either blinded by the devil, so that God and his truth are hidden from his eyes, or he is taught and enlightened by God in different measures," etc.

Leaving this looseness of statement in the meantime, I would ask the readers' attention to the passage quoted from Isaiah vi. 9, 12, which, in full, is as follows:—

"And he said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed. Then said I, Lord, how long? And he answered, Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate. And the Lord have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land."

It cannot be denied that in this version of Jehovah's words there is conveyed to the prophet a commission to operate in some way on the minds and hearts of the people so that they should not hear, nor understand, nor be converted. But what if the translation is erroneous? Fortunately both our Lord and the Apostle Paul's quotation of it shows it to be an entirely wrong version of Jehovah's word. In Matt. xiii. 14, 15, we have an express quotation by our Lord of this passage, in which the prophet is mentioned by name. It is as follows:—"In them is fulfilled the prophesy of Esaias, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive: For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." In Acts xxviii. 25–27, we have the Apostle Paul's quotation of the passage in terms almost identical with those used by our Lord; almost the only variation being in the Apostle's prefatory words, "Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers, saying," etc.

It is at once evident that the blinding of the perceptions and the hardening or thickening of the hearts of the people, are here ascribed neither to the prophet nor to Jehovah, nor yet even to the devil, but to the people themselves, "their eyes THEY have closed."

It becomes necessary here to point out how it happened that the rendering in the New Testament came to differ from that in the Old. Professor Kirk in his work entitled "The Cloud Dispelled," (London; Ward & Co. 1847) says, while refuting the views of Calvin on this passage, "The Hebrew of the Bible was originally written without the points generally known as the 'vowel points.'" He quotes Gesenius' Hebrew Grammar as follows. "Of the date of this invention (of the points) we have no account, but a comparison of historical facts warrants the conclusion that the vowel system was not completed till after the seventh century of the Christian era." He also quotes the well known commentator Horne. He says, "Horne, in his invaluable introduction to the Critical Study of the Scriptures, sets this authority in the clearest light. He says in a note on this text as quoted in Matt. xiii. 14,15:—This quotation is taken almost verbatim from the Septuagint.... In the Hebrew the sense is obscured by false pointing. If, instead of reading it in the imperative mood, we read it in the indicative mood, the sense will be, Ye shall see but not understand; and Ye shall see but not perceive. This people hath made their heart fat, and hath made their ears heavy, and shut their eyes, etc., which agrees in sense with the Evangelist and with the Septuagint, as well as with the SYRIAC and ARABIC versions, but not with the Latin Vulgate. We have the same quotation, word for word, in Acts xxviii. Mark and Luke refer to the same prophecy, but quote it only in part.'"

It has also to be noted that the Septuagint version of the Old Testament was a Greek translation made by seventy-two Jews acting under the authority of the King of Egypt, about 300 years before the Christian era; and consequently many hundred years before the invention of the vowel points. Those Jewish translators must be credited with a knowledge of their own language; and although their version is not perfect in all respects, it must surely be preferred in all cases where it has been used by our Lord and his Apostles.

I submit, therefore, that Mr. White's use of Jehovah's commission to Isaiah cannot be sustained by any fair reading of the Scriptures, and that the character of God, which has been maligned for centuries by ignorant men on no other ground than false translations of his word, is thus seen in its true light. By the interpretation we are dealing with God is represented as first causing or at least increasing by "direct action" of his own, the perversity and disobedience of his people Israel, and then subjecting them for that Divinely caused disobedience to the terrible infliction of exile and oppression at the hands of their enemies; in short, acting as the elder and abettor of his people's disobedience, and then punishing them for doing that which they could not avoid. Let this be contrasted with Jehovah's own appeal to those very people to judge as to his dealings with them under the similitude of a vineyard, contained in the chapter preceding that quoted by Mr. White, "What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it?"

Mr. White quotes a statement of the Psalmist David in support of his view, namely, "Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." There are two aspects under which such a petition as this may be considered, namely, what may be termed the ordinary and the extraordinary. The ordinary applies to the conditions under which we are now placed; one prominent among these being the absence of Divine inspiration of individual. Of course the extraordinary aspect would contain the element of inspiration in a greater or less degree. Now if we seek for an example of the way in which God opens the eyes of such as are afflicted with mental and spiritual blindness, we may find one in the mission of the Apostle Paul as described in his own words. In his address before King Agrippa he said he had been commissioned by the Lord to go to the Gentiles—"to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." And a little farther on he describes what he did to produce these effects, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision: but showed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles that they repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance." The apostle certainly wrought miracles in demonstration of his mission, but there is no record that he was instrumental in opening the eyes of his hearers by any miraculous operation upon their minds and hearts. His method may be seen from a reference to his recorded discourses—such as at Antioch, Acts xiii. 16,41; and at Athens, xvii. 22, 31. Thus he "opened the eyes" of both Jews and Gentiles.

When David uttered the petition, "Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law," he was in a different position from ours. He could use such petitions as these, "Cast me not away from thy presence; and take not thy Holy Spirit from me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free Spirit." Will any one maintain that David's petition "Open thou mine eyes," has not a direct relation to the position he occupied as an inspired prophet, as indicated in the petitions just quoted?

I am quite aware that in the record of Mark and Luke, who give only PART of the quotation, there is an appearance of purpose on the part of our Lord in speaking to "those without" in parables, THAT they should understand. This arises from Mark and Luke's omission of the true reason as given in Matthew, and from the ambiguity of the conjunction rendered "THAT." This particle admits of being rendered "in order that," or simply "so that." By the latter rendering, and supplying from Matthew's fuller quotation the fact that it was the people themselves who closed their eyes, the difficulty vanishes. Neither Mark nor Luke were present when our Lord used the words from Isaiah; Matthew most probably was. John also partially quotes this text from Isaiah, to account for the unbelief of the Jews. The words are so far rendered ambiguous by the omission of a noun or pronoun as the nominative to the verb in the phrase "hath blinded their eyes." This nominative might be that represented by the English pronoun "he," as in the common version, or it might be, as given in the margin of the Palimpsestus Greek Testament "ho laos houtos—this people, being a noun in the singular number. This latter suggestion is in strict accordance with the fact as declared in the use made of the quotation by our Lord and by the Apostle Paul, as already stated.

The statement that "No man comes to know the truth except by a personal teaching of the Spirit of God," standing by itself without qualification and apparently ignoring the instrumentality specially provided by the Spirit, namely, "the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God," admits only of a simple denial of its accuracy, till proof is offered. The testimony of the Scriptures is here both clear and emphatic. "The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword," etc. "Is not my word like as a fire, saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" The men who gave utterance to the sacred oracles were "holy men of God who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;" hence it is not mere human words by which saving effects are produced. Jehovah says, "Is not MY WORD like as a fire and a hammer?" It is "the WORD OF GOD which is quick and powerful."

Again, "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God.... for they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. ii. Quite true. But what are these things. The Apostle was speaking of "the deep things of God" which "eye hath not seen," etc., but which "God revealed to the apostles by his Spirit" even "the wisdom of God in a mystery." This the Apostles "spoke among them that were perfect;" being the "strong meat" as contrasted with the "milk for babes," and even more strikingly with the elementary truth mentioned in verse 2, namely "Jesus Anointed and crucified." This Paul made known to all and sundry—Jew and Gentile, Barbarian and Scythian, Bond and Free—in Corinth, and elsewhere. At the same time "the wisdom of God in a mystery" was reserved for an inner circle taken out from the mass, by the broad cast sowing of the good seed—"the word of the kingdom." Here now it is fitting to observe that "the word of the kingdom," is not to be confounded with "the mysteries of the kingdom." The former was proclaimed to the multitude by our Lord and his Apostles; of the latter our Lord himself said to his disciples, "It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." By becoming his disciples through submission and belief of "the gospel of the kingdom" and obedience thereto, they placed themselves in the position of having the mysteries of the kingdom made known to them. Just as we might observe in a school for advanced education the unreasonableness of expecting to find instruction given in algebraical problems before going through the elementary rules of arithmetic.

I have dwelt at such length on this subject, because it is one as to which I feel very strongly. The views propounded by Mr. White I consider have led thousands to look anywhere than to the Bible for enlightenment. In the words of Professor Kirk, "With heaven's best treasure in their hand, in their own language, and speaking too, in plain and simple terms, they have been led to regard it as a "dead letter," and to turn away from it in expectation of some mysterious touch of power that might remove all their evils, and open their eyes to see the light, we would not for ten thousand worlds stand under the responsibility of thus turning the mind away from the Book of God."

Whatever may be the true significance of the phrase, "The mystery of godliness," I trust I have said enough to show that it has nothing to do with "the Divine Blinding of men."

THE CLASS-LEADER.

A dear sister was chosen to lead in the prayer-meeting. She called on the young, on the little ones, on the timid, to get up and speak for Jesus. There was something in her manner—perhaps it was her earnestness,—that gave none refuse. Some who had never dreamed they could say a word, soon became interested and active workers, and all were blessed and encouraged by the mutual help given and received from new voices and fresher thought. Some one playfully suggested that the sister be called their class-leader.

I was thinking about the word tonight, a class-leader, one leading in the paths of right, setting an example for the young to follow, teaching them the way of righteousness, blessed pleasant joyful privilege! and happy are they who follow in the steps of such a leader!

Happy are they who in their inmost hearts, feel that they are in deed and in truth, the Lord's, and are willing and ready to obey his call, come through whom it may. Dear young friends live out the counsels of God's word: be what it tells you to be, think what God says to you, and let what he says, shape your course, not only in the prayer-meeting but in every place, and at every hour of the day. So will you be at rest now and be at rest when Jesus comes.

JERUSALEM'S SECOND WALL.

Jerusalem contains many buried secrets. In some places 60, 70 and even as much as 100 feet of rubbish has been accumulated over what was at a former period the surface of the ground. The first great beginning of this heaping up of the fragments of destruction may be dated at the time when Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem and carried off the inhabitants to "the rivers of Babylon." At that time, Nebuzar-Adan, who commanded the Obelboads, "burned the House of the Lord," and it is also stated that "the Chaldeans burned the King's house and the houses of the people with fire, and broke down the walls of Jerusalem." This must have been a very complete demolition, and the result necessarily produced a very large archæological deposit. The unfortunate city has undergone many similar operations since that time, and on each occasion a new stratum of remains has been laid down but any one, however little he may have read on the subject, throw his thoughts back on such a history, and he will easily conceive what may be hid under the streets of modern Jerusalem. It is to Sir Charles Warren, the present First Commissioner of Police, who, as Captain Warren, acted for the Palestine Exploration fund, that we owe our first glimpses of "Underground Jerusalem." He told us in exact figures of the great depth of rubbish which had gathered in the valleys, and which, in spite of the filling up, are still visible in the ancient city. The work of Sir C. Warren cleared up some points that were formerly doubtful, but much remains obscure. There are many problems regarding the old topography which can not be solved till further excavations are made. Prominent among the points requiring light to be thrown on them are the exact positions of the Temple and Holy Sepulchre. The questions have not only a historical and archæological interest, but the whole Christian world has naturally a deep anxiety to know the exact truth regarding them. At present no excavations can be carried on; the Porte refuses all applications for permission to explore where digging might at present be done, and it is only when the foundations of a house requires the clearing away of the ground that chance brings something to light.

Such a chance has lately taken place. A new hotel had to be built near the Jaffa Gate, this was the Mediterranean Hotel, which, as visitors to Jerusalem will remember, formerly stood not far within the Damascus Gate. The spot where this took place may be described in the words of the account which has come home—it is "at the head of David street," not named directly from the royal Psalmist, but from the Tower of David which stands at the end of it. Here, in clearing out the foundations, old walls, vaults and cisterns, were laid bare; but the most important discovery was come to at a depth of fifteen feet. Here were found the remains of an old wall, which is supposed to have been one of the ancient city walls, and almost all the authorities are agreed that it is the "second wall" of Josephus which has been so long sought for. About thirty yards of this wall have been uncovered. Two courses, and in places three courses, of the stones remain in position. These stones are large and similar to those in the Tower of David. The line of the wall begins directly opposite the tower, and runs to the north, trending slightly to the west. So far it follows a line parallel to the present wall running from the Jaffa Gate to the northwest corner of the city. The interest attaching to this is peculiar. A great many people believe that the Holy Sepulchre does not stand on Golgotha nor over the new sepulchre, "wherein was never man laid," which had been excavated in the Garden of Joseph of Arimathea. Dr. Robinson was not the first to express doubts on this subject, but he has dealt largely on it in his work on Jerusalem; Captain Conder prefers for Golgotha, or Calvary, the round mound "formed like a skull" outside of the Damascus Gate. General Gordon, who lived some months in Jerusalem immediately before going to Khartoum, and devoted his time exclusively to the study of this subject, also accepted the knob of rock at the Damascus Gate as the most probable position. The connection existing between the Holy Sepulchre and the second wall comes about in this way: the crucifixion took place "without the gate." Now the second wall is supposed to be as old as the time of Hezekiah, and its existence at the time of the Savior's sojourn on earth is not doubted. The Holy Sepulchre is at present in the very middle of the city. The city may have grown round it in eighteen centuries, but if this second wall could be traced so as to include the spot within its circuit, its specially exalted sanctity would be at once destroyed. The most sacred shrine of the Christian Church would cease to exist; the Crusades would be looked upon as a delusion, as only a fight for an empty nut-shell. This will show the importance which attaches to the few feet of ancient masonry which has been discovered at the head of "David street," in Jerusalem. The thirty yards of wall is not enough to decide the point; it would require perhaps to be traced 100 yards further to know whether it went off to the west, and included the Holy Sepulchre, or turns to the east, so as to leave the shrine "without the gate." A continued exploration is impossible, as the space is all built over to the north. Under these houses lies the secret which has such interest and importance. There for the present it must remain, and so must wait till the time comes when some other house has to be rebuilt and the digging of the foundations may give us another glimpse of this significant wall.—London News

"Saints and Faithful Brethren in Christ." Col. i. 2.

"Saints."—A word that has been woefully misapplied. "The Church" (so-called) has given it as a special honor to a few, and "decorated" with it mainly the possessors of a false idea of sanctity, that of the ascetic and monastic sort. (The worldling) uses it with a sarcastic intonation, as if it implied much cry and little wool, loud professions and small performances, not without a touch of hypocrisy and crafty self-seeking.

Saints are not people living in cloisters after a fantastic ideal, but men and women immersed in the vulgar work of every day life and worried by the small prosaic anxieties which fret us all, who amidst the whirr of the spindle in the mill, and the clink of scales on the counter, and the hubbub of the market-place, and the jangle of the courts, are yet living lives of conscious devotion to God.

The root idea of the word, which is an Old Testament word, is not moral purity, but separation to God. The holy things were things set apart from ordinary use for his service. So, on the high priest's mitre was written, "Holiness to the Lord." So the Sabbath was kept "holy," because set apart from the week in obedience to the Divine command.

Sanctify and Saint are now mainly used with the idea of moral purity, but that is a secondary meaning. The real primary signification is separation to God. Consecration to him is the root from which the white flower of purity springs most surely. There is a deep lesson in the word as to the method of attaining cleanness of life and spirit. We cannot make ourselves pure, but we can yield ourselves to God, and the purity will come.

We are Christians as far as we give ourselves to God, in the surrender of our will and the practical obedience of our lives, so far and not one inch further. We are not Christians unless we thus consecrate ourselves. Pleasing self, and making my own will my law, and living for my own ends, is destructive of all (personal) Christianity. Saints are not an eminent sort of Christians, but all Christians are saints, and he who is not a saint is not a Christian. The true consecration is the surrender of the will, which no man do for us, and the one motive which will lead us selfish and stubborn men to bow our necks to that gentle yoke, and come out of the misery of pleasing self into the peace of serving God, is drawn from the great love of him who devoted himself to God and man, and bought us for his own by giving himself utterly to be ours. All sanctity begins with consecration to God. All consecration rests upon the faith of Christ's sacrifice. And if, drawn by the great love of Christ to us unworthy, we give ourselves away to God in him, then he gives himself in deep communion to us. "I am thine" has over its chief chord, which completes the fulness of its music, "Thou art mine." And so, "saint" has a name of dignity and honor, as well as a stringent requirement. There is implied in it, too, safety from all that would threaten life or union with him. He will not hold his with a slack hand that negligently lets them drop, or a feeble hand that cannot keep them from a fall.—Alexander Maclaren, D. D., in "the Expositor" for January, 1885.

THE RESTITUTION means "the full establishment of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous; and the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also, a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential to salvation.

FROM our news column it will be learned that Prince Alexander was deposed from the Bulgarian throne through conspiracy; and that he is returning to re-occupy the kingly chair of State once more. This re-occupancy may possibly precipitate a crisis in Oriental affairs instead of repressing the irrepressible. The N. Y. Sun has the following Editorial comments on the present condition of affairs which we place before our readers as a brief and careful review of the complication and possible results growing out of this notable conspiracy. The days of Ottoman Supremacy in the East are about numbered. As the Crescent is waning toward final extinguishment, Jacob's Star is gleaming more brightly in the Eastern horizon.

"Although the pro-Russian conspiracy at Sophia has collapsed, and it is expected that the kidnapped Prince will presently resume his throne, it does not follow that the incident may not have consequences of extreme gravity. The resentment excited by the plot will tend to make Bulgaria a more formidable obstacle to Muscovite ambition, while if the Czar abandons the revolutionists who have incurred imprisonment and risked hanging on his behalf, he will not easily win partisans hereafter in the Balkan region. His influence throughout the south Slavonic States and at Constantinople would be immeasurably weaker than it was a week ago, and that of England would be proportionately magnified.

It is hardly credible that such meek submission to the failure of a scheme concerted in his interest will be evinced by a ruler so stiff-necked and imperious as the present Czar is said to be. On occasions much less galling he has, according to report, made light of the counsels of his Ministers and allowed his personal vindictiveness to control affairs of the State. In this case, too, his irritation is evidently shared by the Russian people, who feel that Bulgaria must be overpowered by force, since intrigue has miscarried. From the Panslavic point of view, and so long as Constantinople is the object of Russian aspiration, it is indispensable that the State commanding the passes of the Balkans should become an obsequious dependent, instead of the inexorable enemy which, under the Prince Alexander of Battenberg, it would unquestionably be.

No formal protestations will clear the Czar from suspicions of complicity in a shabby plot to kidnap a fellow sovereign. His fault or his misfortune has placed him in the position of a desperate offender who, seeing that he has the name, resolves to have the game as well, He would incur no more obloquy than he labors under now in the eyes of Europe should he defiantly announce that he would tolerate no longer the presence of an anti-Russian ruler in Bulgaria. Blame he cannot in any case escape, but he may reassert the ascendency of terror, should he now throw off the mask and demand that the national assembly about to convene at Sophia shall, under penalty of immediate invasion, elect another executive chief. That the Czar may design even such a brazen disregard of international decencies and duties would be inferred if there is ground for the report of active military preparations at Batoum and in Bessarabia, and if the minacious posture of the St. Petersburg official press is to bear its natural construction.

But it is very doubtful whether the Bulgarians in their present exasperated mood would submit tamely to the Czar's dictation, and the threat of armed occupation might have to be carried out. The result would be a war, into whose vortex all the powers interested in southeastern Europe would probably be swept. The Porte would have to resist an invasion of its vassal's territory, or forfeit the last shred of dignity and power. It would have a right to claim assistance from England and the other parties to the Berlin treaty, and it is fairly presumable that sooner or later, the call would be headed by a Tory Government. Then, even were Bismarck sincerely desirous of maintaining neutrality, it would be difficult to hold back Roumania from joining the antagonists of Russia, and the Magyars would endeavor to commit the Hapsburgh empire to the same side. The area, in brief, of the disturbance caused by an attempt of Russia to occupy Bulgaria could not be circumscribed, and yet it is hard to see how the Czar, without a fatal loss of prestige, can now avoid an act which would produce the long-feared explosion in the Balkan peninsula."

OBEY THEM.

Under this captain I find an article in THE RESTITUTION for July the 21st, from the pen of Sister Wines, which I consider well worth perusing, and even re-perusing, for it is on a subject which is too much neglected, by both our public speakers and writers. While I endorse every sentence in the article referred to, I yet have one objection against it. And that is, that it was entirely too short.

The first text cited by our Sister is one of very great importance. And cannot be dwelt upon with too strong emphasis. "Obey them that have the rule over you." But why? Paul gives a very important reason. "For they watch for your souls, as they that must give account." Oh, the great responsibility that rests on the elders of the church! Do they realize it? Do they consider that they, in a great measure, will be held responsible for the welfare of their congregation? Do they watch over their congregation for their welfare as the good shepherd watches over his flock? Or do they think preaching to them occasionally with a view to proselyting the unconverted is sufficient? Ah! Here comes in another text cited by our beloved sister. "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor." 1 Tim. v. 17. But in what way can we bestow the greatest honor upon such an elder? I answer by yielding the most implicit obedience to the elder's good advice and order. Hence Paul's admonition, "Obey them that have rule over you, and submit yourselves, for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account." (And), "That they may do it with joy, and not with grief;" it is all important that you regard and esteem them as your leaders; and you give them all the honors due to them for their care over you.

But here I may be met with the cry of Equality of authority in the church! by some who are not willing to grant such offices as eldership and deaconship in the church; claiming that all preachers are elders, whether ever appointed as such or not. Hence as soon as they have learned a few isolated sermons they start out on their own hook to preach; and, of course claim to be elders wherever they go. This is causing a great deal of discord and confusion among us. By proper organization these troubles could all be avoided. But to return. "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine."

Now, it is not absolutely necessary that the elders in all cases be able to preach; but to be a worthy elder, he must be able to govern, control and rule over the church under his care, not with rigor, but in mildness and kindness. Not as lording it over God's heritage, but as an example to the flock over which he is ruler, and overseer. But, says one, I don't like the word "rule," it sounds too harsh; I would prefer "preside."

Well, let us look at the definitions of the two words.

American Popular Dictionary. Rule; as a verb, to govern, to control. Preside; as a verb, to superintend, direct, control. Now, I must confess that, with my limited capacity of mind I am unable to discern the difference of meaning between the two terms, if there is any.

But for an elder properly to preside over a church, that is, to rule so he must superintend, direct and control all the affairs of the church; and continually keep himself posted in regard to the state and standing of each member of the church, so as to know the wants of each individual member; so that, as Paul says, "Whether one member suffer all members suffer with it, or if one member is honored all rejoice together." Then order, peace, harmony and love will be the result. And so the church will truly be as a light shining all around, so that others would be constrained to fall in, making increase of the body to the edification of itself in love; and thus many would be won over to the plan of redemption, and God be glorified. Oh, the great responsibility that is resting on the shoulders of the elders of the church! No wonder that Paul admonishes them that rule well to be counted worthy of double honor.

If the responsibility of the elder is so great as this, we may well enquire, What are the qualifications requisite to the eldership? Let Paul answer. Paul to Titus, i. 5–9. "For this cause (purpose) left I thee in Crete that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee. If any be blameless, (bearing a good character), the husband of one wife, (polygamy then being practiced to some extent, in order to check the practice, the man who had more than one wife was not considered eligible to the office of an elder), having faithful children, not accused of riot, not unruly." "For a bishop (elder) must be blameless, as the steward of God: Not self-willed, (or selfish), not soon angry, (so that he can pass by an occasional insult, or provocation without retaliating), not given to wine, (not an inebriate), no striker, not given to filthy lucre; (not too greedy for gain, but benevolent to the poor); but a lover of hospitality, (that is, he must be kind and hospitable to the needy), a lover of good men, (keeping out of bad company), just, (dealing honestly), holy, (pious), temperate; Get his moderation be known among all men); holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able, by sound doctrine, both to exhort and convince the gainsayers."

Hence Paul admonished Timothy to commit the things which he had learned of him, to faithful men that they might teach the same to others also. 2 Tim. ii. 2.

Once more: "A bishop (elder) then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach; not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient; not a brawler, not covetous; one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; (for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?) From this it appears that the elder must have the same control over the church that the just man has over his household. Hence Paul's admonition, "Obey them that have the rule over you."

With such an eldership as here set forth a church must prosper, and be as a city that is built on a hill, reflecting its light on all around it.

But the elder must not be "A novice; lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. Moreover, he must have a good report of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil," 1 Tim. iii. 2–8.

But here I leave the subject for the present, lest I weary the patience of the reader.

JOSEPH MESSIMORE.

At the June Conference, after consultation with several brethren, I agreed to write an article for publication in THE RESTITUTION, urging all the churches in Indiana to send delegates to the Annual Conference to be held at Argos, commencing September 10, for the purpose of considering the question of a more perfect organization. I have been afflicted with sore eyes for several weeks so that I could neither read nor write, and they are no better now. I can therefore only write an excuse for not attending to the matter. Every church ought to be represented at all our conferences by delegates, so that we might compare notes and talk over the best mode of promulgating the gospel and pushing forward the Master's cause.

All the preaching brethren ought to be sent to the conference by their respective congregations, and while there they should meet together and talk over the best mode of keeping up an interest in their respective congregations and of reaching and interesting those outside. Men engaged in all other pursuits of life do this, from the judge on the supreme bench to the hod carrier. In the multitude of counsel there is wisdom. We are not accomplishing what ought to be done and we cannot afford to let matters simply drift. The Master has put the work in our hands and will hold us responsible for its faithful performance.

We want every church in the State to send at least one delegate to the conference, that this matter may be carefully considered. All that is necessary is for each church to pass a resolution authorising some one to act for them as their delegate. If it is not convenient for some member of a congregation to attend, any one who will attend can be authorized to act for the congregation. A more systematic effort than has heretofore been made for the support of THE RESTITUTION must be put forth. This can best be done through a proper organization of the conference.

Do not be content with sending one delegate, send as many as can possibly come. A sister can act as delegate just as well as a brother. Hoping to meet a large delegation at the conference and praying that we may have a good meeting, I am your brother in Christ. R. S. DWIGGINS.

Youth's Column.

Our Father in Heaven.

When I look up to yonder sky,
So pure, so bright, so wondrous high,
I think of One I cannot see,
But One who sees and cares for me.

His name is God: he gave me birth,
And every living thing on earth;
And every tree and flower that grows
To the same hand its being owes.

'Tis he my daily food provides,
And all that I require besides;
And when I close my slumbering eye,
I sleep in peace, for he is nigh.

Then surely I should ever love
This glorious God, who reigns above;
For very kind indeed is he,
To love a little child like me.

Melody in the Heart.

Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. Eph. v. 19.

A little girl, a member of a Sabbath School, was so delighted with the hymns they sang, that she was singing them the most of the time. One day her mother took her to call on a lady who was not pious, and charged her not to sing while there. The lady called upon introduced the subject of religion, when the little girl began to sing. She looked up, caught her mother's eye, and stopped. But as the conversation continued, she commenced a beautiful hymn, sang it through, and then ran to her mother, kneeled down, put her face in her lap and burst into tears, saying, "O mother, I did not mean to disobey you, but I could not help it. You may whip me, or do anything to me: but it keeps singing in my heart all the time, and it must come out. I must sing."

A Noble Child.

"Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another," Rom. xii. 10.

At one of the anniversaries of a Sabbath School in London, two little girls presented themselves to receive a prize, one of whom had recited a verse more than the other, both having learned several thousand verses of Scripture. The gentleman who presided inquired—

"And couldn't you have learned one verse more, and thus kept up with Martha?"

"Yes sir," the blushing child replied; "but I love Martha, and kept back on purpose."

"And was there any one of all these verses you have learned," again inquired the President, "that taught you this lesson?"

"There was, sir," she answered; blushing still more deeply—"In honor preferring one another."

The Reign of Fire.

You remember, I hope, that besides the water and the air that helped to fashion our beautiful earth out of the globe of rock covered by a heated ocean which existed in the past, another force has been mentioned—fire. Fire is still working day and night in changing the world, but it is mostly underground.

Air and water are as much levelers as they are builders. If only these two forces had been at work, the mountains would gradually have been brought low, and the valleys exalted, till finally every rock and island would have been worn down and buried in the depths of the sea. The world would have returned to the condition it had been in thousands of years before, only it would be cooler. But the internal fires were there to upset all this gradual change. They were never at rest. Again and again the sea bottom was lifted up, and became dry land, and the waters gathered together in new hollows.

Miners who go down into the earth for coal and iron find, after a certain distance, that it grows steadily warmer and warmer as they descend. If the heat of the earth goes on increasing at this rate, at thirty miles below the surface of the earth the heat would be so intense as to melt even iron or stone. As a matter of fact, things melt a great deal more easily when they are open to the air than when they are under pressure. Down deep in the earth the pressure of the rocks is tremendous, and this gets heavier the deeper it is. So there is a battle between the heat and the pressure down deep in the earth, and whether the rocks there are melted or solid depends on which is the stronger. Some people think that all but a thin shell over the outside of the world is red-hot liquid; others think it is hot enough to be liquid, but that the pressure keeps it solid. However this may be whenever, for any cause, the pressure is sufficiently lightened, the melted stone and cinders and steam come rushing out. Volcanoes are the chimneys by which they escape.

The cool crust of the earth is a great deal thinner in proportion to the rest of the globe than an egg-shell is to the egg. In old geologic time the shell was thinner than it is now. The fires then worked wonderful changes, the same in kind as they are working now, but much greater. The earth's crust—made of many layers of different kinds deposited by the water—was crumbled and torn and twisted in a most remarkable way.

The struggles of the internal fires often produce a sound and shaking—an earthquake. Suppose you were to lower a can of gunpowder (sealed up tight, and so arranged that it would go off in half an hour) into a pond. When the powder took fire it would explode, and as soon as the commotion reached the top of the water, a wave would spread out from a point above the explosion. An earthquake is such an explosion, only it is underground; the earth is thrown into waves, but instead of rocking and moving off as the water does, the ground, being solid, is torn and broken, and if the shock is severe, houses are thrown down and people destroyed. Sometimes things are thrown straight up into the air by an earthquake shock; at other times they are shaken backward and forward till they fall in ruins. This movement of the earth during a shock is at times a curious twisting motion, which has been known to turn pieces of furniture around so that their faces were to the wall. Rows of trees have been found twisted all out of line, though still growing. We are apt to think of earthquakes as being rare, and so they are with us; but in hot countries they are so common that it is probable that some part of the earth is quaking all the time.

Sometimes, when the shock is not very severe, the earth cracks underneath, but the crack does not quite come through. The melted stone then pours up and fills the cracks and hardens there. The intense heat of the melted stone often changes the rock through which it flows. Limestone, which is a rather soft stone made up largely of shells, is turned into pebble in this way. Marble, then, is merely "cooked" limestone.

A volcano, you know, is a mountain that sends out burning gases and lava and cinders. It is usually a high peak with a cup-like depression in the top called a crater. The volcanoes of the world are found almost always near the sea, and nearly three-quarters of them are situated upon islands.

If you have a globe—or, if you have not, a map of the world—put your finger on Terra del Fuego (the land of fire), at the very southern part of South America, then run it along the western coast of the two continents—the Andes and the Rocky Mountains being your guide—till you get to Alaska, where Asia and America almost touch; pass over to the Aleutian Islands and down by way of Islands across the Indian and Pacific oceans back to Terra del Fuego again. Your finger will have passed over most of the large volcanoes in the world. It is as if the earth's crust were cracked all around in the irregular line, that the mountain chains were the raised edges of this crack, and that the crack gave way every now and then, and through the broken places melted stone and gas and flames rushed out.

Some of the greatest volcanoes in the world are in the Pacific Islands. One of the Sandwich Islands is nothing but an immense volcano with three craters. The island has been built up by the outpouring of lava, which gradually lifted it, craters and all, out of the sea. One of these craters, Mount Kilauea, is an immense wide pit, large enough to hold a city. The rocky plain at the bottom of the pit, when there is an eruption, breaks up and fills with lava. It is a wonderful sight to see these great lakes of red-hot melted stone boiling and bubbling like a great pot of boiling water, and the red-hot waves beating against the rocky shore, and spurting fountains of fire rising up here and there. In one eruption the weight of lava was so great that it broke through the side of the crater and ran down, a river of living fire, to the sea. When it met the water, great clouds of hissing steam spouted up, carrying the cooled and shattered lava with it.

The lava in Kilauea is often like clear glass, and when the bubbles burst in the boiling lake, it is drawn out into fine spun glass, which the wind collects in sheltered spots. The Sandwich-Islanders used to call it Pele's hair, because they believed their goddess Pele lived under the crater, and caused its eruptions. Since I wrote these words a curious thing has happened to Kilauea; the bottom has tumbled out of the crater. The boiling, fiery lakes and fountains suddenly sunk in, and left it a great, dark abyss. In the the sea near the coast of Greece, more than 2,000 years ago, the crater of a great volcano was lifted out of the water. It made a sort of horseshoe island, part of the rim having been broken away. This island is called Santorin. In the curve of the bay inclosed by the horseshoe several volcanoes have burst up since, and are still sending out steam and vapor. The water around them is hot, and is colored orange by the iron and other things thrown out by the volcanoes.

The volcanoes in Europe, such as Etna and Vesuvius, are different from Kilauea. Before an eruption loud noises are heard, an earthquake shakes the ground, and then comes a sudden outpouring of lava and cinders and smoke. In one of these eruptions soon after the time of Christ two cities were buried by an overflow, one of mud and the other of cinders. A little more than a hundred years ago, in digging a well in a town that had grown up over the old one, the city was discovered. Imagine what a wonderful thing it must have been to walk those deserted streets, sealed up for nearly two thousand years, and find the houses, the baths, the libraries, almost uninjured! Those buried cities, Herculaneum and Pompeii, were destroyed as was thought until their rediscovery, about the middle of the eighteenth century—in the year 79. Some day you will read about them in Bulwer-Lytton's fascinating romance, "The Last Days of Pompeii."

In Mexico, in a peaceful district, where there were fine cotton plantations, a hundred and thirty years ago lived a rich planter, quietly cultivating his crops. Suddenly one day loud and terrible noises were heard underground; earthquake shocks were felt. This went on for two months, and then all quited down. After a few weeks of quiet the noises began again: the ground for about four miles swelled up in a great bladder, 500 feet high, which rose and fell, till finally a yawning gulf opened. Two rivers, which before had flowed peacefully through the country, plunged into this opening and were lost. Thousands of little mud volcanoes burst up all over the plain, an immense crater opened, and poured out such quantities of red-hot stones and ashes that it built up a range of six mountains. One of these is a volcano, called Jorullo, which has been active ever since.—Harper's Young People.

News Items.

ATHENS, Greece, Aug. 28.—Greece has again been visited by an earthquake which has been most disastrous in the Morea and in which the loss of life, according to the best information, reaches the enormous figure of 300. The village of Pyrgo and the town of Philiatra, both situated on the western coast of the Morea, were the chief sufferers, and these furnish, it is believed, all that have perished. In Pyrgo not a house is left standing, while Philiatra is almost swept from the face of the globe, swallowed up in the convulsions of the earth. The shocks were experienced throughout the entire extent of Greece to a greater or less degree. In the town of Zante every house was damaged and the inhabitants fled in terror to the open country.

Several towns in Italy were also visited by the earthquake, but not to any serious extent, Naples, Brindisi, Foggia, Caserta and Taranto being of the number.

ALEXANDRIA, August 28.—Violent shocks of earthquake have been experienced here and in other parts of Egypt, causing terror among the natives, but, so far as known, doing no serious damage.

CHARLESTON, S. C., August 28.—A shock of earthquake was felt here this morning at 4:48 o'clock. It extended as far north as Summerville, twenty-five miles from here.

LAIBACH, Austria, Aug. 28.—Prince Alexander leaves here today for Bulgaria. He will go via Giurgevo, Roumania, and expects to reach Bulgarian territory by tomorrow. His brothers, Francis and Ludwig, are with him, and will be his travelling companions.

The Gazette, of St. Petersburg, advises Alexander not to resume the government of Bulgaria, as such a step would only result in a second and more decisive overthrow.

SOFIA, Aug. 28.—The trial by court-martial of Messrs. Zankoff and Grueff and the Metropolitan Clement, leaders of the revolutionists who forced Prince Alexander to abdicate, has been finished. Messrs. Zankoff and Grueff were sentenced to death, and Clement was sentenced to imprisonment for life.

LONDON, August 28.—The Russians refused to allow Prince Alexander a saloon-carriage or servants, and only released him after Emperor William had telegraphed to the Czar on the subject.

Turkey is massing troops on the Roumelian frontier. Daily councils are being held at Constantinople to consider the situation.

VIENNA, August 30.—In a railway collision at Modling, eight miles from here, seven persons were killed and twenty-two wounded.

The recently deposed Prince Alexander, of Bulgaria, reached Bucharest, the capital of Roumania, yesterday, and was expected to leave there for Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, this morning, to resume the rulership.

Great excitement is reported in Naples and Bari, Italy, caused by a terrific eruption of Mount Vesuvius, following the recent earthquake shock.

Lightning struck a powder magazine southwest of Chicago, Sunday, containing about 100,000 pounds of powder and dynamite. The explosion was terrific, blowing the building to atoms, damaging other buildings in that vicinity, killing one person and severely injuring others, one of whom died this morning. The entire city was shaken as if by an earthquake.

The "Vandalia Line" has officially announced its rates and arrangements for the Autumnal Festivities in St. Louis. They seem to have fully realized the wants of the public, their patrons, and have made every arrangement possible to meet them. All will be nicely accommodated who take a trip to the "Future Great" during the festive season.

It has been the rule of MANY in past years to visit the Great St. Louis Fair and Exposition; this year it should be the rule of ALL. Each year it has seemed as if, in the programme offered there was no room left for improvement, yet improvement HAS continued until, judging from the programme offered this year, the climax MUST have been reached. ## THE COST OF TRUTH.

Great truths are dearly bought. The common truth,
Such as men give and take from day to day,
Comes in the common walks of easy life,
Blown by the careless wind across our way.

Great truths are dearly won, not formed by chance,
Not wafted on the breath of summer dreams;
But grasped in the great struggle of the soul,
Hard buffeting with adverse wind and stream.

Not in the general mart, 'mid corn and wine:
Not in the merchandise of golden gems:
Not in the world's gay halls of midnight mirth,
Nor 'mid the blaze of regal diadems:

But in the day of conflict, fear and grief,
When the strong hand of God put forth in might,
Ploughs up the subsoil of the stagnant heart,
And brings the imprisoned truth-seed to the light.

THE HOUSE OF MANY MANSIONS.
John xiv. 2, 3.

A Discourse by Dr. L. C. Thomas, preached at Wyoming, Del., June 20, 1886.

These words of Jesus were spoken to his disciples on the occasion of eating the last passover with them a few hours before he was crucified. He told them he had desired to eat that passover with them before he suffered, for, he said it was the last time he should eat it with them until that day when it is to be fulfilled in the kingdom of God, when he will eat again with them. Mark xiv. 25; Luke xxii. 16. He said he had many things to say to them. They had not fully understood the things he had told them about his approaching death and resurrection—"they understood none of these things." Luke xviii. 34. He therefore on this occasion, told them again that he was soon to leave them, that "a little while and ye shall not see me, because I go to the Father;" meaning a little while after his crucifixion and resurrection. See chap. xx. 17. He addressed them as "little children." He said, "Ye shall seek me: and as I said to the Jews, whither I go ye cannot come; so now I say to you." John xiii. 33, and xvi. 16. This plainly stated fact he had not only taught to the Jews, but he had also told Nicodemus a ruler of the Jews, that "no man hath ascended up to heaven" to find out and tell of heavenly things. And during the whole three years he had been with his disciples as their Teacher and Master, he had never taught them that when they died they would go to heaven, or that any person had ever gone to heaven at death to get their reward; but he had said, "thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just," here on earth, Luke xiv. 14; that he "the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. xvi. 27.

But when Peter heard his Master say, "whither I go ye cannot come," he asked, Lord whither goest thou? Jesus answered, whither I go, thou canst not follow me now: but thou shalt follow me afterwards. It is evident Jesus did not mean by the words, "thou canst not follow me," the same as when he said, whither I go ye cannot come; but he meant by "follow me," as explained by himself after he rose from the dead (chap. xxi. 19) where he used the same words, "follow me," "signifying by what death he (Peter) should glorify God"—that Peter should follow him by being crucified, which actually took place about 34 years afterwards. Peter himself, in his 2nd Epistle, ch. i. 14, corroborates this view, where he refers to his own soon expected death by crucifixion, saying, "even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewn me." This view is also corroborated by Peter's reply at the time. He said, "Lord why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake." This reply, shows clearly that Peter understood Jesus to mean by "follow me," simply the laying down his life, as Jesus was about to lay down his life. He therefore gave Jesus to understand that he was ready then to follow him through that terrible ordeal. He did not expect that when his death occurred, he should go to heaven and see Jesus and be with him. He says not a word about such a thing, for he knew what Jesus had said about it. He knew that the words of Jesus, "follow me, signified by what death he should glorify God," and not that he should go to heaven and be with Jesus. He knew also, as he himself had taught thirty-three years before, on the day of Pentecost, following the crucifixion of Christ, that even "David is not ascended up to heaven, but is dead and buried."

Jesus did not on this occasion, when about to leave his disciples and go to his Father in heaven, comfort them by telling them they would go to heaven also, when they died, and see him, and ever be with him, as he doubtless would have done if such was to have been the case. No, not a word of that kind. But he comforted them by saying, let not your heart be troubled, I will come again. In my Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am ye may be also.

Now what did he mean by Father's house, and by many mansions, and by preparing a place? I think I have made it clear that he did not mean what would contradict himself. He could not have meant what is taught by popular theology: that the place he was going to prepare was up in heaven, and that the righteous all go there when they die; for that would not only contradict what he had just told them, but also the entire Scriptures.

Neither did he mean as held by "Adventists," that he was going to build and prepare a literal city of houses and mansions up in heaven, the "New Jerusalem," which was to be of cubic form, 1500 miles square and 1500 miles high, and when prepared or finished to descend out of heaven to the earth, etc., (instead of which the word plainly says the New Jerusalem is "the bride, the Lamb's wife," the "one body," the inhabitants of the city, called the New Jerusalem by synecdoche). See Rev. xxi. 2–10.

What then did Jesus mean by "my Father's house?" The word "house" comes from the Hebrew bayith, and also the Greek oikia, which is the word used in this text; and the words are used in hundreds of instances throughout the Scriptures for family or household; and in other places for the dwelling or place in which the family lives, and sometimes for both family and dwelling place, and appurtenances. Thus the family of Jacob, the seventy souls who went down into Egypt to Joseph, are called "the house of Jacob," Gen. xlvi. 27, and the descendents of Jacob's brother, "The house of Esau." The individual tribes that descended from Jacob's twelve sons are called by the same term. Hence we have "the house of Joseph," Judges i. 35, "the house of Levi," etc.

Then, as the whole Jewish nation descended from Jacob, the son of Isaac, the son of Abraham, whom God chose, that nation was constituted God's house. But as Jacob had two names, Jacob and Israel, the Jewish nation that descended from him was called sometimes the house of Jacob and sometimes the house of Israel. Then again, after the nation was divided, in the days of Rehoboam and Jeroboam, the ten tribes were called the house of Israel and the two tribes the house of Judah. But the entire nation, the whole twelve tribes, were constituted God's house, family, household.

We have also many instances of house used in this sense in the New Testament. "Cornelius feared God with all his house." Acts x. 2. "If a man know not how to rule his own house." "Christ as a Son over his own house." "Having a High Priest over the house of God." "Judgment must begin at the house of God." 1 Peter iv. 17. So God has a "house," a "family," the whole family in heaven and earth." Eph. iii. 14, 15. (Jesus, the Elder Brother, "the first born," is in heaven.) He has a "household." Eph. ii. 18–22. He chose Abraham (Neh. ix. 7) and his seed, his descendants—fleshly and spiritual—(Deut. vii. 6) because "he knew Abraham would command his children and his household after him, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which the Lord hath spoken of him," Gen. xviii. 19, and told him he should become a great and mighty nation, and the father of many nations, "and all the nations of the earth be blessed in him and his seed." Gen. xvii. 5, and xviii. 18. And when Abraham's son Isaac was begotten, he being about a hundred years and Sarah ninety, God overruled, and Sarah received strength to conceive seed, Heb. xi. 11, and thus Isaac was a "child of promise, born according to spirit." Dis. Gal. iv. 22, 23. And when Isaac took a wife, Rebekah, it was said unto her, be thou the mother of thousands of millions, and let thy seed possess the gate of those which hate them." Gen. xxiv. 60. And when Isaac's twin sons, Esau and Jacob, were born, God overruled so that Esau should sell his birthright to Jacob, and so that Jacob should receive the blessing of his father Isaac.

Then God changed Jacob's name, as before said, to Israel, and to his descendants, the twelve tribes, were sometimes called the house of Jacob, and sometimes the house of Israel, as before said. The first time they were called the house of Jacob, was when they went into Egypt. "All the souls of the house of Jacob which came into Egypt were three score and ten," and two hundred and fifty years after, when they came out of Egypt, they were for the first time called "the house of Israel." Ex. xvi. 31. Shortly after that God told this house of Jacob or Israel, that he had separated them from other people to be his house, or family, as follows: "I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people....and ye shall be holy (set apart for a particular purpose) unto me; for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people that ye should be mine," Lev. xx. 24–26, that is, my house, my people, my children, my family. He addresses them as follows: "Ye are the sons of the living God." Hosea i. 10. "Oh children of Israel, the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt" Amos iii. 1. The next year after he had so brought them out of Egypt and severed them, to be his house, and at the time Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses, God rebuked them and said to them, "My servant Moses is faithful in all mine house," Num. xii. 7, household or family. And even before this he had spoken of Israel as a nation, and said, "Israel is my son, even my first born," Ex. iv. 22, that is, my first-born nation, a nation made up of a "company" of nations; for he said to Jacob at the time he changed his name to Israel (a Prince) "a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins." Gen. xxxii. 28, and xxxv. 11. Thus we see that Israel, the twelve tribes of Jacob, were called and known as God's house and nation.

But what is more, God told this house of his that they were to be not only his household and nation but also his kingdom, etc., and he told it to them as an inducement for them to be obedient. He said to Moses, "Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine, and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Ex. ix. 3–6.

Now let us for a few moments consider what is meant by a nation and a kingdom. What is a kingdom? What are its constituents? We must all know that a kingdom consists of 1. A place or territory; 2. A nation of people as subjects; 3. A head or king and rulers to govern; 4. Capital or city where the king dwells; 5. Laws, by which the nation is governed. In other words, a kingdom consists of the people or nation of any territory or country organized so as to have rulers, subjects, capital and laws. A community, a city, town, or hamlet, could not exist without order, involving some recognised laws or rules of government and obedience. God's house or people prospering and increasing became a nation, and of necessity therefore a kingdom. Even any well regulated family, with its head or rulers, its rules of living and business, and its children to be ruled or trained, is virtually a little kingdom. The Israelites were therefore God's house, nation and kingdom, as he told them they should be. Over 800 years after he told them so, he said to them, "I swear unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine,....and thou didst prosper into a kingdom." Ezek. xvi. 8, 13. And he said also, "the Lord your God was your King." 1 Sam. xii. 12. He likewise said, "I am a Father to Israel." Jer. xxxi. 9. He was therefore the Father and head of the house, and King of the kingdom. And when he permitted them to have a man to be king over them, "like all the nations," (as they said, 1 Sam. viii. 5, 20) they were required to take the man pointed out by God, and to be still governed by God's laws, and they therefore still remained not only God's house, but God's kingdom "in the hand of the sons of David," 2 Chron. xiii. 5, 8; 1 Chron. xvii. 14, where it is to remain "forever" after its restoration at the return of David's Royal Son and heir. 1 Chron. xxviii. 4; Luke i. 32."

Such was the origin, the beginning, of what Jesus meant by "my Father's house." Again, after Israel refused to believe God, and rebelled, and provoked him, we have the following language applied to them, "When the Lord saw it he abhorred them, because of the provocation of his sons and his daughters.....They are a very forward generation, children in whom is no faith." Deut. xxxii. 19, 20. "Mine house is waste." Hag. i. 9, "I have forsaken mine house." Jer. xii. 7. "I will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel." Hosea i. 4. This has also been fulfilled. This fleshly rudimentary typical house and kingdom of Israel, has in consequence of their faithlessness and disobedience, been overturned, and is no more, for the time being. The Father commences to forsake his house, and to punish, and overturn, and "cast them out of his presence," and "out of his sight," 2 Kings xxiv. 20; Jer. vii. 15, and scatter them among all nations to endure their long, long national punishment, according to their deserts and their Father's threats, many centuries ago; even centuries before he, the "householder," gave them his last offer of mercy and repentance, saying, "I will send my beloved Son; it may be they will reverence him when they see him." Luke xx. 13; Matt. xxi. 33. And when he came, he said he was "not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Matt. xv. 24. But as they wickedly rejected even him, he told them, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate, for I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. xxiii. 38, 39. The nation of Israel will then, when their king so cometh, acknowledge and accept him; for at his birth it was announced that "the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32, 33.

I said this casting off, dispersion and long punishment commenced long ago. God said to Zedekiah, the last Israelite that ever occupied the throne of the kingdom of Israel, as follows, "Thou profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end; Thus saith the Lord God, remove the diadem and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, (the throne and kingdom of Israel) and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 25. (I will "restore again the kingdom to Israel." Acts. i. 6). The right to rule over Israel was then given to the Babylonians, represented by the head of gold, in the image of Dan. ii. 38–41. Afterwards overturned to the Medes and Persians, subsequently overturned to the Grecians, and lastly overturned to the Romans, by whom the capital, polity and nationality of the Jews were completely destroyed, and the house and kingdom of Israel became no more, and is to be no more until he come whose right it is to wear the crown, to reign as king over the house and kingdom of David and of God. Thirty-seven years before this destruction, when Jesus the Messiah, Son of David according to the flesh, and Son of God according to spirit, was here, not then as the one whose right it is, but at that time there were older heirs, besides, the one whose right it is, must be an immortal, never-dying heir, so as to fulfil the word, "David shall never [after that] want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel." Jer. xxxiii. 14–17), but at that time, when Jesus was here to die for the world, to lay down his life for his brethren; he told the Jews that "the kingdom of God (that is, the right and privilege of being the rulers, the kings, in God's kingdom) should be taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Matt. xxi. 43. Hence we see that this phase of the house and kingdom of God (for it has two phases, the rudimentary or typical, with its fleshly or mortal rulers, and the real or anti-typical, with its spiritual or immortal rulers—"kings and priests,") this fleshly phase I say has ceased or passed by as to its organized existence. But its divinely-written history of the past, as a system of types, together with the glowing prophetical descriptions of the future of our Father's house and kingdom, all caused to be "written aforetime for our learning, that we might have hope," Rom xv. 4, afford ample and important instruction and enlightenment as to the wonderful purpose of our heavenly Father in the near future.

Thus we see that God's fleshly house of Israel is no more. "The Tabernacle of David is fallen down." Acts xv. 16. Jerusalem, "the City of David," 2 Sam. v. 6–9, is being "trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 24. The kingdom is no more for the time being. But it is only an interregnum. The territory, the Holy Land, still exists. The people, the Israelites, estimated at over eight millions, still exist. The King of Israel, the Son of David, the great, ever-living head of the house of David, and house of God, the royal heir to the throne of David, and throne of God, has only gone away for the time being, "to receive for himself a kingdom and to return." Luke xix. 12. The interregnum between the fleshly imperfect house and kingdom, and the spiritual perfect house and kingdom, is nearly expired. Soon, therefore, the Father's house and kingdom will be re-organized, "restored," "set up," in the chosen place.

During the interregnum, the Master of the house, Jesus, by means of the proclamation of his gospel, the glad tidings of his coming reign, "which is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth," has been and still is, "taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name," "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people," to be joint rulers with himself over his Father's house and kingdom when re-organized. God having taken away from fleshly Israel the rulership or right to rule over his house and kingdom, as Jesus told them would be done; he will give it to this chosen holy nation, this peculiar people, thus taken out of the Gentiles, who shall bring forth the fruits thereof; a true Israel, Israelites indeed, Jews inwardly, "his own spiritual house; whose house are we," said Paul, Heb. iii. 6; 1 Peter ii. 5–9. And again, "know ye not that ye are the temple of God." 1 Cor. iii. 16. The Master of the house is now preparing a place and a position for every one of his brethren, every member of his body, of his Father's family; as rulers kings and priests in his Father's house. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. Now are we the sons of God (begotten sons) but it doth not yet appear what we shall be (when we shall become born sons, born from the dead, and our mortal nature changed to "Divine nature," at the return of Jesus) but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him," 1 John iii. 1, our elder brother. He is now preparing a place, and a position in the place, for every one of his brethren thus being taken out of the Gentiles during the times of the Gentiles.

Until this important work of taking out from the Gentile quarry the requisite number of stones, fitted and polished, bright and "lively stones," with which to build the spiritual house, or holy temple in the Lord (see Eph. ii. 19–22; 1 Peter ii. 5–9) for an "habitation of God through the Spirit," the work of preparing and building will not be completed. Again this peculiar people are also called "the body of Christ," and "the name," and are being thus taken out "for the name." They are also called the city, "the New Jerusalem," the bride, the Lamb's wife, Rev. xxi. 9. Hence until this work of "taking out" is completed it is impossible for the virgins who have been espoused to Christ, to be "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." And it is equally impossible for the Bridegroom to return to his marriage. Again, this spiritual house of the Father is called the house of David, which God said he would build. 2 Sam. vii. 11, 16–27; Heb. iii. 2–4. Paul says of the peculiar people, chosen generation, holy nation, which the Father and the only begotten Son, have been taking out of the Gentiles by the preaching of the glad tidings, ever since Jesus was about thirty years of ago (see Mark i. 14, 15; Luke vii. 1) to whom the kingdom, which has been taken away from the Jews, is to be given: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, (no longer Gentiles in the flesh, but "Jews inwardly") but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God (family of God—Diaglott) and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone: in whom all the building, fitly framed (compacted, Dia.) together, groweth unto an holy temple to the Lord. In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." James says of the "chosen nation," thus being taken out, "Hearken my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs (not inheritors yet) of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him."

Again, Paul speaks of the two phases of the Father's house, first, the merely constituted fleshly house under Moses, who was the head, under God, before it became a kingdom; and second, the spiritual house by faith and obedience under Christ, the present and future Head and King, of whom Paul says, "This man (Christ) was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who builded the house hath more honor than the house (Moses, etc.) For every house is builded by some one (R. V.) but he that built all things is God (by Christ.) Moses verily was faithful in all his (God's) house, as a servant, but Christ as a Son over his own house, (being also his Father's house) whose house are we (his disciples) if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." Heb. iii. 4–6. We are not yet God's completed house until we get the immortal nature, until we are "prepared," (taken from the quarry, fitted and polished for his temple, habitation, by his Spirit;) but Christ is superintending, "preparing," the spiritual building—the Father's house. Hence he is said by Paul to be "a High Priest over the house of God." Heb. x. 21. We are told by the word, that he is now our Advocate (helper, Greek, 1 John ii. 1, see Dia.) and maketh intercession for us. Paul says, "He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." Heb. vii. 25. By this means their temporal and spiritual wants are provided for.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first of January, 1886, and consequently is six months past due now. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June, "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" Octob-r, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

HE THAT OVERCOMES.—Rev. ii. and iii.

In the paradise of God,
The garden of the King,
Ever blooms the Tree of life,
Fair as early Spring.
From this tree, the fruit so sweet,
Christ, the Lord, shall give to eat,
To him that overcomes.

In the paradise of God,
The garden of the King,
Wears the precious Crown of Life,
Bright as angel's wing.
This fair crown shall Jesus give
To him that's faithful unto death,
To him that overcomes.

In the paradise of God,
The garden of the King,
Lies a white and stony stone,
With a new name and unknown,
For him that overcomes.

In the paradise of God,
The garden of the King;
Hidden manna, angel's food,
Christ our Lord shall give to eat,
To him that overcomes.

In the paradise of God,
The garden of the King:
Over kings and nations proud,
Shall rule with power and iron rod,
He that overcomes.

In the paradise of God,
The garden of the King;
With a vesture clean and white,
Clothed shall be as with the light
He that overcomes.

In the paradise of God,
The garden of the King:
Shall become a pillar strong,
And shall sit on Jesus' throne,
He that overcomes.

'Till we reach our blest abode,
In the paradise of God;
Let us fear not, faint or fall,
Trust in him who conquered all,
Who whispered are he breathed farewell,
I have overcome. C. J. C.

THE FIRST ADVENT.

HOW IT WAS LOOKED FOR, AND WHAT IT ACCOMPLISHED.

In this inquiry it shall be our purpose in the first instance to direct attention to the true place which the First Advent held in the hopes of all God's people prior to its fulfillment; and in the second place to what it has accomplished.

I. HOW IT WAS LOOKED FOR.

The Old Testament does not distinguish between a First and Second Advent. The theme which engages the attention of the prophets is the coming of a Messiah; they fully narrate what he has to do, but do not say that the work would be accomplished in two portions, separated by a long intervening time. There is no evidence that the patriarchs knew anything of this division of the Messiah's work. Prophecies, such as Isaiah liii. 12, and Psalm xxii. 1, 16, 18, were darkly, or not at all understood, and it is only by fulfillment and a fuller revelation that we understand the division as in Isaiah lxi. 1, 2. So whilst it may be the case that what was chiefly looked for was the Second Advent, yet we may be also quite correct in affirming that the hopes of the patriarchs were fixed on the First Advent, because it was not so much the time as the person in which they rejoiced. They longed earnestly for the Man—the Divine Messenger foretold of God—because through him there were many gracious promises of great blessings which they hoped to see fulfilled at his appearing.

In answer to the enquiry, therefore, How was the first advent looked for? we say, It was always looked forward to with great expectation, longing desire, and gladness. This is succinctly summed up in one sentence by the writer to the Hebrews: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them and greeted (hailed) them from afar," Heb. xi. 13. So also did the Lord Jesus testify regarding Abraham. "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see My day, and he saw it, and was glad," John viii. 56. Gladness was the constant spirit with which the event was anticipated. David, in his last words, when he knew that for the time he was going down into the land of darkness, silence, and forgetfulness, yet was filled with this glad hope, and said of it, "It is all my salvation, and all my desire," 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. See also Peter's allusion to David's hope in Acts ii. 26–31. The general expectation of the people was kindled by the prophecy of Moses, Deut. xviii., of a prophet and leader like unto himself who should appear, and to whom an implicit obedience was to be rendered; and this expectation was kept ever burning by the continued testimony to the same truth of "all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken."

So, when we come to the history of the time when Christ appeared, we find many tokens of this expectation, of which let us take two samples only. When John the Baptist appeared the curiosity of the people regarding him was aroused, and the nature of their expectations is evinced in the questions they put to him. "Who art thou? And he confessed, and denied not; and he confessed, I am not the Christ. And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elijah?" And he said, I am not. Art thou the prophet? And he answered, No. They said therefore unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself? He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said Isaiah the prophet," John i. 19–23. This declaration of John the Baptist would only serve to raise all hopes and thoughts of the Advent of the Messiah to the very tiptoe of expectation, and so we read John vi. 14, that when Jesus had performed a certain miracle, the people said: "This is of a truth the prophet that cometh into the world. This passage also reveals to us with striking accuracy what it was the people desired and expected in the Advent of the Messiah, for the narrative goes on to say: "Jesus therefore perceiving that they were about to come and take him by force to make him King, withdrew again into the mountain himself alone." It was a King they looked for, which is indeed the signification of the title Messiah.

I hardly need to dwell on this point, it is a fact so well authenticated, and generally admitted. Thus one writer says:—"It is admitted upon all hands, that at the time of our Savior's birth there was in the land of Judea the most earnest expectation, and the most assured hope, that an extraordinary personage, to whom the Jews gave the name of Messiah, was to arise. ..... It does not seem to admit of a doubt, that the hops of the Messiah was, in all ages among the Jews, the received national interpretation of those predictions in which they gloried."

That the same expectation was to some extent known amongst the Gentiles is witnessed by the coming of the wise men of the east to Jerusalem, asking, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him," Matt. ii. 2. "It is well known that prior to the first advent of the Lord, the coming of the Messiah formed the chief and almost only ground of expectation to the pious Israelites, which expectation had indeed extended beyond the people of Israel, and prevailed among many of the Gentiles. So intimately was the advent of Christ bound up with the important events which he was to accomplish, that it became difficult for the Jewish mind to separate the one from the other, and some of the very names which he familiarly bore among them when they spake of him, were indicative of the importance which they attached to that event, and the intensity with which they expected it, as the one waited for, and he that cometh," (Brook on Prophecy).

We thus see with what feelings the first advent was looked forward to, and there is a record of how two "pious Israelites" received the tidings of the accomplished fact in Luke ii. 26–38. Simeon and Anna, both devout persons "looking for the consolation of Israel," rejoiced, gave thanks, and blessed God, because they were privileged to see the Lord's Christ.

II. WHAT THE FIRST ADVENT ACCOMPLISHED.

This involves the question of the Atonement, a subject which we shall presently only deal with in its results.

The life of Christ, and the great sacrifice or giving up of that life for others, revolutionized the whole system of religious thought. The world had been accustomed to sacrificing to their gods by way of propitiation, and the Jews themselves were commanded to offer sacrifices to their God to make atonement for their sins. But not until Christ came and suffered, was the real value of sacrifice shewn in the doing of the will of God. "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams;" and Christ showed us how to render a perfect obedience.

But, further, it is very evident from the carelessness of men's lives; the spiritual pride which filled many in authority; and the gross immorality of the people; that the true meaning and value of the sacrifices which their priests offered, were not understood. Sin was treated too lightly; the sacrifices seem to have been looked upon as forms which might grant an absolution for the time being, and then the offerer continued to sin, just as we know Roman Catholics treated the absolution they received from their priests. But upon the cross there was shown to all the great and evil consequences of sin having entered into the world; for it was on account of the sins of the world that Christ died that painful death. The world did not understand this then, but the sacrifice was accompanied by such signs of the displeasure of God, that it was bound to take notice of the great event and wonder. How great must have been the agony in Gethsemane, and still later, when the heart-rending cry was torn from his lips; "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" All those who witnessed the later scene went away filled with amazement, smiting their breasts, and perchance were forced to confess like the centurion, "Certainly this was a righteous man." The world had never before, and has not since, seen such a wonderful manifestation of love in the combined innocence and patient suffering of the victim. Such a scene could not fail to have a permanent influence, and we rejoice to think that one of the great things accomplished by the first advent has been the establishing in the minds of men of a more exalted idea of the morality and life which God desires men to lead.

Another result has been the fuller revelation of the Father's character. Alas! how little has that been understood, and how much it is misunderstood at the present day! How often have we had it pressed on our attention that Christ came to appease a vengeful God; that but for his stepping between us and our Maker, we would have been consigned to an eternal misery! There is truth in the fact that Christ's intervention saves us from wrath, but, Oh! how much the teaching of the present day crowds out God from our loving thoughts, and removes him to a great distance where we are afraid to approach him! It has been forgotten that "God so loved the world" as to send his Son to save it.

Moreover, one of the very purposes of Christ's atonement, viz.: reconciliation, is obscured or made void by a false theology. The Scripture doctrine is that through Christ God is reconciling us to himself. "It was the good pleasure of the Father that in him (Christ) should all the fulness dwell; and through him to reconcile all things unto himself, having made peace through the blood of his cross; through him, I say, whether things upon the earth, or things in the heavens," Col. i. 19, 20. "All things are of God, who reconciled us to himself through Christ, and gave unto us the ministry of reconciliation; to' wit, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not reckoning unto them their trespasses, and having committed unto us the word of reconciliation," 1 Cor. v. 18, 19. It is we who in times past were enemies to God, and ignorant of the yearning love he bore to us; now Christ hath made it manifest to all, and we are led to say with grateful hearts, "Abba, Father." It is one of the most comforting and joyful of thoughts that we are reconciled to God through the blood of Christ; that on account of faith in that sacrifice no longer does God reckon our sins against us, but we are justified in his sight. We were guilty sinners, but our hearts have been made joyful by the words of acquittal: "There is therefore, now, no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus."

This leads us to speak more fully of what the first advent has accomplished in the way of abolishing sin and its concomitant—death. In the Mosaic economy provision was made by God for sacrifices as an atonement for sin, and the principle involved in these was the forfeiture of life. The life of the animal slain was accepted in place of that of the offerer or offerors. From the earliest time, when Abel and Cain offered their sacrifices, this principle of the forfeiture of life was recognized. It was the penalty of sin pronounced upon Adam, "Thou shalt surely die." Death was what the strict justice of God demanded, it was "the curse of the law."

These Levitical sacrifices could only at best be temporary, and they foreshadowed that more perfect sacrifice of himself which Christ made for the sins of the people. The principle is the same, however. "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law, having become a curse for us." In the just purposes of God it was necessary that there should be shedding of blood, which is a symbol of a forfeiture of life, and so Christ offered himself freely. He poured out his soul unto death, in order that we might be redeemed from that curse of the law. What great love was manifested in this act! Let us contemplate its effects for a little.

What was the condition of mankind before Christ came? It was one of hopeless ignorance and alienation from God. The world was sin-cursed; death seized hold of its inhabitants, and they were perishing daily, with no help at hand to save them. God saw all this, and he laid help upon One that was mighty to save. The Son of God saw it all, and knowing full well the contumely, the sorrow, suffering, and humiliation to which he would expose himself, even to the bitterest moment of all when his Father hid his face from him, yet he emptied himself of his glory, being rich, he became poor, himself became the sacrificial victim, yielding up his life, for whom? a rebel race. He underwent all these things because his soul was filled with love for the human race, and with the earnest desire to save them from the consequences of their own sin. More than that also, He was animated by the desire to exalt them to privileges and blessings which they could never hope to have obtained, except through his perfect obedience. Many Scriptures teach us of this animating desire, and of the reward he obtained for his self-sacrificing love. Paul's exhortation to the elders of Ephesus was, "Feed the church of God, which he purchased with his own blood." Peter's words to those who had put Jesus to death were, "Him did God exalt with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins," Acts v. 31. And the Lord himself has testified, "As the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself.....And this is the will of him that sent Me, that of all that which he hath given Me I should lose nothing, but should raise up it at the last day. For this is the will of My Father, that every one that beholdeth the Son, and believeth on him, should have eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day," John v. 26, and vi. 39, 40.

See, then, what has been secured to us by the first advent. We, or the faithful of any age, have not yet received the blessing of eternal life, but in the abolishing of sin, which also remains to be completely fulfilled, life comes as a natural sequence. The way is now clear and stripped of its dangers; no more do death's turbid and loathsome waters threaten to surge over us for ever. Our deliverance is made sure by the resurrection of the Head of a new creation, who, having conquered death, it hath no more dominion over him. Christ has carried off triumphantly the keys of death and Hades, and their dark portals can no more be shut upon us for ever; they must open when he calls to deliver all those whom the Father has given him.

But there is another part of the work of the first advent to which we must refer briefly. God made a covenant with Abraham, that in him and his seed should all families of the earth be blessed. That covenant of promise stands unrevoked by any later covenants, but was rather confirmed in Christ, the seed referred to. See Galatians iii. 16–18. But in the Epistle to the Hebrews, Jesus is said to be the Mediator of a new covenant. This cannot refer to the covenant of promise made with Abraham; it was of promise, stood confirmed, and therefore could not be disannulled. But, as we learn in Hebrews viii., this new covenant takes the place of one which was then ready to vanish away (which was the Law), and as that old covenant was made with the nation of Israel, so also shall the new one. A reference to Jeremiah xxxi., from which the writer to the Hebrews quotes, will show that the time of its being confirmed with the nation of Israel is yet future, when the Lord brings again their captivity and stablishes the weary soul. And it seems to us that this new covenant is made with Israel in order that they may be brought under and enjoy the blessings of the original covenant promise which God made with their father, Abraham, a covenant which was quite independent of, and unaffected by the later conditional one made at Mount Sinai, which the Israelites did not keep, and therefore it was broken.

As far as regards the nation of Israel, this new covenant has not been accepted, nevertheless it has been confirmed, or made sure; for just as we learn from Hebrews ix., that the first covenant was not dedicated without blood, so the new covenant has been sealed and confirmed by the shed blood of Christ. What does the confirmation mean? See Galatians iii. 15. "Brethren, I speak after the manner of men, though it be but a man's covenant; yet, when it hath been confirmed, no one maketh it void, or addeth thereto." Now, this covenant has its present force, as well as that future one to which we have referred, for it has pleased God to call the Gentiles also to a participation in the same blessings promised under the Abrahamic covenant. Thus Paul wrote to the Ephesians: "Ye were at that time separate from Christ, alienated from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world. But now in Christ Jesus ye that once were far-off are made nigh in the blood of Christ," ch. ii. 12, 13. It is a covenant which God is prepared to make through his Son with any one, be he Jew or Gentile, who will now accept its terms; and those who have accepted are reminded of its surety every time they remember their Lord in his memorial ordinance, for "this cup," he said, "is the new covenant in My blood."

Thus the first advent has secured to us Gentiles an inheritance in the blessings of that ancient promise made to Abraham, that in him and his seed should all nations of the earth be blessed. Henceforth we may reckon ourselves as heirs of the same great inheritance, and joint-heirs with Christ. Here is the sum of the whole matter: Christ has redeemed us from the power of the grave; he has bought us with his own precious blood, we are therefore no longer our own, but his, and that is enough. After that, "all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's."

If these thoughts should be read by any one who has not yet accepted a share in the blessings of the new covenant, let him in the quiet of his closet consider the gracious invitation, and accompanying promise, contained in these words of the now glorified Redeemer: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear My voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me. He that overcometh, I will give to him to sit down with Me in My throne, as I also overcame, and sat down with My Father in his throne."—R. K. Strang, in Messenger.

"Malachi prophesies that Elijah shall precede the day of the Lord, but that, as we know, refers to the Second Advent—that "great and terrible day."

The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 350 pages, Cloth bound. NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS:

The book is truthful, reverent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Rainbow.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Certainly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Lansing Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry.....The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a worldly, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

THE COMING AGE,

—FOR—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. F. WESTBEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand is in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 22, 1886. NO. 36.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and six Months the same rate.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the dual "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

The setting up of Christ's kingdom implies the downfall of all Gentile kingdoms; to the Jews, in Christ's time, it implied specially the removal of the Roman yoke under which they were then placed. Christ foreseeing that through their unbelief and lack of fitness for the kingdom, it would be put off till his second appearing, did not enter into details as the Old Testament seers had done. Had he done so, Cæsar might have laid violent hands upon him; as it was, he was accused with speaking things against Cæsar.

Jerusalem will be the head quarters, the city where the throne of the kingdom will be set up. "For the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23. "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem." Jer. iii. 17. "So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more." Joel iii. 17. Now unless God give us authority, we have no right to substitute for the plain, grammatical meaning of this language some other meaning entirely foreign. Any writer who should use language in a double sense, clearly expressing certain views by language understood according to its plain grammatical [illegible] authority, as it will be manifested in his kingdom, is given to him in his human capacity, as David's Son, and as the recompense of his humiliation and suffering. Christ, as man, was in the line of David, and was born a Jew, and David's throne belonged to him. He was the lawful heir, and hence his title, King of the Jews. It cannot, therefore, be right to speak disrespectfully of these views, as many preachers and writers do, calling them, by way of reproach, Jewish notions.

He who was once in Judæa in a state of humiliation, hated, despised, and persecuted, will shortly be there in exaltation and glory. Rejected by the nation at his first advent, he will then be received as their Deliverer. At his first advent he became the propitiation for the sins of the people; at his second advent he will have around him tens of thousands of saved ones, the fruits of his great sacrifice. At his first advent he allowed his enemies to have a temorary triumph; at his second advent he will gain a permanent triumph and shall reign for ever, and all his enemies shall be subdued, and every knee shall bow to him. The ordering of the world shall be reversed; truth and right and justice shall no longer be cast down; error and sin and rebellion shall be crushed; and righteousness shall be in the ascendency, and peace and happiness shall prevail.

The priesthood of Christ will not, as some think, come to an end at the close of this dispensation. In Psa. cx. 4, Jehovah says of Christ, "Thou art a priest after the order of Melchizedek." And in Zech. vi. 13, we read, "And he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne." Christ's priesthood cannot be ad[illegible]

The kingdom is definitely promised, and it is promised unconditionally, that is, in the sense that God will keep his word, that he will stand by his promise, that there shall be no possible failure in its ultimate establishment; but it may be said to be conditional in regard to the time of its establishment. It may be delayed by a measure of unbelief and unfaithfulness, and some want of preparation in those who shall be heirs of the kingdom; and also by the slow gathering of the remnant of Judah and Israel, who shall be subjects of the kingdom. We infer the possibility of delay from the fact that Christians are taught to pray, "Thy kingdom come;" "Come, Lord Jesus."

The following passages clearly show that Christ's exaltation as King, the gift to him of the kingdom, and the subjection of every human being to him, are given as the reward of his redemptive work in behalf of the human family. "Who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame." "And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross. Wherefore also God highly exalted him, and gave unto him the name which is above every name; that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Heb. xii. 2; Phil. ii. 8–11. It will be seen that the word things, in each clause, being in italics, is not in the original, but has been supplied by the translators; yet if we read beings for things, it will make far better sense, for only intelligent beings, and not inanimate things, can bow the knee to Jesus.

Christ as the Son of God, and as Creator and Preserver, is, with the Father, the sovereign Ruler, and that divine right of Rulership is inherent in his divine nature; but this is a different thing from his predicted reign as the Son of man, the Seed of David, the Christ. This latter is covenanted and promised, and it will be a divine and glorious rule over an earthly people; but his sovereignty is not a thing of promise. Christ's sovereignty, or rulership, is in his divine nature as the Son of God, as being one with the Father; but his rulership, his kingly [illegible] evidence that it will be a personal, bodily coming, and that his kingdom will be a visible kingdom. The first advent was in humanity, but humanity in a state of humiliation; and to fulfil God's great scheme, the second advent must be in humanity, but humanity in a state of glorification. The kingdom promised, and the subjects of the kingdom, require this. The appearance of the Son of man in glory as the King, when the kingdom is set up, is required by Old Testament prophecy, as much as his incarnation was required at the first advent by the prophecies of those Scriptures. The original Scripture words used to set forth the Lord's second appearing, according to their primary sense, demand that we understand a personal coming, a coming in his glorified human nature. The word Parousia used in this connection requires to have put upon it this meaning.

It is in his capacity as the Christ, the Anointed, that he receives this kingdom, and he receives it as the reward of his great atoning and mediatorial work in human redemption; and it is not, we repeat, to be confounded with his sovereignty as God, or as the second Person in the Godhead.

SILAS HENN.

[While fully and unwaveringly believing in the divine nature of our Lord Jesus Christ; and that his ineffable union with his heavenly Father is clearly and abundantly set forth in the Scriptures under such forms of expression as that he is the brightness or effulgence of God's glory, the express image of his person, or substance, and the one in whom dwells all the fulness of the Godhead—Greek, theotes, theotes, Deity—bodily, still in these days of theological controversy and speculation, we have come to the conclusion that the best course that we all can take is to employ only strictly Bible language in speaking on this confessedly transcendent theme. No form of language can be more definite in expressing the superlative excellency of the nature of our divine and adorable Redeemer than the invisible and eternal God, his heavenly Father, employed—SON OF GOD, or "My beloved Son"—when speaking from heaven, and from the "excellent glory" that once enveloped our Savior here on earth. Matt. iii. 17, and xvii. 5. It is only by clothing Bible ideas, truths and facts, in Bible language, that we can hope ever to come into the unity of the faith and knowledge of the Son of God. The views of the Editor differ by a whole hemisphere from those advocated by many in these days. Hence let us not be critical nor fault-finding with expressions that our brethren may think best to employ. The importance of using precise Scriptural language is forcibly shown in an article we have reprinted from the N. Y. Independent on the "Atonement." Knowing the diversity of opinion and belief among our contributors, and being desirous, at the same time, to kindly express our dissent from some of these views, we have, with all deference, appended this note to the contribution of our talented and highly respected contributor. After centuries of effort men have universally and utterly failed to satisfactorily formulate all the expressions contained in the Bible, relative to the Father and Son, in their divine relationship, into a creed worthy of any acceptation. Hence we, for ourself, urge the employment of the ipsissima verba, the most exact words, of God's revelation, on this theme. We close this note, that circumstances have made it necessary for us to write, with the request that our correspondents, while carefully expressing their own views, will respect the views and expressions of others.—ED.]

THE situation in the Old World is daily becoming more and more complicated. Diplomacy has always failed in its endeavors to solve the Eastern Question. That this, as well as some other questions, must soon be arbitrated by an appeal to the sword, is now a foregone conclusion. Chauncey M. Depew arrived home from Europe Sept. 19. In a brief summary of the whole condition of affairs in Europe he says:

"The tendency of the wages of artisans is downward, while the tendency to the necessaries of life for the workingman is not downward. The spread of socialism and anarchism, their threats and the occasional riots that occur, are alarming the large and the small property-holders alike, and, excepting in France, there is a reaction toward absolutism — the people are willing to surrender part of their liberties for the sake of [illegible] strong govern[illegible] now for.

our immigration [illegible] what I saw and heard of the [illegible] agitation and its influence in creating a tendency toward absolutism that the cause of liberty and democracy in Europe has received the greatest set-back it has received in twenty-five years. There has been a great impetus to the military spirit in Germany since the Franco-Prussian war, encouraged by the fear of the revenge of France on the one hand and the fear of the fulfilment of Napoleon's prophecy, that Europe would eventually be either Republican or Cossack. Today the Cossack holds the most dangerous power he ever wielded. Beneath the fear of the social revolution on the one hand and the military needs to provide defense against the Cossack, the industries of Central Europe are depressed and full of alarm to a terrible degree."

News Items.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 20.—It is stated here that England, Austria and Germany have invited Turkey to occupy Roumelia if Russia invades Bulgaria.

Rioting between the Catholics and Orangemen at Belfast, Ireland, was resumed last night, and is in progress today.

MADRID, Sept. 20.—A revolution was attempted last evening by a number of Spanish troops quartered in this city. During the fighting in the city one of the officers leading the insurgents was shot and killed. The rebels shot General Valarde for refusing to join them. They also mortally wounded Count Mirasol and killed a Colonel of artillery. Martial law was proclaimed throughout the city as soon as the condition of affairs was clearly perceived by the Government. The emeute was a complete surprise to Madrid. Quiet was soon restored after the revolutionists were driven from the Southern Railway. A number of the insurgents were taken prisoners. This morning there is no appearance of a revolution or even of disorder.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 21.—The Journal De St. Petersbourg says: "The news from Bulgaria is in no wise satisfactory. It would have been better by far, if possible, to have ignored the past. Every day produces untimely manifestations. It is notably the in[illegible] to court-martial the actors in the recent events. Such indications do not possess favorable signs for the future."

All the Spanish army officers who participated in the attempted revolt in Madrid yesterday have been condemned to death.

Rioting continues in the city of Belfast, with more or less casualities. Twenty of the rioters were arrested last night.

The Italian Government, incensed at the action of the Pope in restoring all the former privileges of the Jesuits, has decided to strictly enforce all existing laws. The effect of this will be to expel all Jesuits from Italian territory.

The western frontier column of the British army of occupation in Burmah has been cut off at Taingdah from communication with the main army by dakoits under the leadership of Nyhkwey and other noted insurgents. Three hundred troops have been dispatched to relieve them.

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 21.—Professor E. Stone Wiggins, of the Meteorological Bureau, says that the 29th instant will witness one of the most terrible subterranean upheavals ever known on this continent. Inasmuch as Dr. Wiggins foretold the Charleston earthquake, his prediction is regarded worthy of weight. Being seen by a reporter last evening he said: "It is certain that an earthquake will visit the Southern States on the 29th of this month. The disturbance will cross the Atlantic, and will in all probability affect Southern Europe. South America will be exceedingly liable to be affected, and the upheaval will be a severe one.

"There is no danger of earthquakes in America until the 29th instant, and even then the earthquake force will move from east to west on a parallel a few degrees south of Charleston. If Charleston is visited this time it can only be on that day." When Prof. Wiggins was asked to what cause he attributed this terrible submarine upheaval he replied that it was produced by a shifting of the earth's center of gravity, and that this displacement will be brought about by a conjunction of Jupiter, Saturn, Mars and our two [illegible] see great damage done in the district south of the 30th parallel of latitude.

GOD KEEPS HIS OWN.

I do not know whether my future lies
Through calm or storm;
Whether the way is strewn with broken ties,
Or friendships warm.

This much I know: Whate'er the pathway trod,
All else unknown,
I shall be guided safely on, for God
Will keep his own.

Clouds may obscure the sky, and dreadful rain
Wear channels deep;
And haggard want, with all her sister train,
Make angels weep.

And there I love the tenderest ties of the soul
May rest alone;
But through it all I shall be first, for God
Will keep his own.

—Sarah K. Bolton, in Independent.

Christians are not called upon to be constantly inquiring themselves as to whether they are making progress in obedience. We would call the farmer a fool who, late in hard, insisted upon taking daily measurements of each shaft of wheat in his field to make sure of its growth. No one can add a cubit to his stature by taking thought, whether it be that of the physical or of the spiritual man. Souls grow as do lilies, not by toiling and spinning, but by feeding. Constant communion with Jesus Christ will invariably result in advance towards the measure of the stature of his likeness, but no amount of watching will discover the processes of growth. This, then, is the quest in self-examination — not Christlikeness, but Christ. A man will ever see himself aright who sees himself against the background of divine mercy in Christ; "vile and full of sin," indeed, but uncondemned.

UNITY WITH CHRIST.

Christ is the true Vine; growing up in humanity, uniting to himself all that is pure and honest and of good report in humanity, filling the whole earth with himself, gradually making all human life and history fragrant and fruitful. The soul that is joined to him, that grows out of him, into whom his spiritual life flows, he verifies and purifies by the impartation of his own life, making it more and more fruitful. The soul that is cut off from him, that draws nothing from him, withers and dries up and comes to naught. All its harvest is "nothing but leaves." The soul that is joined to him is made truly a part of him, one of that vital organism with which he is filling the world, asks more and more of him, and receives more and more. For the spiritual capacity to receive grows with receiving. To come into unity with this ever-living and ever self-[illegible]ing Christ, there is but one condition: allegiance to him, obedience to his commandment. And he has but one command: Love. Love is the condition of faith, as faith is the condition of love. We love as we are one with him; we are one with him as we love. For love is the bond of perfectness, which not only binds all together but also all to God; and only as we are bound together and bound to God do we receive of him and are made like him."

The liquor-seller will not even set up in his bar-room a specimen of his work; he put up blinds at the doors and screens at the windows to hide his work from the passerby; but the shoemaker and the tailor exhibit their work in their windows, and show what they have made out of the raw material.

Miss Willard tells a beautiful story of how in one of her meetings the pledge book was passed around, and a little boy who had listened attentively to all she said, took it in his chubby hand, and carefully printed his name, and held it up to his grandma, who sat by his side:—"Here, grandma, write your name right here under little Fred's. You can't go back on your grandboy." "I never thought I should sign a pledge," she explained afterwards, with tears in her eyes, "but there sat that dear child holding up the pencil and book, and—I could not go back on my grandboy."

DOWNWARD STEPS.

The drunkard does not become a besotted drunkard in a single day. He first allowed himself to be led [illegible] by evil companions, and little [illegible] by his desire for the fiery liquid [illegible]creased, till he gradually became, [illegible] without knowing it himself, [illegible]ver intended to be—a miserable [illegible]otted drunkard—a disgrace [illegible]f and a curse to society.

MISTOOK THEIR MAN.

"You are a drinking man are you [illegible]" said a canvasser for the liquor party, to a prominent official of Richmond.

"No," said he, "I never indulge."

"Well, but you won't vote against us, will you?"

"Yes, I shall, even if it costs me my office, from which I now get my living." And then with indescribable pathos and with gathering tears he added:

"My wife is lying at the gates of death. My two boys will soon be motherless, and I cannot turn them over to the tender mercies of the dram-shop. I shall vote, 'dry.'"

FATHER'S OLD BOOTS ARE THERE.

Many a picture of moving pathos appears in the dark gallery of drunkenness. We have seen but few more touching ones than this one from the pen of Mrs. M. A. Kidder. She describes little Benny, the son of a drunken father, sitting in a room with his mother and little sister. By looking at this sad and thoughtful face, one would have taken him to have been ten years of age, yet he was but six. No wonder! For four years this almost baby had seen a drunken father go in and out of the cottage. He scarcely remembers anything from him but cruelty and abuse, especially against his kind and loving mother. But now he is dead! The green sod had laid on his grave a week or so, but the terrible effects of his conduct were not buried with him. The children would start with a shudder at every uncertain step on the sidewalk outside, and at every hesitating hand upon the latch. On the day mentioned above, Benny's mother was getting dinner.

"Will my little son go to the wood-shed and get mother a few sticks to finish boiling the kettle?"

"I don't like to go to the wood-shed, mamma," said Benny, looking down.

"Why, my son?"

"Because there is a pair of father's old boots on the beam out there, and I don't like to see them."

"Why, Benny, do you mind the old boots anymore than you do your father's old coat and hat up stairs?"

"Because," said Benny, with tears filling his blue eyes, "they look as if they wanted to kick me."

Oh the dreadful after-influence of a drunken father to innocent children! What an awful memory to bear through life!—Montreal Herald and Star.

Letter Drawer.

[The following letters were sent to the secretary of our Conference to be read at the Annual Meeting at Argos. Some of them came too late to be read there, so we give them a place here. We hope our friends who are not able to attend our next meeting to be held in Plymouth, in November, will send us short letters, early, that we may have all of them at the meeting. These letters encourage those who do attend very much. Help to make these meetings successful by telling of the hope you have.]

SOUTH ELIOT, Me.

To the Called Out Ones in Conference, Greeting:

The Lord has done much for me specially in the last six months. He has taught me to be very patient under the little annoyances at home and abroad. And under trials of whatever nature or kind, even though we know they would not come upon us if the person or persons did right, that is, even though it were a personal injury, he has taught me to bear it all patiently: he has taught me that this is our privilege and duty.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." There is a rich experience in this for us all as the Lord has shown me. But tho' we are at peace under all circumstances yet are we not free from sin. Brethren, some of you will say in your hearts you do not believe it. I was once there where you are, but the Lord in showing me that he has given us power to not be free from or impatient under whatever conditions. Once I would not have believed it more than you now do. Paul learned in whatsoever state he was therewith to be content. This is our duty also. The hardest or most difficult thing we have to contend with is our tongues. I do not speak of fretfulness or impatience now, for this should not be in our hearts, say nothing of our tongues, but I speak specially of backbiting, speaking evil of others, of loose talking much of it in the form of jesting. We actually tell lies and call it joking. Then we are not modest enough in our words. We should use the sound the best, the least [illegible] loose. I find among professors a tendency to carnal talk, [illegible] word carnal in its bad [illegible] things should all be avoided. [illegible] fact if we are not earnestly [illegible] come to the standard understood literally as set down in the scriptures the mount we shall be found wanting.

If we are not faithful we shall not be taken but be left over to go through a time of severe trials and troubles. Do the the recent earthquakes foretell the beginning of sorrows?

Brethren let us be on the watch with prayer. Yours faithfully.

TOLL GATE, Ind.

Dear Brethren of the Household of Faith:

I see in THE RESTITUTION a notice given by the secretary of the annual conference of the Church of God, to be held at Argos, all are invited to attend, which would be a great pleasure to me, but we are not in a position to do this. There is no church of the Abrahamic faith in this part of the country, and all the words of comfort we get is from our Bibles and religious papers published by those of like precious faith. In THE RESTITUTION we see a notice that its present Editor will retire. We then all miss him, but he has fought a good fight. I shall ever remember the course taken by him while the Josephite question was so warmly pressed. I, like him, believe Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. Otherwise down goes the whole Christian faith, and I love that charity which he seemed to manifest towards others who seemed to differ with him in some things, and whoever may take his place we hope will also be charitable and give all the freedom on the different ideas that others may send when backed up by the Scriptures, that they claim teaches the articles they send for publication. Come brethren, we may yet learn more and more as we see the day approaching. May the blessing of God rest upon you brethren as long as you hold up the banner of truth, as taught by the prophets, Christ and the Apostles, in its ancient purity and native loveliness. The year 1886 comes to us beclouded with momentous events which are now arising like a tremendous tornado, soon to shake the kingdoms of this world to their very center, if not sink them into oblivion, never more to rise again. Brethren let us all renew our covenant with God and with one another, let us immediately be more humble before God, and remember God more in the secret chamber, where God alone knows our hearts. Secret things belong to God. Believing as I do the prayers of the righteous availeth much, even though we be scattered now, we shall soon be gathered home, where we shall ever be with the Lord. If we by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, immortality and eternal life, we believe we shall come forth from our graves ready to exclaim, Behold we are alive forevermore.

Yours in Christ.

To the Brethren and Sisters assembled in Conference at Argos, Greeting:

BELOVED. At the time of the Annual Meeting draws near, my heart longeth for the blessed associations that cluster around the hallowed place. Memory is busy with the past, and faces that have long since passed from our sight, are still seen by my mental vision, and voices now silent in death are still offering their fervent greeting. But they are among the bygones in this world of realities, yet like the rose when crushed beneath our feet it yields its sweet perfume, so they, though crushed beneath the foot of time still shed their sweetest influence on our pathway, by memories of hallowed deeds and words.

But there are other forms and faces that pass before my vision, that like myself still tarry, waiting for the morning, some of whom will meet at your annual meeting, others like myself will not be present at the feast of fat things. But while this must be, that some will be present and others absent, yet we say that whether present or absent we remember you in prayer, that you may be of one heart and mind and signally blessed of God in your meeting. As regards my labors, I am preaching occasionally as the way opens in this new country. I expect to put in a winter's work for Jesus in Minneapolis, Minn., or wherever the Master orders. I solicit your prayer for success. God bless you all. Amen.

Dear Brethren [illegible] Conference assembled:

[illegible] be with [illegible] pray and [illegible] and I have resolved that [illegible] remainder of my days, few or many, they shall all be devoted to the service of the Master. I am truly happy to learn that the brethren are about to make an effort towards bringing about an organization for a more effectual work, or plan of evangelization, which can only be accomplished by a united organization, thus concentrating all our powers and influence in one common focus.

Brethren, let us be found at our post and in the discharge of our duty towards our fellow men, even though our Lord should soon appear. And let us not think that because the coming of the Lord is imminently close at hand, that we should make no more effort toward the enlightening of our fellow men. In the language of Brother Driggins I repeat, "We are not accomplishing what ought to be done, and we can not afford to let matters simply drift along as they may." And I repeat, let me tell you that it is only through proper organization and system that this can be accomplished. Then again in the language of our worthy brother, "A more systematic effort must be made for the support of THE RESTITUTION than has heretofore been put forth. And this can only be done through a proper organization."

Now in conclusion let me say that I hope and trust that you may have a good and profitable meeting. Finally brethren, Farewell. Remember me in your prayers.

Fraternally yours, waiting for the kingdom. JOSEPH BRUMMORE.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

Though I am far away from you, and cannot be present in your annual meeting personally, I will endeavor to say a few words, telling you what great thing our heavenly Father has wrought in me. 1st, He loved me and brought me into the truth concerning his glorious kingdom. 2nd, He drew me to Jesus, my Savior, from whom I learned words of life. 3d, He has heard and answered my prayers for light and knowledge, and has given me of his spirit which led me deeper into the truth. Oh, how thankful I feel towards my heavenly Father for all the great blessings he has bestowed upon us. I feel as if I must do more for him, and I always try to proclaim the good news to all I meet. I will try and spend more of my time in his service the coming fall and winter. I am greatly in need of some books that treat on the coming of our Lord and his kingdom, but under present circumstances cannot get them. But as do all we can, and soon we will hear "well done faithful servants." Dear brethren and sisters, the time is short, soon, soon Jesus will come, to gather his ransomed ones home. A little more patience, a little more anxious waiting will bring us to the end of this age. A few more meetings to part again, and we shall meet to part no more for ever. Then we can together enjoy ourselves and feast upon the good and rich things our Lord has prepared for us in his glorious kingdom. Soon he who died for us will come again and receive us. What a happy thought, that we shall be with him and see him as he is, and be like him. Let us watch and pray, that we may all be found worthy to stand before the Son of Man.

We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In a place on which [illegible]
To be living is sublime.
Hark! the rumbling in the nations,
Iron treading down the clays;
Hark! what sounds in the creation
Groaning for a better day.
[illegible] prophetic truth unfolding,
Watch and [illegible] [illegible] while,
Ah, let all the soul within us
For the truth's sake go abroad!
Let every nerve and [illegible]
To [illegible]—toil for God.

God bless you richly, and may your annual meeting be the best you ever had. May the God of grace be with you, and may the dear Savior be in your midst. Dear brethren and sisters pray for me, and feel assured of my prayers for you. Let us stand fast and immovable upon the Rock of Ages that was set for us. Greetings to all. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you, Amen.

From your Bro. in the blessed hope.

Dear Brethren and Sisters of the One Faith:

Noticing in THE RESTITUTION the conference notice for Argos, Sept. 10th, and noticing an invitation to all that could not be present, to present themselves by letter, I thought I would [illegible] with [illegible] pray and [illegible] Such a position as is promised in 2 Peter is worthy giving all diligence to obtain. Let us all try and make our election sure. Now brethren, as I said before, I am all alone in this place, fighting for truth in my weak way as best I can. From your brother waiting the return of our blessed Master. A. A. FOER.

Dear Brethren and Sisters of the Church of God met in Conference at Argos:

We thought to respond by letter to the call of the secretary, as we belong to the isolated ones. We have no report of work, but felt there might be those among you who would be glad to hear from their old friends who once enjoyed the privilege of being with you and sharing your gospel feasts. Though now separated by a thousand miles, our hearts and prayers are with you, and we still love, trust and serve the same kind, loving Father that we did in Argos. And blessed be his holy name, he has never left or forsaken us, but is our ever present help in time of need, and the trials and temptations that we have endured during our experience of [illegible] life only make our hope and faith grow stronger, and the glories and beauties of the world to come grow brighter and brighter. Oh, that blessed hope! we would not exchange it for ten thousand worlds like this. Our daily prayer is that we may be among the overcomers, for we read that to him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, as I also have overcome and am set down with my Father on his throne. Oh, brethren and sisters, will it not be a glorious reunion when we all meet around the throne of God and are permitted to behold the blessed Savior, he who has purchased us with his own precious blood. Yes, we have been bought with a price, even the blood of Jesus, and if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him. There is a grand and glorious work to be accomplished in the coming ages, and if we would share its honors we must work now. Jesus is soon coming and his reward is with him to give to every man as his work shall be. But we are taking up too much time and must stop writing, but our hearts are overflowing with gratitude to our heavenly [illegible]

He rose in the morning usually well and went on an errand to the market. Coming home he was taken with a pain and soreness in the region of the heart which increased during the day and resulted in his death about 10 o'clock in the evening. He fully realized it was his last sickness and met death with perfect composure. In the language of Job, "He came to his grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn is carried home in its season." Job v. 26. In my long acquaintance with our venerable brother, I think the language of Paul may be safely used in his case, "I have kept the faith." For the past 35 years "That blessed hope" was his joy and rejoicing; always ready to give an answer to every one that asked him a reason of the hope within him "with meekness and fear." His conversational theme was the gospel of Christ; he "knew the joyful sound," he understood the "hope of his calling" and thus realized the blessing pronounced upon all such, like all who are enlightened in the truth, anxious that others should share in his joy. His last words were, "We shall sleep, but not forever, for there shall be a glorious morn." These suggestive words were scarcely uttered before he fell asleep in death. He leaves a beloved companion who deeply feels her loss, and who testifies to his being a kind and affectionate husband and a true Christian. "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." His funeral took place the following Sunday in a small meeting house near his residence, which was kindly offered for the purpose, on which occasion Brother John Goodliffe, from Brooklyn, spoke to quite a large number of friends and brethren on the great salvation, showing the faith of our deceased brother was "the faith once delivered to the saints."

THE SITE OF CALVARY.

The theory that the present Holy Sepulchre marks the place of the crucifixion and burial of our Lord has never fully satisfied the minds of those who have given the subject their careful attention. This site, supposing it to be the true one, must have been without the walls of Jerusalem in order to meet the requirements of the New Testament, and hence the city, at a time of great prosperity, must have been almost insignificant in size. This is a kind of common-sense argument which has great force. Furthermore, by drawing, as some scholars have done, the line of the second wall, which ran from the Gate Gennath to the Castle of Antonia and encircled the northern quarter of the town, in such a way as to leave the Holy Sepulchre outside the city, Calvary is placed thereby in an exterior angle of the wall and less than a stone's throw distant from it. It need hardly be said that the spot would, in that case, have been obscure and inconspicuous. On the other hand, one gets the impression from the New Testament that the place of crucifixion was a sightly one, and likewise that the place of burial was at some distance from the walls. It is difficult for the mind to rid itself of either of these impressions.

For some years past there has been a growing conviction that the hill in which Jeremiah's Grotto is shown, situated a little to the northeast of the Damascus Gate, satisfied the conditions as to the site of Calvary better than any other spot in or around Jerusalem. Indeed, a large number of competent scholars have already accepted this hill as Golgotha. Hundreds of Christian tourists visit the place every year, and few of them go away unconvinced that both the arguments and the strong probability are in favor of this being regarded as the true site of the crucifixion.

From the Mount of Olives and Scopus, from the road leading north past the Russian buildings west of the city, from many points north of the town, and from many of the housetops within Jerusalem itself, the hill [illegible] which is noted [illegible] those a high wall has been constructed, running past the large "Bleis" tree still standing there, which many will remember, and on towards the foot of the hill on the west. The western slope is composed of barren earth and broken rock, but at the bottom on this side there is a large garden, where, some feet below the surface of the ground, ruins have been found which are marked in the maps as an "asmarie," a term, however, which conveys no adequate idea of the extent and character of the ruins.

The south face is vertical, and has in it the so-called "Grotto of Jeremiah." Farther along in this southern face, which does not run in a straight line, great quantities of stone have been quarried within the past few years. Towards the east the hill does not fall in a single slope, but as it were in two terraces. The hill may be said to be prolonged in this direction, the eastern knoll or second terrace being a little lower than the other.

The entire summit of the hill is covered with Moslem graves. This fact has no doubt prevented the hill from being bought up and built upon hitherto, and this alone still prevents the ground from passing into the hands of foreigners. This graveyard is an old one; and who can say that the hand of Providence is not specially visible in the preservation of this spot, in this strange manner, from the disgusting and degrading monkish traditions which would otherwise have sprung up about it?

The level section of country north of the hill is pretty thickly covered with fine olive trees. To the east there is also flat land, or rather a broad valley, and beyond that a slight rise covered with olive trees, and one great pine tree, a landmark in that quarter familiar to every traveller. Like all the country about Jerusalem, this hill has a barren aspect, except during the spring, when it is covered with grass and flowers.

The view from this hill is fine and extensive, embracing all the northern and western portions of the city, the Mosque of Omar, the two great synagogues, and the castle, or so-called Tower of David. The high land towards Bethlehem and in the southwest is visible far beyond the city. From this point the Church of the Holy Sepulchre appears to be situated on low ground. To the west are the Russian buildings, and farther away Schneller's school, or orphanage, while in the northwest Neby Samwil (Mizpeh) stands prominently out on the distant horizon. To the north we have Shafat, and over the ridge of Scopus the top of Tell el Ful, or Gibeah, appears. Scopus and the Olivet range bound the eye to the east, and in the southeast rises the grand wall of the mountains of Moab. Although there is such a wide view the hill does not seem high, nor is it more than forty feet above the level of the country about it.

If a person wholly ignorant of any question in connection with the site of Calvary were asked to select a spot without the walls of the city for the public execution of criminals, the only two conditions being that the place should be a sightly one and convenient to the Castle of Antonia, he would not hesitate a moment in choosing this hill for the purpose.

Among the persons with whom I have had the pleasure of visiting this place are General Lew Wallace, who, in preparation for his novel, "Ben Hur," made a careful study of the topography of Jerusalem; Sir J. W. Dawson, Principal of McGill University, Montreal; and General C. G. Gordon, whose character the world is beginning to know and appreciate, and whose fate the entire civilized world laments. General Gordon was struck with the skull shape of this hill, which, indeed, is evident from the Ordnance Survey map of Jerusalem, and made a model of it, which he placed in the hands of C. Paulus, a German sculptor in this city, from whom travellers can obtain copies of the same done in the stone of the country. Gordon wrote something respecting this hill which, together with an excellent map of the place and grounds in its immediate vicinity, was published in the "Quarterly Statement of the English Exploration Fund" for April, 1885.

People are beginning to write and speak of the theory that this hill is the true site of Golgotha as General Gordon's theory or as Dr. Merrill's theory. Others ascribe it to Thomas Chaplin, M. D., or to Herr Conrad Schick both of whom reside here, and are regarded as authorities [illegible] of it.

As regards the question: Who first suggested the hill above Jeremiah's Grotto as the probable site of the crucifixion?—it may be that this honor belongs to an American who was distinguished in quite another department than that of Biblical geography, namely, to the eminent Rev. Rufus Anderson, D. D., who, when walking out of the Damascus Gate in the year 1845 in company with his friend Dr. Eli Smith, pointed to this hill and spoke of it to his companion as in his judgment the site of the true Calvary.

In 1849 the German commentator, Otto Thenius, published a monograph in which he advocated in an able manner the theory that Golgotha was the hill in which Jeremiah's Grotto is found.

In the year 1871 Fisher Howe published (Randolph, New York) a small pamphlet, in which he discussed "The True Site of Calvary" in a thorough manner, and advocated strongly the claims of the hill above Jeremiah's Grotto. Some people refer to this theory as "Fisher Howe's theory."

Lieutenant Conder's "Tent Work," in which he advocates this theory, was published in 1878.

The above dates and facts are of interest, it seems to me, even if they do not decide absolutely the question which we have raised.

One of the most certain identifications of modern times is that of the Castle of Antonia as being located in the northwest corner of the present Haram area. Here soldiers were quartered to guard the temple and for other purposes, and here, also, criminals were confined, as, for example, the Apostle Paul, until final disposition could be made of them. As this was the most important castle of the city, and dominated the Temple, we can reasonably suppose that it would not be approached by narrow, winding, and intricate streets, but, on the contrary, that the road leading from out the town must have been direct, and one that was not ordinarily blocked by people or traffic. In a word, the Castle of Antonia must have been approached by a direct road which, in a special sense, would be regarded as a military road.

Furthermore, as criminals were confined in this castle, we may suppose that the place of the public execution [illegible] of criminals would be on the line of this road, near it, or at the most convenient distance from it, and in a sightly place, so that the executions could be witnessed by people standing at a distance, or upon the city walls. Again, it is not likely that the places of execution was changeable, one month here and the next month there, but we may suppose it to have been always the same. The permanency of the locality is a matter that can be taken for granted. We may suppose, further, that the Romans, when they came into power, would naturally select as the place of the execution of criminals that one which had been used by the Jews before them.

These suppositions are all of the most natural kind, and forced upon us, if we admit that there was anything like order in the public and private affairs of Jerusalem at that time.

It is well known that under the Convent of the Sisters of Zion, which is near the Castle of Antonia, but on the opposite side of "Via Dolorosa," there is, six or eight feet below the level of the street, some remarkably well preserved ancient pavement, which hundreds of travellers have visited and admired.

From certain indications we are led to believe that this pavement was connected with an ancient street that ran in nearly a direct line from Antonia northwards to the city wall.

The most important military route of Palestine at the time of Christ was that which connected Cæsarea-on-the-Sea with Jerusalem, which it approached from the north.

At the point where the line of the street first mentioned, supposing such a street to have existed, touched the city wall, we find an old gate closed at present, but bearing the significant name of "Herod's Gate."

If the line of this street be extended beyond this so-called "Herod's Gate," to the northwest, we shall find along it definite traces of an old Roman road. This we find to be identical with the great military road which connected Jerusalem with Cæsarea.

It is perfectly natural to suppose that the place of the public execution of criminals would be somewhere on the line of this road. Between the castle and the fatal spot soldiers who guarded the criminal [illegible] and fro unobstr[illegible] little [illegible] execution and [illegible] Again, we find [illegible] Stephen connected with the western slope of this hill; here is the traditional place of his martyrdom; here a church was erected to his memory, which existed for nearly eight hundred years, and of which remains have been unearthed during five years past.

It is not unnatural to suppose that St. Stephen was executed at the place of the public execution of criminals. The theory that our Lord was executed at the same place has the most valid reasons in its support.

There is current among the Jews in Jerusalem a tradition that this hill was the place of stoning, the "Beth Has-Sekilah" mentioned in the Mishna. Likewise another tradition that this hill was the place, or was connected with the place, of burial of those who had been publicly executed. The origin of these traditions I do not know, nor do I pretend to estimate the value of them. That they exist at all is a curious and—I should say—a significant fact, whether they are worth little or much.

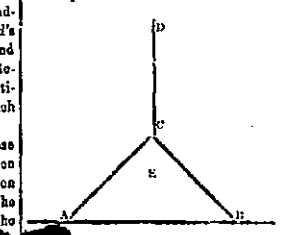
In like manner I do not know the origin of the name "Herod's Gate," or why it should not have been called "Solomon's Gate" or "David's Gate." But the fact that this name is found in this particular locality is significant, when taken in connection with the other circumstances that are grouped around it.

In recent times or since it has been safe to build outside the walls, say within the last twenty years, the principal residences have been erected on the west of the city, because the Jaffa road leads off in that direction. At present, however, they are being extended also in the northwest quarter; but in the time of our Lord private houses or villas, surrounded by gardens and hedges, were on the north of the town, because on that side there was not only the great thoroughfare leading to Damascus, but also that leading to Cæsarea, which was then the main seaport of Palestine. The numerous ancient cisterns, now mostly in ruins, that are found in all the open region northwest of Jerusalem show that that quarter has been thickly inhabited.

If Joseph of Arimathea, who was a wealthy man, had a private garden near the city, we may suppose with reason that it was located in this direction. The statement in John xix. 41, "in the place where he was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new tomb, wherein was never man yet laid," seems to be very explicit. If on the one hand we press these words literally, on the other insist that our Lord was crucified in the place of the public execution of criminals, we make this place and the garden of Joseph of Arimathea to have been identical. The question arises whether a man of position and wealth would have a private garden in such a place? But there is no real objection to supposing that the hill-top, which was easily accessible from the Roman military road, might have been devoted to the purposes of execution, and at the same time the ground about it, to the very foot of its slopes, to have been occupied by private gardens. Such gardens might have surrounded the hill on the southwestern, western, and northwestern sides, and joined the Roman road on the north.

The Roman road which we have described as leading from Antonia through or near "Herod's Gate" skirted this hill at the foot of its eastern and northeastern slopes. Some miles north this road divided, one branch going north to Neblous or Shechem, and the other past Beth Horon to Antipatris and Cæsarea-on-the-Sea. Along this road Paul, strongly guarded, was taken a prisoner to Cæsarea. With what emotions did the prisoner, as he left the city and passed this Golgotha hill, look up to the spot where the Master had died upon the cross!

In the absence of a suitable diagram I will place before the reader a large capital letter Y, which shall be inverted, and the extremities of its arms shall touch the wall of the city at the points A and B.



[illegible] represent the present Damas[illegible] and B the one now closed [illegible]red's Gate." A C D will [illegible] present Damascus or [illegible]ile B C I) will repre[illegible]an military road that [illegible]sarea. The line D C B ex[illegible]etty directly would touch the [illegible] of Antonia. It represents the [illegible]ha hill, in which the Grotto of Jeremiah is shown. The bottom of the Y, or D, will be understood to be towards the north.

This figure is not correct, inasmuch as the lines B C and A C meet really at a considerable distance beyond the point E, while E is but a short distance from the city wall; but it was designed to give only a general idea of the place we have been considering, and this purpose it serves sufficiently well.

There is in the western face of this hill a large tomb, before the mouth of which the earth, during past ages, has accumulated to a depth of six or eight feet. It is a peculiar tomb, and has suffered somewhat in the lapse of time, but from what remains of it one would say that it was Christian rather than Jewish in its construction. This point I do not attempt to decide absolutely; but even if it could be shown to be certainly of Christian origin it would only show that the slopes of this hill were, at a very early period, thought to be desirable as a place of burial, and hence we may suppose that, at a still earlier period, they were occupied by Jewish tombs.

Very near this point, still in the western slope of this hill, there have been opened during the present summer some very remarkable Christian tombs, supposed to be those that were built by the Empress Eudocia.

My object in what I have now written was merely to group, in a way different from what had ever been done before, and likewise in a more complete manner, certain facts and suggestions which appear to me to be very reasonable in connection with this most important question. Very few points in the topography of ancient Jerusalem can be settled beyond dispute; but with reference to the site of Calvary I will close by repeating what I have already said, namely, that the strong probabilities are in favor of regarding the hill above Jeremiah's Grotto as the place of the crucifixion of our Lord.—Selah Merrill, D. D., LL. D.

CURRENT HISTORY.

EXCAVATIONS AT JERUSALEM.

An interesting account is given in some Vienna and German papers of excavations made by the French Dominican monks at Jerusalem on some land which they have lately acquired, about a furlong and a half outside of the gate at Damascus. Six meters below the present level of the ground the workmen came on some arches of considerable extent, the walls of which had been very carefully built. At a short distance they found the basement of a chapel, before the entrance of which there was a tomb-stone covered with a long inscription. Unfortunately this stone was stolen before any one thought of copying the inscription, and no trace of it could be obtained. About the middle of their property they found a large, well-preserved mosaic, and upon the space all around being cleared the bases and other remains of great pillars were discovered. It is presumed that this is the site of the great basilica built in the fifth century in honor of St. Stephen by Eudoxia, the wife of Arcadius, the first of the long line of Eastern emperors. Still more remarkable is the discovery made just on the boundary of the estate. While digging the trench for the foundations of the boundary wall which the Dominicans wished to build, the ground gave way, and one of the workmen disappeared. On clearing out the place they came on a large and beautiful hall, which had been cut out of the rock; where the rock failed the gap was filled with admirable masonry. From two of the sides two large doorways led into two vaulted tombs, all of equal size. On each side of the vault there was a resting-place for one coffin, and at the end opposite the entrance places for two. At the farthest end of the great hall a passage led to another excavated vault, in which stood three great covered sarcophagi. It is suggested that these sarcophagi contain the remains of Helena, Queen of Adiabenes, and her sons. The quantity of bones found in these chambers was very great. In the middle of the great hall in a hollow specially prepared, a sort of long metal box was found. It was adorned with representations of children holding garlands up on high. Unfortunately there was no inscription, [illegible] anything which could furnish a cl[illegible] the period or the purpose of the [illegible] pulchral chambers.—London T[illegible]

THE STORY OF OUR EARTH.

It is too soon yet to learn [illegible] the character and cause of the [illegible] ton earthquake. It will be the [illegible] ness of our well-equipped Geolo[illegible] Bureau to make a thorough study of it. Meanwhile we can get some idea of what an earthquake is from the preliminary report of the frightful earthquake of New Zealand given by Dr. Hector, director of the Geological seminary for that colony.

A line of volcanic mountains forms the core of New Zealand. They are connected with the great fault-lines that traverse the North and Southern Islands in a northeasterly direction. A fault is a crack in a rock forming the crust of the earth, and reaching down to some center of disturbance. In the case of such a fault the rock on one side will have slipped down so that the strata do not match on the two sides. Some time this fault will be a wide fissure, filled up with basalt, lava, or other kinds of rocks. In the case of the New Zealand fault-lines the internal source of heat is comparatively near the surface, and shows its energy in hot springs, geysers and smoking volcanic vents. Perhaps the most beautiful and wonderful volcanic scenery in the world was previous to the tenth day of last June, in the region of what were called the Pink and White Terraces, with their associated geysers, all now completely destroyed.

At ten minutes past two on the morning of June 10th, a sudden explosion and eruption occurred on the northeast end of the Tarawera, a mountain consisting of three peaks, thirty-five hundred feet high, running along the great fault lines. The earthshocks were slight, but in ten or fifteen minutes eruptions succeeded from the other two peaks, culminating in terrific explosions, the ejection of vast quantities of steam, pumice dust, and hot stones, forming huge, towering clouds, illuminated by lightning flashes. This first phase lasted for about two hours, and it leaves its mark in a huge fissure, or fault, two or three miles long, running along the east side of the mountains, from which the earth and rocks seem to have been forcibly blown out and scattered over the country. It should be said that the earthquake shocks meanwhile do not seem to have been of a very alarming character, nor to have extended far.

At about four a. m. the second phase of the eruption began. The best notice [illegible] was a considerably more violent earth shock, much more widely felt, and especially in the li[illegible] of the hot springs. This development was attendant on the outburst of an immense volume of steam, carrying pumice dust and fragments to an enormous altitude. The outburst came from the site of Rotomahana Lake, just between the White and Pink Terraces, and about five miles southwest from the scene of the previous explosion. This pumice dust formed an enormous cloud in the upper atmosphere, whose advancing edge was marked by electrical discharges of the most awe-striking character. It advanced with the wind northwesterly until it was driven back by another colder current which precipitated a copious rain, bringing down the dust in a terrible shower of mud, which covered the country and swallowed up and killed men and animals. This eruption lasted two hours.

But the most striking feature of this second eruption was, again, the forming of a second fissure, beginning near the southwesterly end of the former one and running nearly in the same direction for about ten miles. At the northwestern end it is narrow, but in the middle, near the place of chief eruption, it is about five hundred feet wide, and the appearance, as seen from a distance, was as if its contents had been blown out by the explosion. Along the lines of both these fissures is escaping steam, and huge vents of mud and water. No lava has been thrown out, and no fire seen, although the pumice and rocks were hot enough to burn the dry vegetation.

Some of the conclusions to be drawn from the phenomena are these: The source of the tremendous energy of these outbursts cannot be very deep, as the earthquake shocks, though very violent close at hand, were comparatively feeble at a little distance. The earthquakes of the first phase were violent and continuous four miles off, the nearest spot where any one survived, but twelve miles off were comparatively slight. The great earthquake of the second phase was felt with considerable violence twelve miles off, and distinctly arrested attention sixty miles off, but did no damage there. This shows the forces of the earthquake to be comparatively superficial.

[illegible] and sunsets—have they any connection with volcanic eruptions?

The great volcanic eruption in New Zealand raises anew the question of the connection between volcanic eruptions and sunset phenomena arising from attenuated matter in the upper regions of the atmosphere. The theory that the noteworthy sunsets about the end of 1883 were due to the Krakatoa eruption has been questioned on the ground that in many parts of the world these red sunsets have continued until the present time, though not with the same intensity as in 1883. Beautifully variegated sunsets have always been very common in this country. The result was that the sunset phenomena of 1883 did not appear to us as anything new in kind, but only as an intensification of something with which we were already familiar. In order to reach a decisive conclusion we must have observations made in regions where the upper atmosphere is exceptionally free from vapors or other attenuated matter. The advent of such matter can then be detected when it could not be detected at other places. Among such regions I would suggest South Africa, especially the Cape of Good Hope. During my brief residence there in November and December of 1882 nothing was more striking than the extreme whiteness and purity of the western twilight. If such a twilight is there the rule during the whole year, then any diffusion of volcanic vapor in the upper atmosphere must produce a striking effect. I would therefore suggest to observers in that region the value of precise information on this point, especially with a view of learning to what extent and within what time the red sunsets of 1883 disappeared, and whether any such phenomena now reappear as the result of the volcanic eruption in New Zealand.—*N. ### EARTHQUAKES AND ECLIPSES.

The late Commander Morrison, Royal Navy, in 1834, published the following observations on earthquakes: "Earthquakes generally follow close on the heels of eclipses. At the period of the earthquake many aspects will be found between the planets in the heavens." In the present instance an eclipse of the sun occurred on August 20. Jupiter and Uranus were in conjunction with the moon on August 31. On the same day there were important aspects between the sun and Jupiter and between Mars and Uranus. Mars is at present in Scorpio, which has been supposed to be another circumstance favoring the production of earthquakes.—Boston Advertiser.

LET US GO FORTH.—Heb. xiii. 13.

Elijah. Like men in solemn haste,
Girded wayfarers of the worlds,
We pass out of the world's wide gaze,
Turning our back on all its state;
We pass along the narrow road
That leads to Life, to Bliss, to God.

We cannot and we would not stay:
We dread the snares that throng the way.
We fling aside the weight and sin,
Resolved the victory to win;
We know the peril, but not eye
Her on the splendor of the prize.

No idle eye now, no wasteful sleep,
From Christian toil our limbs to keep;
No shrinking from the desperate fight,
No thought of yielding or of flight;
No love of present pain or cost;
No seeking man or zeal to please.

No sorrow for the loss of fame;
No dread of scandal on our name;
No terror for the world's sharp scorn,
No wish that taunting to return;
No hatred can our hearts move,
And saintly hot kindles love.

No sigh for laughter left behind,
Or pleasures scattered to the wind;
No looking back on Sodom's plains;
No flattering still to Baal's strains;
No tears for Egypt's song and smile;
No thirsting for its flowing Nile;

No vanity nor folly now;
No fading garland round our brow;
No moody musings in the grove;
No pang of disappointed love;
With the brave heart and steady eye,
We onward march to victory.

What though with weariness oppressed—
'Tis but a little and we rest.
This throbbing heart and burning brain
Will soon be calm and cool again,
Night is far spent, and morn is near.—
Morn of the cloudless and the clear.

'Tis but a little, and we come
To our reward, our crown, our home:
A little space—yet more or less,
And we have crossed the wilderness,
Finished the toil, the race begun,
The battle fought, the triumph won!

THE RAPTURE OF THE SAINTS.

Of the fact of the Rapture from earth to heaven of all believers, there can hardly be any doubt among Christians. It has been communicated "in the word of the Lord," 1 Thess. iv. 15, that the raised dead and the changed living believers "shall be caught (snatched, arpagesometha) up, together, in clouds to meet the Lord in the air." Whether this Rapture will be secret or public, has been matter of discussion. Some, from what is said of Enoch, Heb. xi. [illegible] not found, hold

[illegible] announcements [illegible] papers, of missing cars [illegible]

From 1 Corinthians xv. 52, we infer that the removal of the saints will be the work of a moment. Yet it is an open question whether the moment is of actual, or of sensible, time. Supposing that, here, the moment were the stroke of midnight; that actual moment, in the United States, is sunset; in New Zealand, high noon. But if all saints were removed from earth at sensible midnight, the moment would be progressive, occupying twenty-four hours. And the twenty-four hours' difference would be necessarily sensible at the east side of the commencing point, though not at the west.

But of far greater importance is another question. Will the Rapture be eclectic or common? That it will be eclectic, out of the whole of mankind; that the ungodly will be left behind there is no doubt. But will the resurrection of the saints, and especially the change and rapture of the living saints, occur in one band, and together; or in successive stages,—two or more?

The importance of the question lies here. The Lord Jesus seems to present to the Churches, Rev. ii., iii., as an incentive to overcoming, a certain priority in the common hope of believers, their ascension to his own presence. This, if rightly so understood, becomes perhaps the most potent of all the conditional promises. To the overcomer in Thyatira (ii. 26) the Lord says, "I will give him the Morning Star." But the Morning Star is himself (xxii. 16). In what aspect, then, does he here proffer himself?

All these promises to overcomers are associated with the resurrection-glory: those to Thyatira are of authority and rule over the nations, with Jesus, in the Day of the Lord. He himself is the Sun, whose manifestation makes the Day. The morning star is the harbinger of the day, riding a little while before the sun. Does this promise intimate that the overcomer shall be introduced into the presence of his Lord, before the Day actually begins: in precedence of all its proper acts? That, while, in the "Day that shall burn as an oven,"—"to them that fear his name the Sun of Righteousness shall arise, with healing, Mal. iv. 1, 2; there are a select few, who shall meet him, even before that; and be associated with him in "treading down the wicked?"

And this is greatly confirmed by what is said to a later Church. If, by these Seven Churches in Asia, successive stages of the Church general, through the age, are intended, then Philadelphia, the last but one, may very probably answer to the state now existing; that of Laodicea being parallel to, and contemporary with, it; yet, successive, because of the performance of this promise.

That the Day of the Lord will be introduced by terrible and sore judgments, especially on "the earth" (he ge) of Prophecy, "the inhabited world" (he oikoumenee), is abundantly clear: and the "ruins of the earth," which is trodden in "the wine-press of wrath, Isa. lxiii. 3; Rev. xiv. 17, seems to be, indubitably, the false apostate church. To this the Lord seems to allude as "the season of trial which is about to come on the whole inhabited world, to try such as are dwelling (lit. down-dwelling) upon the earth." And he says, he will keep the Philadelphian Church (not through it, unharmed, but) out of it (ek). How? except by snatching them away from the earth to himself, before one drop of the storm, one stone of the "great hail" descends?

But when these are taken, evidently some are left, even those "dwellers upon the earth." Now this term often designates the haters and persecutors of Christ's saints; the apostates who worship the Papal Beast; false professors, in contrast to such as dwell in heaven. And, in the great Prophecy on the Mount of Olives, Luke xxi., which, beginning with the Roman Desolation, runs on to the coming of the Son of Man, the Lord warns his disciples to take heed lest that day take them unawares; because "as a snare it shall come on all that are sitting-down on the earth." The distinction may be no other than the vital severance between the wheat and the tares; between the just and the wicked; which, in usual interpretation, marks the First Resurrection: those left behind not living again till the thousand years be finished; left to the Great White Throne.

Yet, perhaps, those left are not wholly, universally, finally lost. For, if we may regard the Laodicean [illegible]

[illegible] So, in chap. xiv., after the 144,000 firstfruits to God and the Lamb are redeemed from the earth, and stand singing the New Song before the Throne:—there is yet a gospel proclaimed to the "dwellers on the earth," ver. 6. And, later still, after Babylon has fallen (8), and the eternal doom is fixed (9) on every one then found worshiping (it is the pres. indic., proskunei) the Beast,—there is a harvest reaped by the Son of Man (14); though it is the harvest of the earth, and though it is dried. Yet, not till this harvest is garnered, is the vine of the earth trodden (18).

Up to the very doom of Babylon the Great, by which I understand Rome in some sense (perhaps Papal Christendom, or Mediterranean Europe), there are still God's people in her, who are imperatively called (xviii. 4) to come out of her. This is always interpreted as a warning to real Christians to separate themselves from apostate fellowship. But, unless I greatly err, it is something very different from this.

The summons extends through four verses: in vv. 6, 7 God commands his people to execute retributive judgment on the Great Whore; to give her torment. Mark well: God does not say, "I am about to do this," but "Come out of her, my people, and do it!" Evidently some out in order that ye may do it! But saints, while in this mortal state, are never bidden to retaliate, or execute vengeance. Their Lord did not, when down here; and we are called, 1 Pet. ii. 21–23, to follow his steps. The time is coming, indeed, when "this honor will have all his saints, Psa. cxlix. 5–9: to execute, as they sing God's high praises on their Divans, the judgment written." Since, then, saints must not do this, in their earthly mortal condition,—and yet they are called expressly to do it;—does it not necessarily follow that the call from heaven is none other than the imperative summons, the shout of the Archangel, to mount, in the twinkling of an eye, in glorified bodies, clothed-upon, to himself? And Babylon falls!

What is the next scene? Instantly, xix. 1, there is "a great crowd in heaven," apparently suddenly come thither; who, first, shout triumphant praises to Jah, that the Great Whore is judged; while, looking down to earth, they see her smoke rising up from her unquenchable fire. And then follow the Marriage of the Lamb, and the Marriage-Supper.

It has been said that, in the Apocalypse, there is no indication of the exact moment of the Rapture of the Church. No description of the grand fact can we find, certainly. But, if this is divided into two stages, may not the first eclectic stage, the translation of the few chosen, be at xiv. 1, and the second, that of the mass, now tried and purged, at xiv. 14; in the parenthesis written on the back side of the Seven-sealed Scroll:—while, in the successive order of the within-written portion, both are presented again. For, under the Sixth Vial, while the Euphratean Power is gradually wasting, and the unclean spirits are busy gathering the kings of the oikoumenee to the War of the Great Day of God Almighty—just before these are actually gathered—a startling cry interrupts the narrative, "Behold, I come as a thief!" and the story goes instantly on to Armageddon. May not this be the first select stage, again? The Lord Jesus, unexpectedly, in a tumult of European politics, suddenly, silently, snatches up his faithful, watchful few, his first-fruits, scarcely missed, in the crowd of great impending wars. And the second stage (as just now intimated) occurs, in this series, somewhat later, when the Seventh Vial has been poured out, and when Babylon's judgment is imminent; as at xvi. 19; and, in fuller detail, xviii. 2, 4. Possibly, these saints, relegated for unreadiness to terrible trial, may be represented, in the parables, by the unprofitable servant, who is cast into the outer darkness.

When the Lord Jesus, at the end of his great prophecy on the Mount of Olives, warns his disciples, lest they be overtaken unawares, by the terrible "day that shall come, as a snare, on all that are sitting down on the earth," Luke xxi. 35, He adds this monition: "Watch ye, therefore, and pray, always, that ye may be counted worthy to escape all these things that are about to come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man!"

Is not this standing before him something very select and peculiar? [illegible] the being counted worthy to [illegible] and the exhortation to instant [illegible] it, imply that some disciples [illegible] counted worthy, and will [illegible] And if we [illegible] what [illegible] should pray that we escape, [illegible] not the fearful things that [illegible] fulfilling of the Times of the [illegible] xx, 22–35?

The Parable of the Ten Virgins, Matt. xxv. 1, may imply the same solemn hint. The five foolish are still virgins, as well as the wise: they set out equally to meet the Bridegroom: they have lamps, which burn for a while, but at length are going out (marg.). Is it certain that the Lord meant, by these foolish virgins, unconverted professors? and not careless, earthly believers? Is it safe to say, "The parable does not concern me at all, since, though I am too earthly-minded, and too sluggish in spiritual things, yet I am sure I have been converted, and so the door can never be shut against me?" Is this absolutely certain?

The apostle, 1 Cor. xv. 51, says, "We shall all be changed, in a moment ....at the last trump." Certainly this moment and this trump seem hardly consistent with stages of the process, separated by months or years. So, in 1 Thessalonians iv. there seems but one descent of the Lord, one shout, one voice, one trump, at which the dead in Christ rise, and the living are rapt away with them. It is difficult to imagine, that, before this great scene, a number of saints, both raised dead and changed living, have already been snatched away. Especially is it hard to suppose that those whose resurrection and rapture are here described, are the careless, earthly, and therefore mulcted, portion of the Church; since the Apostle, in both these passages, by using the word "we," associates himself with them, not personally indeed, but in character and status. For those of whom Paul says, "we," must surely be the very highest class of believers.

Thus much may be advanced from Holy Scripture, for and against these conflicting views. Fancy and speculation should be kept in abeyance: and though, in arguing such recondite questions, there is in us all a tendency to array and accumulate only the evidence that supports the particular decision which we have made; and to try to forget, or make light of, so that others may forget, what can be adduced on the other side, we shall never arrive at the Truth of God in this way; and whatever triumph we may so achieve will but recoil on ourselves, and [illegible] to God. I do not know how to meet, satisfactorily, the objections to Eclectic Rapture just stated. And yet it does appear to my own mind that the evidence in favor of it, especially that from the promise to the Philadelphian Church, so much preponderates, as to throw the probabilities greatly on this side.

If this is so; and if the exegesis is correct which considers the Asian Churches successive; how transcendently important, to us now living, become the promise, and its implied warning! Blessed be God, there has been for a century past a very manifest increase, in the Church of God, of value for the Word; of separation from evil; of brotherly love; of patient waiting; of earnest longing for Christ's appearing; which indubitably reflect, in a measure hitherto unwonted, the Philadelphian likeness. On the other hand, there exist, in the professing Church, side by side with the former traits—an increasing lukewarmness; and esteem for, and assimilation to, this present world; a sitting-down, a building and dwelling, on the earth; a making haste to be rich; combined with unworthy thoughts of the truth of God, and a readiness to subordinate the Scripture, which "cannot be broken," to the deductions of mere human science; and with inordinate glorying in works of beneficence and amelioration, and even evangelization, effected by human labor, and co-operation, by money, and power, and skill and effort of man;—which are all, palpably and unmistakably, Laodicean features.

So that it seems no more than normal, it seems but in harmony with the character and ways of the "righteous Lord who loveth righteousness," that he should make some visible difference and discernment "between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not." And though we dare not say that it would be in this mode of sparing his jewels—"as a man spareth his own son that serveth him"—because, as we have seen, the Lord might fall back on the Judgment according to works, so soon to supervene, where all would be set right; yet, if it please him to do it in this mode also, we may humbly say, it seems worthy of him!

"Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless!"—Philip. Gause, in Prophetic News and Its Watchman.

THE COMING AGE,

—ITS—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years. Involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of unscriptural interpretations, and presents in clear view sufficient alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Glorious Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fulfillment of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who rules and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in cloth. Price $1.25. Send to this office for this work.

The Greek-Vs. the Latin Civilizations; In Law and Morals: Europe Latin; America Greek in Type and Tendency.

It is coming to be seen more and more clearly that our boasted nineteenth century civilization is rather a renaissance than an original growth. But as when the primeval forest is swept away, and a renaissance takes place, this renaissance occurs according to certain ascertained laws, so it is in the sweeping away and springing up of forms of civilization. It is said that the reason a timber growth of oak and chestnut naturally succeeds the removal of a pine forest is because the blue-jays have been busy for many seasons planting the acorns and the chestnuts in the mouldering pine needles, only waiting for the fostering sun to be let in through the gloom of the tree-canopy above them, to spring up suddenly before the wondering gaze of the ignorant and unthoughtful. Just so there are blue-jay agencies at work preparing for and predetermining the changing forms of civilization. It is the province of the thoughtful to discover these moral agencies as well as the physical ones; and it is almost axiomatic to say that any speculation in this field of inquiry must rest upon a previous determination of these agencies.

Philosophical speculation in the past has been too much like amateur ballooning. It has sailed over wide spaces, and been above the clouds at times, but the scope of its vision has been too large to be of much practical utility, and [illegible] walking and [illegible] to the moon, but he will not fly there. America's voice is now heard every day in Europe; but it is not because it is such an ora rotunda voice. As inspiration told us long ago it is not the big voice nor the big sound of any sort that "gets there," but "the still small voice," and in moral philosophy this still small voice is the voice of conviction. It is the bull of bigotry that bellows back of its sharp horns of brute power.

"Conviction is God's kratos (κρατος, controlling power) and evidence addressed to intelligent reason is God's dunamis (δυναμις, any force) individually and nationally. This is the energy (ενεργεια) of the moral world (κοσμος). This is God in the individual or aggregate body "to will and to do his good pleasure" (lit. that which is satisfactory). The old proverb has the savor of true wisdom, "He who is convinced against his will is of the same opinion still." Therefore the prophet, speaking in the spirit of the Christ, says, "Then said I, lo I come to do thy will, O God." And notice the inspired application of this first principle, that follows its quotation in Hebrews x. 10, "In which will we have been sanctified." But how is the will to be led captive except the reason be convinced first?

To come now to the application of these preliminary remarks to the assertion in our theme, I would say that the marked and characteristic difference between the Latin and the Greek influence upon the civilization of the world is that the kratos (κρατος) of the one is pre-eminently brute-force, while that of the other is enlightened conviction. This appears in the parable image of Daniel's prophecy in the iron shin and feet of the great image seen in the vision—the iron being interpreted for us as indicative of the relative strength of the fourth universal kingdom. Now, we know that this fourth kingdom was the Roman Empire and the Latin civilization. We are also divinely told that the cause of its weakness finally is "the commingling of the seed of men," that is of diverse nationalities with no natural affinities, and their failure to cleave together any more than the iron in the toes of the image does with "the earthenware." It is not natural to weld iron and clay together. The lesson is very plain and any one at all familiar with the rise and fall of the Roman or Latin Empire ought to be able to see it at a glance. Brute force so long as it is homogeneous is a strength of iron. The moment, however, individuality begins to assert itself under the ameliorating influences of civilization the solid mass begins to be heterogeneous, and decay of strength begins.

Moral power, on the other hand, rises and feels with the individuality. Right is a straight line and invariable. It does not affect its straightness whether one man or a million toe the mark of rectitude. Brute force might make a million men toe a given mark; but nothing short of conviction will keep a million thinking men toeing any straight line of duty. The Greek republics and the Greek civilization stood upon their conviction of autonomy, which is only another name for individuality, whether it be of the individual or nation, and the intrinsic value of this civilization lay in the origin and fatherhood of its autonomy which is pre-eminently Israelitish as compared with the Roman.

In the books of Maccabees the intimate relations existing between the Jews and the Greeks during and previous to the rise into prominence of the Greek civilization, is clearly and undeniably apparent; and moreover there is undeniable historical evidence that the minor good of the later Roman civilization lay almost entirely in the Judaic cosmogony and "first principles" absorbed from and filtered down through the preceding Greek civilization into the homogeneity of its barbaric strength of iron.

Greek autonomy rather than those of the Roman as in Europe.

The farther East of Asia has finally met the farther West of America and another germinal commingling of "first principles" has begun. America has no use for the Roman "first principles" of brute empire nor for the bigoted short horns of the papal bull perpetuity of this same brute force under a different name. Our civilization, so far as it is pervaded with the Greek autonomy and with the Scriptural Greek interpretation of the Judaic autonomy, is in accord with the demands of the coming fifth kingdom of Christ or "the stone kingdom" of prophecy which is to "fill all the earth." Therefore Paul's argument when contrasting the old and new order of things under the gospel, finds expression and illustration in the representative terms Jew and Greek. Why? Because the "oracles of God were first committed to the Jews," but the second time to the Greeks and to their age of civilization as representatives and stewards of the same for the nations, and that, too, all the nations, the Romans included; and prophecy as well as history and common sense show and are witnesses to the fact that the second apostasy was consummated in the false and ignorant translation of the word of God into the Latin tongue, and the arrogant assertion of this lie to the whole civilized world.

Still further the older Jewish and the younger Latin apostasy have in these last days joined hands to give greater credence to this apostate lie, and we see the wonderful phenomenon of a so-called Christian church pinning its faith upon Hebrew and Roman interpretation (both apostate) rather than upon the Greek itself "once for all delivered to the saints." But it is America that has finally protested, and it is because there is too much of Greek intelligence here not to see the blatant fraud, and too much of the characteristic Greek autonomy in type and tendency not to assert it. Greece had its Thermopolæ (hot city) in asserting this autonomy and America has had here. It remains to be seen whether the coming generations of Americans are going to rise to the privilege and power of their high calling as a national autonomy, or whether they will like their great prototype in republicanism, succumb to the enervating influences of wealth, false philosophy and false religion which is idolatry.

What means this recent cry against the study of the Greek in our higher schools and colleges and the exaltation of the Latin in the place of it? Is it the growing encroachment of the European Latin type and tendency in our progressive civilization? If so beware! It will be another Esau sale, as sure as there is a God in heaven. Foster the little Greek knowledge you have got, any of you, of God's word and get more, and with it you will get understanding, yes, you will get the wisdom of God and power of God unto salvation. The wheels of God's chariot never move backward (see Ezekiel's vision). When he stopped talking Hebrew to mankind, and relegated it to the bats and owls, he said that its wisdom should become "confounded" and "cease." Do you "Hebraists" think you have found it or can find it? When God said "to the Jew first and to the Greek" do you think he meant it? Was there ever any revelation in the Latin tongue? Any classical scholar knows that the Latin is pre-eminently the language of idolatry. What was the Pantheon at Rome but its great national temple of idolatry dedicated to all the gods? Is it any wonder that Roman apostasy in its assertion of "the lie" should have compromised on the significant number "three?"

Did Christ preach in Rome in the Latin tongue? Were the writings of the apostles and evangelists in the Latin language? Are their quotations from "the Scriptures" of their day from the Hebrew even? If not, [illegible] the light have thus far been phenomenal.

Our autonomy is the true autonomy. No king but God, and no royalty except the royalty of honest purpose and hearty endeavor. God's high court the court of final appeal. Christ our advocate and enlightened common sense our interpreter. No bugaboo mysticism and exhortations in "unknown tongues" that cannot be interpreted. The gospel trumpet must not be a trumpet of "an uncertain sound." "For who will prepare himself for the battle?" Three times already Americans under their autonomy have met and repelled the encroachments of Latinism in the strife and din of battle. The coming struggle is more subtle but more dangerous than ever to our autonomy and integrity. It is a "battle of the standards." It is a question of admeasurement. It is a question of whether our autonomy under God is to be measured by "the word of God" or the words of men. It is the same old, old choice, God or Baal. Is our autonomy as a nation in the fatherhood of God, our royalty his royalty, our sonship the Messianic sonship, our fealty the Christ (the Anointed) fealty; or is it the "Papa" fatherhood, royalty, sonship; the fealty of him who sitteth in the temple of God (and whose name is apostasy) and whose other specific designations are "the man of sin" and "the son of the lost." This is the question and this is the issue of "these last days." One is ecclesiastical power "with two horns like a lamb;" the other "the power and the wisdom of God unto salvation." One is "a form of godliness (piety) but denying the power thereof;" the other is a ghostly deception and a fraud unworthy of the enlightened common sense of the nineteenth century and especially alien to and unworthy of enlightened America.

Remember Esau (Hesau) and let us not make the "pottage choice." We too have "a birthright" and "first-born privileges." Our constitutional form of government and our liberty under it, yea our motto of "equality and fraternity" bespeak the Isaac call. "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." "On an equality" is the true meaning and translation of the word Isaac, and we are told by modern philologists that Saxons is only a corruption of Isaac's sons. See Paul's argument for the

RETURN OF THE JEWS TO PALESTINE.

A subject more important than all the rest, as far as "talking" is concerned, was last week in London society discussed in every key, and still remains the awe-striking sensation of the moment. It has stirred up the dormant enthusiasm of the Jewish population of London, and created a deep pathetic interest in the mind of every educated Christian in society. By some the event is regarded with the deepest reverence as a fulfilment of Scriptural prophecy, and by others as the opening of a new era in the history of the people, whose patience and long-suffering, whose commercial industry and artistic talent, have filled us with admiration great enough to have inspired envy and malevolence amongst every besotted ignorant community in Europe.

There be many people in London, and not among the most ignorant either, who are beginning seriously to examine into Scriptural prophecy, and [illegible] fulfilment as drawing nigh [illegible] the rebuilding [illegible] Jerusalem. It is [illegible] emigration of the Jews to the Holy Land. The final establishment and legal recognition of the colony taken out by Jacob Loebel after the revolt of the Russian people against the Jews confirms the belief entertained through all ages of the restoration of the inheritance of Abraham to his descendants, and the Temple of Jerusalem to its glory. The history of the colony itself is curious. During the persecutions suffered by the Jews in Russia as many of the chosen people as were able emigrated to America; and soon afterwards the Roumanian Jews, as if by a sudden inspiration, resolved to quit Roumania and reach the Promised Land, to seek that peace which had been denied them elsewhere. The chief instigator of the emigration was a certain Jacob Loebel, who placed himself at the head of a committee to receive the money to be invested in the purchase of land in Palestine, each subscriber to receive allotment in accordance with his deposit. In this manner a sum of £8,000 was collected, and agents were despatched to Palestine to visit and study the different localities most eligible for the enterprise. A tract of land at a short distance from the ancient city of Omarees was purchased, and the domain was duly registered in the name of the president, Jacob Loebel.

But the members of the emigration, on being summoned to begin their journey, found themselves peremptorily refused permission to land upon Turkish ground from the vessel belonging to the Austrian Lloyd which had brought them to the Turkish port. They were driven back to the boat, and forced to continue their route without provisions, exhausted and starving. Arrived at Beyrout, some few of their number managed to land, but the rest were compelled to return to Jaffa, whence they escaped into the interior, and contrived to reach their destination. Those who had already arrived before strict opposition to the entrance of the Jews had been enforced had been compelled to declare themselves Turkish subjects before obtaining permission to remain in the country. But the majority had to remain at Haifa, while numerous negotiations were being carried out; and as there seemed to be no means of obtaining work at Haifa, the funds subscribed were soon exhausted, and the emigrants reduced to the most profound destitution. Just at this moment Jacob Loebel died, and the committee of which he was the president was dissolved.

The Turkish government seized the opportunity of creating every difficulty possible in the way of the enterprise, by seizing Jacob Loebel's property, declaring that it belonged to the State, although Loebel had left several children. A lawsuit was instituted at Constantinople. A great portion of the remnant of the money still in the hands of the Jews was spent in deputations, in journeyings to and fro, and other expenses; but the suit was gained, and the domain inscribed by the State in the name of the Jewish banker, Erlanger, of Paris. During the whole time this lawsuit lasted the Government refused to grant permission for the construction of houses, and the emigrants were consequently compelled to dwell in tents, where they would have died of hunger had not some charitable people of their own nationality come to their aid. The Jewish Alliance behaved most generously.

The interference of Baron Rothschild, however, has entirely changed the aspect of affairs. On hearing of the straits to which his people had been exposed, he sent an agent to visit the spot, with full power to relieve the wants of the sufferers, imposing but one condition upon the members of colony—that of entire submission to the rules and regulations laid down by him for their benefit. The greater number of the colonists were at the moment in the state of such misery and destitution that they signed without hesitation their adherence to the baron's decree. To each family was then allotted a monthly stipend of twelve francs per head, children included. The few who still possessed [illegible] ever so small a resources refused, however, to agree to the conditions [illegible] addition on a clear understanding and they joined with the rest in due submission to the master's will. As the formal permission of the Turkish Government to build upon the ground already bought and paid for near Cesarea was purposely delayed from day to day, Baron Rothschild ordered a certain number of wooden houses to be constructed in Roumania. Thirty of these houses arrived by sailing vessels, but as they had been much delayed from the effects of a stormy passage they could not be transported for some time afterwards to Semaria, the name given by the Jews to their colony. Another supply of the houses arrived a few weeks ago, and were set up by German workmen belonging to the colony. They are all built upon a stone foundation, and the cost of each house is about £84. It was not until about sixty of these tenements had been constructed that the great mistake of the choice of the material was discovered. The wood of which they are built is found to harbor vermin in such tremendous quantities that in the hot weather the dwellings are uninhabitable, and application has been made for the construction of the rest of the buildings in stone or iron.

Materials for the building of a great synagogue, two schools for the cultivation of the Hebrew language, and public offices of some pretension have been built of the stones scattered throughout the country from the ruins of cities which have long ago disappeared. Some of these stones are highly ornamented, and have been inserted in the walls of the houses with picturesque effect. The colony being now sufficiently established to take its place with others, Baron Rothschild's first measure has been to give it a name. It is no longer to be called Semaria, but Zachron-Jacob, the first word being a "Remembrance" in Hebrew—thus named by the Baron in memory of his father—and the second in honor of Jacob Loebel, with whom originated the grand idea of thus assembling together the persecuted people. Zachron-Jacob already promises to become a prosperous colony. Besides the monthly allowance of the twelve francs a head for each family, which is to be continued until every man is able to provide for his household, the day's work is paid threepence, with a ration of bread. Plantations of olive and vine have been laid out. The best agricultural tools are supplied to the colonists. The ploughs have all been sent from Ulm, and are regarded as the property of the colony, which it is prophesied will become a model settlement by the outlay of not more than a million and a-half francs. Order and discipline will be maintained among the settlers by the simple withdrawal of the monthly allowance in the case of any symptom of insubordination. This chastisement has already been applied to one family, who, however, unable to bear a return to the misery and destitution from which they had been rescued once before, humbly begged readmission to the community at Zachron-Jacob. As soon as a sufficient number of habitations have been constructed the domain will be delivered up to the colonists themselves, but the monthly allowance will then be stopped; each individual will thus be compelled to provide by his labor for his own maintenance and that of his own family. Legal precautions have already been taken to prevent the sale of the house or the field bestowed upon the settler. Every house and every field has been registered in the mind of Erlanger, of Paris. —Liverpool Echo.

THE EARTHQUAKE IN CHARLESTON.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Messrs Editors:—I send you a hurriedly written letter concerning the earthquake. You must overlook all fault, as we are driven to the utmost of our strength, day and night. Do all you can for us, and send to me or any other person you desire, whatever you can. For the present we must care for the starving and sick. Later we will think about our own needs. I [illegible] in one [illegible] open air, and will continue to do so until we find a shelter. Yours sincerely,

C. F. Crichester.

The daily papers, through the associated press dispatches, have given such graphic accounts of the recent occurrences in this city, that it is unnecessary to repeat them. Suffice it to say, that no report has begun to depict fully the sights and events which were witnessed here. From the description of those who experienced it, there was a near approach to the scenes expected to be seen on the last great day. When the rumbling noise was heard, accompanied with the shaking earth, falling chimneys, cracking walls and crumbling houses, to which were added the shrieks of women, the cries of children, and the voices of men calling for their loved ones, all enveloped in an almost impenetrable cloud of dust, followed speedily by the alarm of fire, the heavens being lit up in different parts of the city by the lurid glare of burning buildings, it was enough to cause the stoutest heart to quail, the knees to tremble, the cheek to blanch, and the awful solemnities of the judgment day to stand out clear before every eye. There were earnest prayers offered, and loud appeals for mercy were heard on every hand. The negroes, always excitable, lost all control of themselves, and cried and shrieked and prayed in the most agonizing manner, adding greatly to the demoralization of the whites. The streets, parks, vacant lots, and all open spaces were speedily filled with half-clad men, women and children, anxiously waiting for further disturbances, and as they continued to recur, at certain intervals throughout the entire night, there was no cessation of fright and dismay. Morning dawned upon a city of shattered houses and trembling inhabitants. With it all there was a vast number who were calm and collected, ready, if it was the Lord's will, to meet their Judge, their peace being made with God. These did all in their power to calm the excited multitude, and lead them to bear their trials unmurmuringly. During the day some ventured to return to their homes and try to secure clothing and food, but many found their houses so broken that they dared not venture within. As night approached shelters were improvised in all the open spaces. Awnings, sails, blankets, shawls, and everything that might keep off the night air were brought into requisition, and scarcely a person in the entire city of nearly sixty thousand people slept under a roof. During the night the shocks continued to occur, rendering sleep impossible, and adding additional terror to the previous night's experiences. Thus has it continued for one entire week, which has seemed more like a month—aye, like a year or a lifetime. All business was suspended, and the time was spent in eager expectancy of further danger.—N. Y. Observer.

THE VOICE OF GOD.

Not long since, we saw, in a secular journal, which loses no opportunity to insult or sneer at its religious contemporaries, an article referring to the remarks of the religious press upon the recent earthquake at Charleston. With an arrogance which seems absurd when the scant knowledge of this secular sheet upon religious subjects is considered, the newspaper proceeds to approve those religious papers which had spoken of the earthquake as something with which science only was concerned, and to jest profanely at the pious reflections of such of the religious press as had presumed to view the earthquake from a religious standpoint. This is the attitude of pseudo-science at the present day. It deals in words and names, which are meaningless and empty, and pours contempt upon those who take a humble and reverent attitude in view of wonders which are inexplicable and awful.

When the earth trembled in Charleston, there were some that mocked, but when the shock was repeated, and the buildings tottered and fell, their mockery was changed into fear, and the proud and self-sufficient scientist ran for the open square as fast as the ignorant negro, and felt even more keenly that unless God helped them the city was doomed. It is an old and so call upon God, are those who first boasted of their self-reliance and independence of God in fair Weather; and there is no surer evidence of ignorance and cowardice than an irreverent and flippant treatment of those movements in the material world by which God manifests himself to the creatures [illegible] has made. The proper attitude of every man, be he learned or ignorant, saint or sinner, in view of an earthquake is that of humility. "Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth."

Science, with all its theories and inventions, has never been able to defend mankind from a single earthquake, nor to afford the slightest help during its vibrations; but religion has enabled its adherents to say, "We will not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof."

It is one thing to assume that a calamity is a wrathful visitation of God upon a particular place or individual, and quite another to believe that the voice of God is to be heard in the tempest and the earthquake, as well as in the murmur of the rivulet, and the zephyr breeze. He who assumes to interpret calamity as God's wrathful judgment, should remember the words of our Lord respecting the victims of a Jewish accident—"or suppose ye that those eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell were sinners above all them that dwelt at Jerusalem, because they suffered such things? I tell you nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." And he, on the contrary, who, looking over the material world, neither sees, nor hears, nor recognizes God in all these works and wonders, should read and ponder the words of Paul from Mars' Hill to the Athenians, respecting God: "In him we live and move and have our being."

To the true student of nature, all things speak of God, from the dewdrop that sparkles on the flower, to the brightest star in Orion's glowing belt; from the hum of the tiniest insect to the fearful roll of the earthquake; and he is not to be envied who hears and sees the phenomena of this curious and wonderful world without a single thought of the Creator and Preserver of all! To him the world is a workshop without a workman; to the devout student it is a temple wherein he may daily and hourly worship a God of wisdom, power, and love.

LITERARY notices of books and pamphlets deferred till next week.

IN the issue of Sept. 15, in the article on fourth page in first column, and twenty-first line from the bottom, read instead of, "which nations had accepted," "which nations had corrupted," etc.

IT will be recollected that Brother J. P. Westbee was suddenly called home from the Argos conference on account of the prostration of his wife by an attack of sickness. He writes that he is still closely confined at home on her account, but that he is hoping for the best in regard to her case. The arrangements for the issue of his forthcoming volume on the Eastern Question have been made, concerning which we will speak more fully next week.

THE present state of affairs in Europe, as it respects the Eastern Question, is far from being settled. A letter from Mrs. A. E. Davis to a brother in New Jersey, and by him sent for publication in THE RESTITUTION, will shed some considerable light on the course Turkey is pursuing. An appended clipping from the N. Y. Independent presents a very condensed synopsis of national scheming. As Russia is making every preparation for another onslaught on the Ottoman dominions, the conflict open? Perhaps not till next spring. The following is the extract:

"Lord Iddesleigh, British Foreign Secretary, is trying to effect a rapprochment between Servia, Bulgaria, Greece and Turkey, and hopes that Austria wil favor such an alliance, the formation of which is considered possible owing to the necessity of uniting against a common invader. It is thought the only difficulty will be to induce Greece to join the alliance. The Russian agent at Sofia has withdrawn from deposit the funds of the agency, amounting to upward of 1,000,000 francs. The Government has sent Medjid Pasha, the Turkish delegate, to Constantinople to ask Turkey to intervene if Russia occupies Bulgaria. The cable dispatches of Monday last say: The topic of conversation in Russian military and naval circles is the prospect of an important campaign in the spring of 1887. General Kaulbars intimated to the Prefect deputed by the Government to greet him officially at Sofia that unless Russia's demands were obeyed he would leave Bulgaria, and the occupation of the country would follow. The credentials of General Kaulbars are addressed simply to "Monsieur Natchevitz" as an indication that Russia does not recognize the Bulgarian Government. Premier Kalnoky, of Austria, wishes to resign: The Emperor expresses continued confidence in the Premier, and declines to accept his resignation. Turkey's agents abroad report that the peace of Europe is endangered by the present temper of the English and Austrian cabinets against Russia. The Turkish War Department contemplates equipping and drilling 60,000 Kurdish horsemen in the same manner that the Russian Cossacks are equipped and drilled."

"THE WORD OF TRUTH."

Jesus said "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." Grace and truth came by him. The Holy Spirit is the Spirit of Truth. Jesus prayed that the disciples might be "sanctified through the truth." "In the beginning was the word," "and the word was God." "And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." It is manifest that "the word" and "the truth" are identical, and either or both are expressions or manifestations of the Father—the unoriginated I am.

The employment of human language as a vehicle through which to communicate a knowledge of God is a gracious condescension that ought to be reverently cherished and humbly received, to be handled with profound care. Hence Paul urged Timothy to "study to show himself approved of God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Thus it is manifest that Paul realized the immeasurable value of divine revelation and urged its right and proper division, because "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

From these apostolic premises it is manifest that the words of Scripture cannot be used indifferently or lightly, or confusedly. The author of human language possesses the best estimate of the meaning of human words, and in using them has undoubtedly used them definitely, distinctly with the purpose of being understood, and certainly not with the purpose of confounding and confusing the reader. When then, he chooses definite and distinct names for classes and individuals, it undoubtedly is because he would not have them confounded or misapplied, or applied indifferently or synonimously. He wishes to preserve the distinctions they imply.

Now he has classified the human family into four distinct classes, to each of which undoubtedly certain portions of revelation apply, and which portions cannot be made to apply to either of the other classes. As for instance, the language of Jer. xii. 3, and of James v. 5, 6, can only refer to Peter's "natural brute beasts." 2 Peter ii. 12.

Again the apostle speaks of "servants who are bound by the law." "For the law hath dominion over a man so long as he liveth." Therefore "whose committeth sin is the servant of sin." While occupying this relation, "The servant knoweth not what his Master doeth." No doubt the former class were servants, but it does not follow that all servants possess

There is still another class of [illegible] whom Jesus has specially designated, namely, Friends. He said to his disciples, "thenceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth; but I have called you friends: for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you," even as "Abraham was the friend of God." It will be readily seen that the language of Scripture addressed to them as friends could not have been applicable to them as servants. For only those servants who did whatsoever he commanded, did he constitute friends. But he lifted some if not all his friends to a still higher plane of existence. This plane was separated from the plane of perfect obedience by a voluntary death.

Natural brute beasts, servants, and friends were all men, existing in or on the plane of death, friends seeking to win life by obedience. This class were invited to become sons. The condition of sonship was and is a voluntary relinquishment of all that belongs to manhood, by a burial into death; thereby ignoring the rights and immunities of manhood, that the rights and immunities of Godhood may be acquired. Hence the apostle could say of such, "Knowing this that our old man is crucified with him that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin." Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh (as men). For if you live after the flesh you shall die; but if, you through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, you shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For you have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but you have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our Spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs, heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be glorified together."

If we would follow Paul's leading to Timothy, we must study to be approved workmen, rightly dividing the word of truth. "The word of truth" is the living word, or the source of life, to handle it carelessly, indifferently or dishonestly is worthy of the severest reprobation.

To affirm that what is predicated of friends, of servants and of natural brute beasts is also (and because they were once men) predicated of the Father's adopted sons, is, to say the least, not to "rightly divide" the word of truth. It is to ignore the fact that they have been buried into death," that their old man is crucified with the Christ, that their body of sin might be destroyed," that they "are dead and their life is hid with the Christ in God," that while they live it is simply "the Christ who liveth in them," that "if any man be in the Christ Jesus he is a new creature" or creation, that what Jesus said is true of them, namely, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment but hath passed out of death into life," possessing the evidence in themselves, that "they love the brethren." It is to deny that "the Spirit itself beareth witness with their spirits that they are the children of God, and if children then heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with the Christ; if so be they suffer with him, that we may be glorified together." Not at different times. When the Christ is glorified his brethren who are joint heirs with him are also. He is heir to no more than they are. They are equally with him God's heirs. Their fellowship is complete, they are equally one with the Son, as the Son is one with the Father. His exaltation, his glorification carries theirs, and they cannot be separated. His brethren have "passed out of death into life." It is truly said of them, "You hath he made alive who were dead in trespasses and sins." Yes, he made us alive with the Christ, he "raised us up together with him, and made us sit together in heavenly places."

These things are only predicated of children, not of either of the other classes. It is the province of the heirs to sit on the throne and judge, that of the other classes to be judged. Heirdom is never jeopardized by judgment. It is conferred by grace, and is never in any sense contingent. Therefore there is now no condemnation or judgment to them which are in the Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in the Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death." And why, because we have already been judged by our Father. The evidence of which is we have been chastened. The apostle affirms "when we are judged we are chastened of the law, that we should not be condemned with the world." The future, ignores all the testimonies cited and a multitude of others to like effect.

Extract from a Private Letter.

JERUSALEM, Aug. 1, 1886.

Dear Bro, Tichenor:

Your welcome letter came safely arriving July 30. We have very exciting news here, the people are greatly excited, there is an order from the Porte to conscript 40 thousand men. The Arabs hate the Turks and this will make serious trouble. In Gaza there is a rebellion, and also in Hebron, the conscripted men having fled to the Bedoins for protection. Seventy-five camels and hundreds of men were today pressed into service, and the poor Arab has no redress. The families of these poor men know well that they will never return, not one, and the women were seen today beating their breasts and tearing their hair by handfulls. The Turk hates the Arab and always places him in front of the battle where he is sure to fall, these poor fellows are cowards and at the sound of the trumpet become paralyzed.

There is rebellion in Armenia today, and if Russia comes down as the prophecy indicates, all the Arabs will welcome her and seek to free themselves from the Turkish yoke. The Pasha is fearing a rebellion here, and has organized a new police force, and has prohibited the inhabitants going out after dark without lanterns. Everyone believes that the great day of vengeance is at hand. Perhaps you may come to Jerusalem before you intend to, you may be caught away to meet the Lord our King, preparing you for the glory that is to be revealed. I am sure that you have a place prepared for you in the kingdom which is not far away.

August 2. There is great excitement in Jerusalem today, the Arabs are fleeing away to the Bedoins every day to avoid the conscription. Their wives and mothers go about the streets mourning for those who will never return. We have come to wonderful times. Daily I ask, shall I ever live to see the "peace of Jerusalem?"

August 9. I could not finish my letter last week, there were so many to write, and so much to do, there is no change that I can see in the war cloud, it is still black and threatening, the conscription still goes on and there is weeping and mourning. Today there came an order from the Porte to the effect that no more sales of land shall be effected. The order is very imperative, and prohibits the Arab to sell under penalty of confiscation and imprisonment. The Turk is afraid of the Jews and Christians, he fears for his life and country, and well he may, all Jews, Christians and Mohamedan Arabs say the time has come, the time of God's vengeance, and the fear of God has fallen upon the people. There is not a man or woman here who does not understand the situation. We heard today that seven ships of war, (English) were expected in Jaffa. But you will keep posted of course. If we had not bought land when we did, we could not get it now.

I pray continually for the "peace of Jerusalem." I know that there can be no peace on earth until Jerusalem is at rest, but we must first have that time of trouble of which Daniel the prophet has foretold shall come, at the same time we are also told to "hold up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh," thus to God's people it must be a time of rejoicing. You, my dear brother, are passing through the watery deep, and I do sympatize with you, but cannot give you any hope short of the coming of the Kingdom of Righteousness. I have no other hope. You will see that God is taking away the dangerous element among the Arab population from us, the Moslems, the Jews and Christians they dare not conscript. Please write often and I will answer. Yours as ever.

MICA PEN-NOTES.

What is the present condition of men and things on earth, and what do recent and current events portend? These are queries in which Bible-reading and thoughtful thousands are interested. Let us see. There is the Bulgarian trouble involving half of Europe directly, and perhaps all, by implication and consequence. Its magnitude is too certain for question or discussion. Russia, Austria and Turkey are preparing their thunder. Men and money and arms, magazines, equipments, highways of transit, in short the mechanism of force and the panoply and paraphernalia of [illegible] the grand process of pi[illegible]

The mandate goes f[illegible] wake up the migh[illegible] per [illegible] Her minister of [illegible] said to be vigilant, acti[illegible] inspecting and holding ready for mobilization, her host of trained soldiery. At one time we are notified of an outbreak of hostilities impending between France and Prussia, and then something mysterious and half incredible is hinted of an alliance between those nations. England is perplexed how to deal with Ireland, while discontent in the Green Isle breaks out in riot and disorder. Working men, half maddened with hardship and hunger, are at times furious in France and Belgium, while malcontents in Holland threaten to cut the dikes and destroy the country. Even in Sweden there are revolts, and an insurrection is just put down in Spain. Greece has been held in check only by the unwelcome neighborhood of blockaders in the Mediterranean. Conflicts among minor nationalities once comprehended in European Turkey, were threatening in the spring, and were prevented from extending the contagion of their unrest into a wide and perilous area, by the repressive influence of objecting and stronger powers.

In Germany, there is suffering through extreme poverty of the toiling peasants. Emperor William is trembling on the extreme verge of mortal life. Bismark is old, and so is the grey and grim Von Moltke. Socialism like a hydra is stretching his length from east to west, and rearing his heads menacingly. It is held down for a little by the power of the sword, repression seeming only possible by endless vigilance. There is a cry of popish and Romish influence magnifying in Europe and especially in Britain, and Bismark is actually depicted in the attitude of a courtier, if not a suppliant to the Pope.

Look at Asia. Unparalled gatherings of the ryots, pinched and half desperate, have been announced, in centers of population in India, and there is fresh intelligence of peril from a possible outbreak worse than the Sepoy rebellion. Burmah conquered to Britain is said to be an unprofitable and perilous acquisition. China is distributed and dangerous, partly, perhaps from French aggression and partly from desire of violence done to Chinese in America. There are mutterings of trouble in Corea. There is a revolt in Mexico. The United States have escaped a threatened embroilment with that country. In this, the so-called model republic, we see dangers from various sources, but chiefly from great organizations of men, in declared antagonism to capital, and from the revolutionary restlessness of others less compactly banded in form but intensely coalescing in sentiment and spirit. Socialism has its lately imported preachers like Liebknecht and the Avelings, and the ferment of their radical less, threatens an acknowledged danger to the present order.

Think of the thousands congregated in the great cities to hear the teachings of these revolutionary doctrinaries! We have opened wide our doors to the many-tongued people of Europe, and given them power through the ballot to make the most perilous and destructive changes possible. Why have we been so sadly unwise, so rashly generous, so indiscreetly hospitable? Why have we not more prudently guarded our gates? But now it is too late. From Bangor to San Diego, and from Savannah to Olympia we shall doubtless see the apostles of socialism hasting to sow the tares of their disruptive and pernicious doctrine.

And thus the civilized world is like the sea of prophecy, restless and uneasy. Its vast abyss of waters is manifestly troubled. Out of it, what form and shape of evil will arise? We are in no mood to prophesy, simply because we have an impression or a conviction but too painfully real, to make predictions or delineations a delight or a choice in the character-writing of impending events. And as for disturbances in nature, are we to speak of earthquakes, in New Zealand, in Greece and in the United States? Need we write of omisous and various volcanic activities, of storms and floods, the manifold fairies of the atmosphere in gale and tornado, cyclone and hurricane? Who can tell the mystery of the subterranean world, vocal with frightful rumblings, and mysterious with pent-up forces? How come springs and floods to burst forth with a power almost, if not quite, defying control? In what alembic are distilled the lakes of petroleum? And to what end is this magazine of liquid fuel storing itself in huge cells, and abysses in the darkness? Are the days of [illegible] the Lord who [illegible] derstand what both prophecy and events encourage and summon us to use. Good will to all.

C. COLGROVE.

P. S. I notice a prediction for a great earthquake, on Sept. 29. It may be a possible privilege or duty for some to fix a day for a catastrophe in nature, that shall rock or destroy cities, like New Orleans. Coveting and cherishing a refuge under the shadow of the Almighty, we can watch and see what Omnipotence will do. The time is ominous enough, at all events. Human predictions may fail but the word of God remains. C. C.

Notes By the Way.

Since my last I filled my appointment at Brewstown, Wis., where we had a very good meeting. We next went to Fairfield to commence meeting as announced in THE RESTITUTION. Found no house occupied by the Disciple minister on Sunday and Sunday night. We had meeting Saturday night and commenced again Monday night, continuing over the next Sunday. The Disciple minister attended our meetings several nights and visited with us one afternoon. We had a pleasant time. He is a firm believer in the coming of the Lord, so much so that his discourse on Sunday was on the personal coming of the Lord as the hope of the church. He also believes in life and immortality through Christ, by a resurrection from the dead. Altogether we had good meetings and a pleasant time. Quite a number are deeply interested and will no doubt soon become obedient. And here let me express my thanks to the brethren of Fairfield for their liberality in helping me in the financial line. Hope the Lord will reward them. We closed our meeting Sunday night, Sept. 5, but stayed over Monday and delivered a lecture in the evening on the great temperance or prohibition cause that is running high in that State. I forgot to state that on Saturday, Sept. 4, I preached the funeral sermon of Charlie Bridge, son of Brother I. N. and Louisa Bridge, who was instantly killed at Lyons, Iowa, notice of which we sent to THE RESTITUTION some time ago.

We left Fairfield Sept. 7, for Lenark, Ill., at which place we arrived at 3:15 p. m. and found all well. Here we visited with the brethren till Friday. We here met that old veteran, Dr. Jacobs, on his way to Plum River to the conference. Friday afternoon we left Lanark with Brother Simon Renner for the conference at East Plum River. Myself, wife, Dr. Jacobs and Brother Renner comprised the load in a two seated buggy. We arrived at our destination in good time for supper. The conference convened at 8 o'clock. We had a good meeting. As it belongs to other parties to give a report of the meeting we will not itemize, simply say that we baptized three willing souls into the all-saving name of the Anointed One; upon the whole we had one of the best of meetings.

We left Plum River Sunday night and came into the vicinity of the Union Church. Here we visited the brethren and friends through the week, preached at the church Sunday, and then went with Brother Eaton to West Plum River and preached Sunday night to a congregation assembled at his school house, and every night since; congregation fair and attention good. Quite a good interest was manifested last night. The Presbyterian minister present stated that he was interested and wished to hear himself, and have his congregation hear a full course of sermons on the kingdom of God and its kindred doctrine. He is a very genial kind of a man.

I am now stopping with Brother Eaton and his amiable family. We have made arrangements to commence meeting at a school house a mile above here tomorrow night, and continue over Sunday. This is as far as we have got, so we will stop by asking all who are in sympathy with us to pray for us that the Lord may continue to bless us in labors of love. Those wanting a series of meetings in northern Illinois or Southern Wisconsin write to me at Lanark, Ill. Yours for the truth, T. J. WHITESITT.

Conference Report.

On Sept. 9, 1886, the first conference of S. W. Nebraska, convened. According to appointment, the company gathered together in a little grove near Edison, a beautiful village on the Republican River. The meeting was called to order by Bro. Almus Adams at 2 p. m., when preaching [illegible] Crook, John Foote, Almus [illegible] J. S. Miller. With these few brethren the old valley was made to resound with that gospel which was once delivered to the saints, and the old veterans were made to rejoice. While the unbelieving and careless ones were made to wonder at the teaching of that blessed old book. The conference transacted some important business, proving beyond all doubt that we thoroughly endorse organization and systematic work. The ordinance of baptism and the ceremony of ordination were attended to in regular proper forms. A State Evangelist was appointed and a fund ordered for the proper and necessary support of the same. All necessary printing was ordered to be done. About $35.00 was raised to defray incidental expenses. When our folks talk money they mean business.

Letters of congratulations were received from J. Manton Case, Chicago, C. C. Ramsey, Kan., and F. T. Wilkins, Neb., this last letter has hopes of raising $150.00 for the support of the State Evangelist for one year. Should any person feel inclined to send money to this fund, address John Prime, Oxford, Neb. Should any one desire the service of the Evangelist, address Almus Adams, Arapahoe, Neb., or J. S. Miller, Cambridge, Neb. Many thanks to the Edison Lumber Co., who so graciously granted the conference the use of good lumber for seats without charge. We appreciate this kindness.

We extend our thanks and gratitude to THE RESTITUTION, which has been so faithful in advertising our meetings. It has reached many persons who wrote their friends to attend this meeting and has thoroughly introduced us to the public generally, giving us a fair start. Friend if you ever become an organizer you will find how much a paper can do to help you, and you will never know how much THE RESTITUTION has done, and can do, until you become a worker yourself and experience its efficacy for good, it has become endeared to us as one of this conference, and we regret the removal of its generous, kind and efficient Editor. Now therefore, let all who appreciate this good helper, join with the writer and pay all due by Nov. 1st, and thus enable the paper to carry the news to many homes are the Lord comes.

Yours in Christ.

DREW.—Died, September 1, 1886, at his residence in Dixon, Ill., Henry J. Drew, of myelitis, or inflamation of the spinal column.

Services were held at his residence on Sunday afternoon, September 5th. Brother Drew was born at Standish, Maine, July 3, 1824. He removed to Dixon in 1856, where he has ever since been engaged in business. His fellow citizens at Dixon say, "He was honorable and honest in all his transactions with men; made many friends and no enemies. His leading traits of character were those which go to make a kind husband, an affectionate father, a genial and pleasant companion, a faithful friend, a good neighbor, an honorable citizen." To leave such a record behind is truly refreshing when compared with this crooked and perverse generation. You will doubtless recollect I made mention in THE RESTITUTION sometime since of visiting Dixon for the purpose of assisting this brother to put on Christ in the sacred ordinance of baptism. He took great comfort in his hope of meeting Jesus in his coming kingdom, freed from all the conditions of sin, sorrow, pain and death. Amidst all the cruel sufferings he endured there was no comfort to him like the soothing balm that comes from an abiding trust in Jesus. His beloved wife and family have the sympathy of many of like faith who have suffered like trials. May they take much comfort in the assurance that to those who are in Christ the separation is only temporary.

BRIDGE.—At Lyons, Iowa, Charles Bridge, son of Brother I. N. and Louisa Bridge, aged 24 years, 8 months and 8 days.

The news of his sudden death was dispatched to Brother Bridge at his present home in Mankato, Kan., who immediately came and arrangements were made to bring the deceased to Fairfield, Wis., his old home, for interment. Accordingly he was brought to Fairfield September 4th, where his relatives and old comrades were summoned to pay their last respects to him who had been snatched from blooming health to instant death. A sermon was delivered on the occasion by the writer from John xiv. 14, to a full and attentive audience, after which we retired to the Fairfield cemetery and there laid him to rest to await the judgment. Charlie was well beloved by all who knew him and was a promising young man.

"THE NIGHT COMETH."

An angel passed through a busy street:
His step was swift, and his smile was sweet,
And he sped in the path of the rising sun,
Saying, softly, "The day is begun,
The night cometh."

He met a child, who laughed and ran,
Chasing the butterflies with her fan,
A circlet of lilies, white and fair,
Crowning her waving yellow hair;
And, stopping, he asked in gentle tone,
"Do you love the Master, my little one?"
She raised her beautiful, sunlit head,—
"I am one of his little lambs," she said.
"Then do," said the angel, "as he commands;
Your work is ready, it waits your hands."
The child made answer, "I'll not forget.
I shall do my work are the sun has set:
Not 'tis going to be such a long, long day;
It is morning now and I want to play."

The angel watched her in sad surprise,
As she flitted away with the butterflies:
And he sped in the path of the rising sun,
Whispering soft, "Will the work be done?
The night cometh."

An hour flew by, and the child lay dead—
A stain on the beautiful, sunlit head,
A stain which the lilies could not hide,
Though they spread their waxen petals wide;
And the weepers heard, in a voice divine,
Like the solemn moan of a wind-stirred pine,
"The night cometh!"

The angel passed through the busy street,
And met a man with hurrying feet:
"Stay!" he cried; "are you one of those Who love the Master and hate his foes?"
"Oh, yes!" he replied; "my name is enrolled
In the books of the church. I am safe in the fold."
"Then do," said the angel, "as he commands:
Your work is ready, it waits your hands."
"Good sir," said the man, "I shall do my work
All in good season, I'm never a shirk;
Just now I am busy, as you must see,
But sometime—yes, sometime—I hope to be free
To work for the Master: I'm still in my prime,
With life before me,—there's plenty of time!"

The angel watched him speeding along
With a troubled brow through the jostling throng;
And he followed the path of the setting sun,
Whispering soft, "Will the work be done?
The night cometh."

The years rolled on. Through a city street
A man walked slowly, with tottering feet;
His form was bent, and his face was old,
And his heart was as hard as his silver and gold!
But he seemed to hear, like a mournful rhyme,
"Life is before me, there's plenty of time!"
And those who were nearest him heard him say,
"It is growing dark,—I have lost the day!
The night cometh!"

A PRE-MOSAIC STATUE.

At the last Universal Exhibition the most indifferent visitors, ignorant alike of archæology and [illegible] dumb with [illegible] life-like [illegible] any Grecian work.... From the inscriptions on the tomb in which it was discovered, we know that it represents a certain Re-em-Ke, a man of some importance during several reigns of the fifth dynasty.... The sculptor has represented him on foot, calmly walking in some town under his government.... Parts of this figure have been much injured;.... it has lost the thin coating of colored stucco which originally covered it, and on which the sculptor probably added his finishing touches. What must it not have been when intact and free from the ravages of time? Everything is faithfully copied from living nature;.... it is evidently a true portrait.... The modelling of the body is marvellous.... but it is the head which most challenges admiration; it is a prodigy of life.... The mouth, parted by a slight smile, seems about to speak. The expression of the eyes is almost distressing. The eyeballs are shaded by lids of bronze, and are formed of pieces of opaque white quartz,.... in the centre of which are inserted rounded bits of rock crystal to represent the pupils. Under each crystal is fixed a shining nail, which indicates the visual point, and produces the astonishing and life-like expression.

As this Re-em-Ke lived under the fifth dynasty, his iconic statue must have been executed about the year 4000 B. C. More than fifty-eight hundred years have therefore passed over these fragile pieces of cedar and mimosa wood without effacing the marks of the artist's chisel.

THE ROSETTA STONE.

The stelæ, or tablets with historical and funereal inscriptions, have become the true annals of Egypt. The stelæ consists of a mixture of figures and symbols, some merely written, and some engraved in relief, hollowed out, or produced by a combination of the two processes. The historical tablets, like the Roman Capitoline tablets, were destined to preserve the memory of great public events. Although the epitaphs were only written in memory of the dead, they form a collection of useful documents relating to religious, domestic, and even national history.

What we have said of the stelæ applies equally to the sarcophagi, a name which has been given without due consideration to boxes or tubs of granite, basalt, or calcareous stone, intended to contain mummies. Champollion himself brought home the chief of the sarcophagi of the Louvre, the one which contains the body of a basilico-grammateus called Taho, priest of Imhotep (the Egyptian Æsculapius), under the twenty-sixth dynasty. Every part of it, inside and out, is covered with inscriptions, written in groups in the retrograde system. It is considered the masterpiece of engraved sculpture of the Saite epoch—indeed, artists are never weary of admiring these thousands of figures, all of which are cut with as much precision and good taste as if they were on precious stones.

Among this collection are to be found numerous relics of the religious, civil, and domestic life of ancient Egypt, which cannot fail to interest those who recall the life of an extinct people, and, as the geologist builds up the antediluvian world with fossils, to reconstruct a by-gone civilization from the ruins it has left.

The Rosetta stone was found during the French occupation of 1799, near the town from which it takes its name (the ancient Bolbitinim, called Rachid by the Arabs), in the ruins of a temple dedicated to the god Atum-Nofer, by the Pharaoh Necheo. The inscriptions on this stone, written by order of the high priests, assembled at Memphis to invest Ptolemy I. (Ptolemy Epiphanes) with royal prerogatives in 193 B. C., commemorates the services rendered to the country by this prince. But it is not this which makes the Rosetta stone so valuable and famous. By a fortunate coincidence these inscriptions are engraved in three languages and three characters: 1. Hieroglyphics, or hieratic writing; 2. Demotic or enchorial writing; 3. Greek writing. The last was easily read and interpreted, and a comparison instituted between it and the hitherto unknown hieroglyphics which repeated the same thing, so that the Rosetta stone became the first key to hieroglyphic writing.

DISCOVERY OF THE BODIES OF THE PHARAOHS.

A discovery of extraordinary interest to Bible readers was made in June last in the Museum at Boulak, near Cairo, in Egypt. The particulars are just now received from the professor and the distinguished persons who witnessed the discovery. On June 1st [illegible] xxxi. 15, but not [illegible] with intense interest that the examination was awaited, as the inscriptions on the bandages in which the bodies were swathed would show who the bodies actually were. The Khedivo of Egypt came in state with his chief officers to see the bandages unwrapped. The representative of the Queen of England was also there. There were thirty mummies, and it was found that among them were two of the three Pharaohs mentioned in the book of Exodus—Seti I. and Rameses II. When the bodies were stripped of the bandages in which the embalmers wrapped them three thousand years ago, the features were disclosed of the man who figured so prominently in the Bible narrative.

Seti I., was "the new king who knew not Joseph," Ex. i. 8. What is known of him from secular records corroborates the Bible record. He belonged to a new dynasty, wholly unconnected with that under which Joseph had attained to his office. It was he who built, to protect his frontier, the great wall and huge arsenals called in Exodus "treasure or store cities," Ex. i. 11. As he grew older, he associated with himself on the throne his son, Rameses, then a boy of twelve years of age, who reigned jointly with him for twelve years. When Seti died Rameses reigned alone for forty-seven years, so that in all his reign covered a period of sixty-seven years. His title was Rameses II., or, as the Greeks called him, "Sesostris." He was the Pharaoh whose daughter adopted Moses. Thus he was the Pharaoh who ordered the murder of the children, and the Pharaoh from whose face Moses fled, Ex. ii. 15. His embalmed body is also among the mummies.

The bodies are identified by the inscriptions of the embalmers to the accuracy of which apparently the high priest of that day certified. The body of Rameses was covered from head to foot in a garment of white linen, and over that was layer upon layer of bandage covered with the bituminous substance used by the embalmers. When these coverings were taken off the spectators gazed on the features of Rameses the Great. Maspero says: The head is long and small in proportion to the body. The top of the skull is quite bare. On the temples there are a few sparse hairs, but at the poll the hair is quite thick, forming a mouth, straight locks about two inches in length. White at the time of death, they have been dyed a light yellow by the spices used in embalmment. The forehead is low and narrow; the brow-ridge prominent; the eyebrows are thick and white; the eyes are small and close together; the nose is long, thin, hooked like the noses of the Bourbons. The temples are sunken; the cheekbones very prominent; the ears round, standing far out from the head, and pierced, like those of a woman, for the wearing of earrings. The jawbone is massive and strong; the chin very prominent; the mouth small but thick lipped. The teeth worn and very brittle, but white and well preserved. The mustache and beard are thin. They seem to have been kept shaven during life, but were probably allowed to grow during the king's last illness; or they may have grown after death. The hairs are white, like those of the head and eyebrows, but are harsh and bristly, and a tenth of an inch in length. The skin is of earthy brown splotched with black.

Finally, it may be said the face of the mummy gives a fair idea of the face of the living king. The expression is unintellectual, perhaps slightly animal; but, over under mummification, there is plainly to be seen an air of sovereign majesty, of resolve, and of pride. The rest of the body is as well preserved as the head; but, in consequence of the reduction of the tissues, its external aspect is less life-like. He was over six feet in height. The chest is broad; the shoulders are square; the arms are crossed upon the breast; the hands are small and dyed with henna. The legs and thighs are fleshless; the feet are long, slender, somewhat flat-soled, and dyed, like the hands, with henna. The corpse is that of an old man, but of a vigorous and robust old man.

The body of the third Pharaoh mentioned in the Exodus is not announced as being among the mummies. It may, however, yet be found, as it is improbable that he was drowned with his army in the Red Sea. Neither Moses nor Miriam mentions him as being among the bodies cast upon the shore, as they probably would have done had they seen him. A later post speaks of him as having been overthrown [illegible] them. [illegible] not to proceed in person. Probably a convenient vision of similar purport saved him from drowning in the Red Sea. The records of his reign do not mention the plagues nor the disasters of the Red Sea, as the court chronicles were expected to record only triumphs and successes. It appears, however, from their narratives, recently deciphered, that this king, whom they call Menephthah, lost his eldest son by an untimely death, which they fail to describe. Moses supplies the missing link in their narrative, Ex. xii. 29.—Christian Herald and Sign of Our Times.

Is Death a Translation?

Among the condolences sent to the friends of the late Mr. John Dougal, Editor of the N. Y. Witness, the Bible term "translation" is frequently applied to his death. (See the Witness of Sept. 16th). This term was also applied to that eminent Philanthropist, in the same paper, George Mueller, in the notice given of his death. It was said that he was translated. This word is never in all the Bible applied to the death of good men. Paul says, "Enoch was translated that he should not see death," modern theology says that good men are translated because they do see death.

Enoch's translation is the type, not of any ascension at death, but of a future translation of all the faithful, who by resurrection or change of the living saints from mortal to immortality, "shall be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so be forever with the Lord." Is it not dangerous to thus pervert and misapply Bible terms? A lady writes, "a sudden death is a translation, but it is a great shock to us who are left behind." Another lady writes, "I cannot express how sadly this sudden departure of the great and good Mr. John Dougal affected us all. We felt we had lost a friend, such a beautiful translation." "The Master just said [Come up higher, and in a moment he fell asleep in Jesus." The latter part of this sentence is very Scriptural, but seems to contradict the first part. It was said of the martyr Stephen, and of the deceased Christians at Thessalonica, and many other servants of God, both of the Old and New Testaments, that they were asleep in the dust and that they should awake to everlasting life; but how can it be said to them, "come up higher" while they are asleep, or in the death state, which is like sleep? The sleep must first be broken up by "the voice of the Archangel and trump of God," and then it will be said to them to "come up higher." Why do not professing Christians comfort one another "with these words" of Divine promise? Why do they not embrace the Bible hope that "unto them that look for him Jesus will appear the second time unto their salvation" by resurrection power, that then they shall meet him in the air, "see him as he is," and "so be forever with the Lord!" Peter declared "when the Chief Shepherd shall appear he shall give you a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

Editor Restitution:

Dear brother, let me say to the dear ones scattered abroad that I have just returned from a trip that I made up to the Nebraska State Conference that you all saw noticed in THE RESTITUTION. I left Parsons on the midnight train Wednesday, Sept. 8, and arrived at Arapahoe on the 10th, in company with Brother Lester, who is known by a good many of the brethren around Kenmacher, his former home. We then had five or six miles to go to the grove on Daniel Prime's farm. There was nothing to do but to take our valises and start for the meeting on foot. It was advertised to be 1½ miles from Arapahoe, but they had moved it to Brother Prime's other farm. After walking some two or three miles, we stopped at a place to get some feed for the outer man. We were then overtaken by old Brother White, a doctor that used to live in Indiana, and with whom a great many of the brethren in that State are acquainted.

On Friday about four o'clock we landed on the camp ground. Here we met some strange brethren, Adams, Story, Clifton, Prime, and a young Brother Crank besides a number of sisters. At night I spoke on the second division of the word, Paul to [illegible] On Saturday I met Brother [illegible] ired to be an Advent [illegible] ip, world-burner, but [illegible] Restitutionist. So [illegible] daytime, and in [illegible] on the commission [illegible] to the position. Sunday I spoke twice on the plan of the ages and bid all the brethren farewell to leave for Prescott, Kan., to be with Brother J. C. Kinney at a discussion. To return to the Conference, I will just say it was one of the best conference meetings that I ever witnessed, and I felt that it was good for me that I was there.

The 14th day of September found me at Prescott, Kan., with Brother Kinney and a Christian Light preacher by the name of Roe, to hear the kingdom discussed. Roe affirmed that God's kingdom was a past event—set up some time in the past. Two days ended the debate, as Mr. Roe took sick. Thursday evening I preached for them in the same Baptist church where the debate was held. On Saturday evening I began a meeting at the Poteau school house, near Pleasanton, in the Scaright neighborhood. There was a good turnout from the first to the last. On Monday I baptized three more souls into Christ. I bid them farewell and started for home where I arrived about 4 o'clock on Tuesday and found all well. Friday, Sept. 24th, I will start for Papinsville, Mo., near Brother Willis' place, after others that will give heed.

Dear brethren, our last conference meeting will be held soon, at some place or other. I do not know where it will be, neither do I care, just so that I am ready when the last meeting will be in mortal flesh. I contemplate now of making a trip to Miami County, Ind., to see my aged mother, if she and I will live that long, and if any of the brethren would like me to preach for them, in order to make my expenses a little lighter, I should be glad to have them write to me at Galesburg, Neosho Co., Kas. Write soon so that I will know what kind of arrangements to make before I leave home.

A few more days or months or years at most will end the chapter with a good many. How many of the old soldiers have fallen on the battle field, and how many more will fall? Let me fall at my post and be ready whenever my lot shall be to go. I have figured on what a man can consume in this age, what a man can do and what a man cannot do. A man can only sleep in one bed at a time, can only sit in one chair at a time, only ride in one buggy at a time, only ride on one horse at a time, only eat one meal at a time, only sleep in one grave when he is dead. So having food and raiment, let us therewith be content. Now brethren, when you all well know yourselves, you that are hoarding up money, adding acre to acre, dollar to dollar, you will then see THE RESTITUTION should be sent out as a silent preacher; so you would send it to the different ones and pay to those that run the paper, put it on a sure foundation so that when a day's work is done our Editor could say, "THE RESTITUTION is out of debt and we have a liberal living out of the paper." May God convert the pocket books of our rich brethren so that when our Great King will return he may find us all watching and waiting till the Lord will come, is my prayer. Amen.

JOHN FOORE.

To the Household of Faith:

I visited Remington this month (September). Left Clinton County September 3rd, and held meeting over three Sundays. I think with the brethren there was some good done for the truth. Remington is a place where the sectarian prejudice is very strong, and it is hard to get the truth before the people; some few of the dear ones are still contending for the faith. I preached nineteen discourses during my stay among them. The next day after arriving there I preached the funeral of Brother and Sister Bingham's son, who died at the age of twelve years of diphtheria after a few days sickness. The few there are encouraged to still persevere in the Master's cause. May the Lord help them. While there I got four new subscribers to THE RESTITUTION for three months.

I would say if there are any of the brethren who want to exchange town property for a small fruit farm of sixteen acres, situated in a good locality, I would like to exchange. My farm lays on the south bank of the St. Joseph River, six miles from the lake and five miles from Benton Harbor. A boat passes up and down the river during the fruit season, and fruit can be shipped from the bank of the river. The place cost me over twelve hundred dollars, and if any brother has a property that is worth about that amount I would like to trade, or I will take one thousand dollars in cash. My children have all left me and I am not able to work the place. There is an orchard of apple and several pear trees besides some twenty crab apple trees; a house of five rooms, cellar, a good spring near the house, small barn and wagon shed. There are three acres of meadow, besides strawberries, raspberries, blackberries and grapes on the place. I would like the property, if I trade, to be located in a good place for railroad conveniences, as I intend to spend my time in preaching. Address me at Michigantown, Clinton Co., Ind. J. S. HAVEN.

Conference Report.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith in Illinois convened according to notice at East Plum River, Ill., Sept. 10, 1886, and continued over the following Sunday. The speakers were T. J. Whitelit, G. M. Myers, David Gans and Dr. S. I. Jacobs. We had refreshments on the grounds on Saturday and Sunday, and between services on Sunday they repaired to the water where three willing souls put on Christ by baptism. G. M. Myers was chosen chairman of the meeting. Simon and David Ronner and S. E. Carter as Committee and Chas. Ronner Secretary. The meeting was well attended. Then came the shaking of hands and parting of friends, with the hope of meeting again in the kingdom of God.

Or, A Scriptural View of the Second Coming of Christ, with the Wonderful Signs that will Precede it, and the still more Wonderful Things that will Follow it.

—BY SILAS HUNN.—

NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS:

The book is truthful, reverent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Publisher.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and candid reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Certainly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Sydney Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry.... The size of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a worldly, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Backstaff West, D. D.

QUIETNESS AND ASSURANCE.

God works in silence, and his vast designs
Are brought to pass in quietness and peace;
Unheralded the sun comes forth at morn,
And without tumult on the nation shines;
Unwept again his ministries alone cease;
And twilight works are born.

The years sweep onward, but their chariot wheels
Vouchsafe no echo to our yearning ear;
The swift abundant seasons as they pass
Are shod with silence, and no sound reveals
The rapid hours; whose steps are as the fall
Of snowflakes on the grass.

In quietness through dreary winter days
The buds of next year's summer take their rest Assured of happy waking by-and-by;
Though long the sweetness of the spring delays,
Though tempests rave as wrath from east to west
They neither strive nor cry.

Patient in long reserve of hidden power,
God's judgments tarry their appointed time,
But, from his love, wherein all fulness dwells,
Mute tokens come about us hour by hour,
In silence sweeter than the voiceless chime
Of fragrant lily bells.

The perfect bliss for which his people crave—
The final victory—he sees across
The cloud and sunshine of a thousand years:
While the frail garland on a baby's grave
May give to mortal life's utmost pain and loss
To eyes grown dim with tears!

O troubled heart, no storms of adverse fate,
No wave of circumstance may overleap
The jasper borders of eternity;
Acquaint thyself with him, and soon or late
He shall appoint a resting-place for thee,
Wherein no dreams shall be.

He giveth quietness and peace: assure
Here and hereafter, such those who rest
Soul-centered on his one eternal calm;
While sweet assurance, entering realms unseen,
Leads onward to the triumph of the blest,
The white robe and the palm!

An Open Letter to my Cousin. Part 1.

Dear Cousin:—When last I wrote to you, I thought I would waste no more time on you, but on reflection, I have concluded to write you through THE RESTITUTION, hoping thereby, if you are not benefited, perhaps some others may be.

You undoubtedly understand one part of the gospel pretty well, but it takes a whole gospel to insure salvation. You are blind in part, just the same as the Jews were in Paul's day, only you are blind as to that part that the Jews could see very plainly; and you can see that part that they could not see. The Jews could see, (for they read and believed Moses and the Prophets), that when their Messiah should come, he would re-establish the kingdom of Israel and [illegible] house of [illegible] plainly taught by all the inspired writers of Old Testament Scriptures, and why shall it not be literally fulfilled? Were not the prophecies in regard to the first advent of Christ, all literally fulfilled? Then why should you turn a square corner and say, all the predictions relating to his second advent are to be understood tropically, or spiritually. Where do you find any rule in God's Word for any such an interpretation?

When Jesus made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem, Matt. xxi 9; Luke xix. 38, and the disciples were shouting his praises, the Pharisees wanted him to rebuke his disciples and stop their noise. But Jesus said, "If these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out." Christ well knew they were only fulfilling a prophecy, Psa. cxviii. 20, and that that prophecy must have a literal fulfilment, and he shows by his answer that if the multitude did not fulfil it the stones would. Jesus had not learned the modern dodge of spiritualizing every thing that comes athwart a stereotyped theory.

Look over the acts in the birth, the life and preaching of Jesus, and especially the manner of his death and resurrection, and with your reference Bible, you will see that nearly every act connected with the history of Jesus, was brought to view, and spoken of by some one or more of the prophets, and those prophecies were as literally fulfilled as prophecies could be. See the parting of his garments, spoken of by the Psalmist, Psa. xxii. 18. For his derision, Matt. xxvii. 39, see Psa. xxii. 7, 8. Almost every act in the history of Jesus was foretold, and came to pass literally; then why should not the many utterances respecting his coming in glory and his reign over the house of Jacob, be literally fulfilled? Why not?

The Jews had the Old Testament, and read those few prophecies respecting the ignominious death of their Messiah, but undoubtedly spiritualized them to mean something else, as Orthodoxy does those multitudinous utterances respecting his glorious reign.

The Jews were not half so reprehensible for rejecting the claims of Jesus as their Messiah, as the Orthodox Church is in rejecting his claims as the Son of David, and heir apparent to his throne and kingdom.

There are but few plain prophecies respecting his first advent; and those few are hedged about with expressions that can be made to apply in some other way, if one is desirous to evade the truth; while there is a hundred-fold more plain expressions in regard to his literal reign on the throne of David, over the house of Israel.

Orthodoxy has so long been accustomed to follow the leadership of their great men, without once examining the Scriptures to see if they can find it there, that they seem determined it shall be as they have been accustomed to understand it. They seem to forget that God has a plan by which to save mankind, and that he has said, "the righteous shall be rewarded in the earth," "the meek shall inherit the earth," "the overcomers shall "reign over the nations," "we shall reign on the earth."

Orthodoxy says, "We will go to heaven to reign."

With thee we'll reign, with thee we'll live,
And kingdoms gain, above the skies.

This is better poetry than truth, for the Bible teaches nothing of the kind, but exactly the opposite.

Tell me Cousin—What does God want with you or me in heaven? Is heaven imperfect without us? Is there a vacant seat there that any one of earth's inhabitants is invited to occupy? Where has God taught us in his Word that he wants us to prepare for a place in heaven? Mankind has no business in heaven, but there is plenty of business here. Earth hath under the curse in consequence of man's disobedience, and is full of misery, violence, blood and death. But Paul shows in Rom. v., that since by man came the degradation, the ruin and the death, so, also, by man shall come the regeneration, and rejuvenation of the earth, and this is what God wants an ecclesia for. This is why the gospel call has been sent out, to take out from among the Gentiles, a people for his name. See Acts xv. 14, 15, 16. God wants soldiers, tried and faithful, and true, to assist his Son to put down the rebellion and he has told us plainly what are the wages he will give. This is the business that God wants soldiers for, and for which he sent his Son to earth as a recruiting officer. But men are not willing to let the gospel tell its own story, but have invented another gospel, that Christ never preached, and that Paul knew nothing about.

Dear Cousin—Are you conversant with the history of the Christian church since the days of Christ and the Apostles? [illegible] to [illegible] whom Jesus has specially declared that the church for near 300 years, believed in a literal kingdom and reign on the earth the same as we do, but when she went into the wilderness, and Christianity became popular, as it did about the time of Constantine, and as it is today, the church lost its literalism, and adopted a spiritualizing theory of understanding the Scriptures. Here is where the church made rapid strides towards the great apostasy, which finally headed up in that monster of iniquity at Rome. And right here, (let me say), in this determination to spiritualize all Scripture that don't agree with our preconceived theory, is where the church of today is fast tending towards the development of Paul's Man of Sin, or some great Anti-christian power.

When Luther and his coadjutors inaugurated the reformation, they came out of Babylon only in part. They brought with them that God-dishonoring doctrine, the immortality of the soul, together with the spiritualizing theory, that has worked such mischief in the church.

But after all, it is not strange that you cannot understand the promises of the gospel, but rest secure in your ignorance of the great salvation, the restitution and reconstruction of earth; and the reward that God has promised to give to the finally faithful.

You must get rid of that lie of the serpent, "Ye shall not surely die." While you wear the Serpent's Spectacles, you will never see the great and glorious truths of the gospel. Well and truly did the devil know that if he could instil this lie into the minds of our first parents, the work of captivating the entire race of man, would be well nigh complete. It is impossible to see all the great truths of the gospel, while one believes in the inherent immortality of the human soul.

By believing this lie of the Serpent, Adam sinned, and forfeited his dominion of earth, and brought himself and all his posterity into a dilemma, from which he could not, nor can they extricate themselves, do what they will.

Now God has devised a plan by which he proposes to put down the rebellion that Adam inaugurated, and left as a legacy to all his posterity, and free mankind from the dilemma in which he finds himself. And in pursuance of this proposition, he sent his only begotten Son to establish a course of discipline among mankind, and preach the glad tidings to those most interested in the good news, and still more than this, he sent an Angel Messenger to accompany the announciation of the birth of the King, with the announciation of his kingdom. He shall occupy the throne of his father David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever. But you virtually say, you receive the King but care nothing for the Angelic Message in regard to what he shall do or how he shall do it.

You might just as well reject the messenger, as to reject the message he brings. It is just as necessary that the Son of God shall have a kingdom by which he will have the power to subdue his enemies and bring them under the restraint of the law that shall emanate from Mount Zion, as it was that he should pass through the grave in order that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living.

God has taken special pains to delineate this kingdom, and has brought it to view in the writings of Moses, the Prophets and Psalms, and has spoken of the enthronement of his Son in glory, possibly one hundred times, where he has once spoken of his humiliation and death. Why this difference in favor of his exaltation? Evidently this: The death of Christ is a means to an end that could not be accomplished without it, and that end is restitution, the restitution of earth.

When Jesus Christ started out to preach the gospel among mankind he covenanted that those who will accept the conditions, and prepare themselves through patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, shall be made immortal, and assist in subduing the refractory nations, and peoples of earth, and of bringing them under restraint of the law that shall emanate, and go forth from Mount Zion, when the "mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains and exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it." See Isa. ii. 2, and Micah iv. 1. All the promises in the gospel, and throughout the Bible tend to this, not one promise to take men to heaven, not one.

You say, you once asked a prominent Minister, while you were discussing the S. S. lesson, "If the Lord means the destruction of Jerusalem in this passage, how do we know but that he always means that when he speaks of his coming?" He replied, "I cannot tell you, I do not understand it." Exactly so! When men depart from a literal interpretation of Scripture, they are like a ship at sea in a tempest, without a compass or rudder, driven about with every blast of wind that fills a sail. By spiritualizing Scripture, any passage can be conscripted to prove any theory that the demand requires. Put any construction you like on any passage of Scripture and you will find another passage that squarely contradicts your construction, and the farther you remove from a literalization of Scripture, the more contradictions you will find.

Let it be distinctly understood, then, that the more we spiritualize the Scriptures, and attach to them a meaning different from, and contrary to what they say, the more contradictions, absurdities and crookedness we introduce into them, and the more latitude we give to Bob Ingersol and all sceptics to bring the Bible into ridicule and augment this numbers.

Please ask your "prominent Minister" to take notice that the disciples asked the Master three separate questions, Matt. xxiv. 3. Jesus answered the three questions in a way to give latitude for speculation. If any one is desirous of turning away the many plain promises of the second coming of Christ, and his reign over the nations, here is an excuse, (only an excuse), to do so. The Angelic messengers, Acts i. 11, said, "this same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye see him go into heaven." How did he go? "He was taken up and a cloud received him out of their sight." "Shall so come in like manner!" "Shall come in the clouds of heaven." Daniel says, "come with the clouds of heaven." The Revelator says, "Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him." And Jesus himself says, "Shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds with great power and glory." "Then shall he send forth his angels and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds." Ask your "Prominent Minister" if any thing of this kind occurred at the destruction of Jerusalem? Then how can he say he does not understand it? When men have a theory that they are determined to sustain right or wrong, any Scripture that does not harmonize with their views, they will pass by, and say they do not understand it.

Men are willing to wrest plain Scripture in order to get rid, (for the time being), of the literal second coming of Christ, which is so repugnant to their dreams of a spiritual coming and spiritual reign. The doctrine of the second advent of Christ has become hateful to a certain class of religionists, made more hateful, (it may be), by the time-settings and failures of those who have advocated it.

The doctrine of life only in Christ has been kept hid, (as it were), until now, right on the eve of the old dispensation, it is made prominent along with the doctrine of Christ's second coming; purposely in the mind of Jehovah, (it may be), so that the doctrine of Christ's second advent should be stigmatized with materialism and thereby unpopular. The true teaching of Scripture has always been unpopular and under ban, and this appears to be one of the characteristics, "because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."

You refer me to the "all manner of opinions among Orthodox Ministers." Exactly. This is just as one might expect. When men depart from the plainness of Scripture that the inspired writers have attached to it, every man has "an ax to grind," and he seeks some one to turn; so he puts a meaning into all Scripture suitable for his purpose.

Dear Cousin—How can you attach so much importance to the opinions of Orthodox Ministers and great men? How can you be so careless in regard to the reward? After his resurrection, Christ was with his disciples "forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." Christ well knew that it was necessary that his disciples should be well instructed in the message he was about to send them to proclaim. Of course he did not tell them it would be 1800 years before his kingdom would be set up and established, or they would not have asked to know the time, but evidently, they were still associating his kingdom that he had sent them out to preach, with a restored Israelitish kingdom. Their question proves this beyond a doubt, and he answered them in a way to deepen and confirm their impressions. If his kingdom was to be a spiritual, instead of a literal kingdom as Orthodoxy teaches, the Great Teacher was certainly a dull teacher, or his disciples were dull scholars, otherwise they would have learned in three and a half years that their national expectations were not founded in truth. Do you think the Master would have left his [illegible] ances in regard to [illegible] know full [illegible] tion prove [illegible] were still associating [illegible] with a restored Israelitish Commonwealth? They asked if he would now restore the kingdom to Israel? and he simply told them they were not to know the time. And he went away and left them with a commission to preach the gospel, or good news of the kingdom of heaven, and he, of course, knew full well that they would preach it just as they understood it.

But more than this. Peter, on the day of Pentecost referred to David, that he was a Prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne.

Was Peter preaching the gospel when he spoke of the resurrection of the throne of David, or was he courting the popularity of the Jews? For an answer, turn to Acts xv. 16. "After this," i. e., after the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles, "After this I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, and I will build up again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up," v. 17. "That the residance of men may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called." This Scripture evidently teaches, that after Christ comes the second time, and restores the tabernacle or throne of David, those that are called by the name of the Lord among the Gentiles will have a chance to seek after him. What will you do with all these plain Scriptures in any other view, than the one we advocate?

Dear Cousin—your carelessness in regard to the reward of the saints, forces upon my mind the conclusion that you love your commentaries, and your great men, and your standing in the Baptist Church, more than you do the Word of the Lord. "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me."

God proposes, not only to put down the rebellion that Adam inaugurated, but to reconstruct the earth and man upon the earth, under a righteous government, that shall render him the fruits of righteousness and peace in their season, and there is as much proof that this government and kingdom shall be literal, as there is that the birth, life and death of Jesus should be literal.

Again—The Bible is voluminous in regard to the promises that God made to the fathers, among which is the promise that God made to Abraham, of an inheritance in the land of Canaan. "Arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it; for I will give it thee," Gen. xv. 17. "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates." The land of Canaan is not, and never was in heaven, (Orthodox songs to the contrary not withstanding), but it had metes and bounds, and can be seen today, and its boundaries determined. The promise to Abraham is real terra firma, and yet Stephen says, Acts vii. 5, that God "gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to him in possession." R. V. Now shall the promise and oath of Jehovah fall to the ground? Will God set his oath aside by taking Abraham to heaven to reward him? Nay verily! The promise is sure to Abraham and his seed. When God issues a call for the return of the seed of Abraham, the children of promise, (and it looks now as if that call had already been made, since Jerusalem already contains over 20,000 Jews, and Mr. Rothschild has taken hold of their return, to the extent of a million and a half of francs), to take possession of the land so long promised to Abraham and his seed, they will come from the East and the West, from the North and the South, and inherit the land, from which no power on earth can ever eject them. This is the hope of Israel, and has been through all the weary years of their dispersion in all the world, for God has promised it by the mouth of all his holy Prophets since the world began, and why should they not hope? They have the promise and oath of Jehovah to lean upon. They have been dispersed for their wickedness, as God told them they would be, yet God will bring them back, for his promise and covenant, and the love he bears their fathers demand it, for Paul says, "They are beloved for their fathers sake." God has a great work in the future for Israel to do, and when they shall have returned from their wanderings among all the nations of the earth, they will be far better prepared to preach the go[illegible] to the nations [illegible] the Apostle Paul in his defence before King Agrippa, Acts xxvi. 6, he says, "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: unto which promise our twelve tribes hope to come." Here Paul shows clearly that the hope which he entertained, and for which he suffered bonds, was identical with that of the twelve tribes. Then why did the Jews persecute him? Ans. Because Paul preached that those hopes and promises would be realized through Jesus of Nazareth, the crucified, but risen King of the Jews, as he shows in verse 8, that through him the very same results would be realized that the twelve tribes were looking for when their Messiah should appear.

THE COMING AGE,

—1876—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. WEATHER.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point or relate ably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

An Open Letter to my Cousin. Part 2.

Among the many promises that God made to the fathers, that Paul hoped for so earnestly, and that were identical with the hopes of the twelve tribes, the promise made to David of the perpetuity of his throne and kingdom, takes a very conspicuous place. In Psa. lxxxix. we find this promise clearly brought to view. "I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations." Again, "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David; his seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven."

Paul, in Heb. vi. 18, shows that these covenants are a strong consolation to the heirs of promise, attested as they are by "two immutable things," which are, first, in the covenant to Abraham, "By myself have I sworn," and secondly, in the covenant to David, "Once have I sworn by my holiness." In this covenant to David, the perpetuity of the Israelitish commonwealth is plainly brought to view, and Paul speaks of it together with the covenants of promise, in his letter to the Ephesians and shows that to be aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, is to be without hope and without God in the world.

Tell me cousin, if you can, what the covenants of promise are, and what the commonwealth of Israel, in any other view than the one we advocate?

The commonwealth of Israel (as Webster will tell you), in the [illegible] or government of Israel [illegible] overthrown in the days of Zedekiah the wicked king, as Ezek. xxi. 27, said it should be, and "be no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."

The prophet evidently alludes to Jesus the Christ, who is yet to come, and then he will re-establish the overturned kingdom of Israel, and occupy the throne of David that is now trailing in the dust, as James, Acts xv. 16, says, and as the angel Gabriel, Luke i. 32, 33, also said.

David in Psa. lxxxix. 39 saw by the spirit of prophecy, that the kingdom of Israel would be overturned and his crown cast down, yet he evidently saw that his greater Son would restore his kingdom and occupy his throne.

The entire Old Testament Scriptures abound in promises made of God unto their fathers, and the Jews looked for those promises to be fulfilled when their Messiah should come, but through blindness in part they rejected their Messiah when he came, and put him to death, but when he comes again, Heb. ix. 28, those same promises will be fulfilled that the Jews were looking for when he came the first time.

The Jews were not at all mistaken in regard to what their Messiah should do, but they were mistaken in regard to the time, and who should superintend the work. They expected their Messiah would come of some of the best families, the D. D.'s or L. L. D.'s. Not so our Heavenly Father. He chose the carpenter's son, and acknowledged himself well pleased in him. It is the poor of this world, rich in faith, that are heirs of the kingdom. When Christ came the first time he rejected the great and noble and chose the fishermen of Galilee, the poor and the lowly, for his associates, and he will do the same when he comes again. He will choose only those who have strong confidence in his word and promises, those who "believe all that the prophets have spoken," not those who do not particularly care what he has promised or what he will do.

In your letter you speak of a Seventh Day Adventist, and seem to think he is just as likely to be right in thinking the saints are to be taken to heaven to remain for a thousand years, as I am in thinking they are to be rewarded in a literal kingdom to be set up at the coming of our long absent King. Dear cousin, what kind of a way have you for determining what is right and what is wrong? To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." I want a plain "thus saith the Lord," for my faith. You jump at a conclusion and guess the Adventist is just as likely to be right as I am. Ask the Adventist to point out where God says the saints are to be taken to heaven for the thousand years or at any other time. He certainly can show nothing of the kind. But he can show you that Mrs. White has said so. This is the highest proof that he can show for any such a doctrine. Then ask me to point out where inspiration declares that the saints are to be rewarded on the earth. See Psa. xxxvii. 9, "Those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." Vs. 11, "But the meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." See verses 18, 22, 29, 34.

You admit that one cannot be saved without believing the gospel, yet you are willing to rest secure because you think you believe in and love Jesus Christ, but you acknowledge that you are not very anxious to know what eternal life is, how it is, or where it is. But this is just wherein you fail to believe the gospel. The Jesus Christ that you believe in, is not the Jesus Christ, the King of the Jews, that the Scriptures bring to view, and which one must believe in in order to salvation. Suppose that you strangely imagine that the reward that the Savior promises, and invites men to strive for, is a Mohammedan Paradise of strict sensuality, and you sincerely believe such a gospel and love such a Savior, can you therefore claim the Scriptural reward? In short, is such a man a true gospel believer with a well grounded hope of salvation? Of course you reply in the negative. Neither can I admit for [illegible] transport the immortal soul [illegible] away "beyond the bounds of time and space" to enjoy themselves, or, as one has expressed it, "to sit on a cloud and sing psalms." Think of such an employment eternally, and then imagine a God who has planned such an employment as a reward for his children. No, no! The gospel that Jesus came to preach and that he sent out his disciples to preach, is the gospel or good news of the coming kingdom. Christ said, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also, for therefore am I sent. And when he sent out his disciples to preach the gospel, he told them to "preach the kingdom of God." Luke ix. 2. And Luke says, "they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel." See also Acts viii. 12. But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. Acts xviii. 30, 31. And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, etc., preaching the kingdom of God.

By these Scriptures we can plainly see that Christ and the apostles had a definiteness in their preaching, and that definiteness was the kingdom of God. They did not, like my cousin, exhibit a complete carelessness in regard to what the gospel was. They did not preach salvation without any way in which that salvation was to be brought about. The kingdom of God was uppermost in their preaching. The Jews understood from the prophets and the Psalms what that kingdom would be, and the special preaching was, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye and believe the gospel," or good news.

God has given us a chart to guide us across the ocean of life, but you virtually tell him you cannot understand his chart. Your comparison of a hundred persons, ninety-nine of whom express confidence in regard to the teachings of Scripture, while one says he knows nothing about it, and yet you ask if the one is not as well off as the ninety-nine. Now this is a libel upon the character of our Heavenly Father. You virtually tell him that you care very little for his word. It is so mysterious, intricate and complicated, that it takes too much study to get anything out of it. I admit that in saying this you are only carrying out the practical teachings of Orthodoxy. The Roman Catholics try to keep the masses in ignorance of God's word, saying, they can't understand it, but how much better is Orthodoxy? They allow and even recommend it to be read, but at the same time recommend a commentary to be kept handy and to be consulted every time you try to study the Scriptures. You say you have Dr. Scott's Comments which tell you that "the prophecies were in a great measure closed and sealed from believers." This you seem to swallow down without masticating, and rest secure that all will be right, whether you study the Scriptures or not, or whether you know what they teach in regard to the great salvation.

Christ said, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." And Paul said to Timothy, that "from a child thou hast known the Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation." It is no marvel that you are groping your way in the dark when you don't consult the Scriptures with as much relish as you do Dr. Scott.

Christ said, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able." You will notice that this quotation reads strait gate, not straight. Strait means difficult. Difficult to find and difficult to pass through. The mass of seekers fail to find the strait gate, or finding, they fail to enter in. Did not our Lord say it should be so? "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" And Paul says, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." And Daniel says, "But the wicked shall do wickedly and none of the wicked shall understand." Christ said in answer to the [illegible] spoke to [illegible] the D. D.s [illegible] great men, or as the Jews did to their Rabbis, the gospel is a parable.

You speak of a contingency and think but few will be saved if men must understand the mysteries of the future. I do not expect there will be many saved in comparison to the many that think they shall simply because they think they believe in and love Jesus Christ.

Before we settle down and rest secure simply because we are sinners, we want to know how God has dealt with men in the past, in order to know how he will deal with them in the future. Turn to 2 Samuel vi. 6, 7. David went to Baale to bring the ark of the Lord to Jerusalem. And when they came to the threshing floor of Nachon, Uzza took hold of the ark, for the oxen shook it. And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzza, and God smote him there for his error, and there he died by the ark of the Lord." But why was he smitten? Turn to Num. iv. 15, "The sons of Kohath shall come to bear it, but they shall not touch any holy thing, lest they die." Uzza, in his piety and zeal for the Lord, took hold of the ark to keep it from falling to the ground, and for this act God smote him and he died. In 1 Chron. xv. 13, David said, "the Lord our God made a breach upon us because we sought him not after the due order."

The house of the Lord is a house of order, and the plan of salvation is after a due order, and God has told us abundantly what that order is, but if we, like Uzza, jump at a conclusion, and guess that some other plan will do just as well, if we are only sincere, and believe in Christ, though it be a Christ after the inventions and traditions of Babylon the Mother of harlots, or any of her daughters, we may like Uzza find when it is too late, that God has but one plan of salvation, and something else will not do at all well. God did not falsify his word to save Uzza, nor will he in the great realm.

But there is more than one point in the gospel that is necessary to be believed in order to salvation. You may think you believe in and love Jesus Christ, and believe that he died and rose again and think you have got the whole gospel and therefore rest secure for salvation. But please turn to Gal. iii. 8, and you will there find that the gospel embraces more than the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Paul says the gospel was preached to Abraham, saying, "In thee shall all nations be blessed." Not a word here about the death of Christ, yet it was gospel nevertheless, seeing it contemplates the justification of the heathen through faith. God promised and covenanted with an oath to bless all the nations or families of the earth, and this promise was given to Abraham, "In thee and in thy seed," yet Abraham lived and died without accomplishing this grand result, hence he must be raised from the dead and fulfil the promise in the resurrection state. For God will not allow his covenant and oath to fall to the ground, but his word will accomplish that whereunto it stands pledged. Paul says of Abraham and many of the ancients, Heb. xi, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." Even the promise of an inheritance of the promised land of Canaan was never realized by Abraham or any of his seed, except the inheritance of the possession that was promised Abraham, but they have been driven from that possession for their wickedness, but when they return and take possession of the promised inheritance, no power in heaven or earth will ever eject them, for they will then be inheritors. They will be a righteous nation, doing the will of God even as it is done in heaven. In Heb. xiii. 14, Paul says, "For here have we no continuing city, but we [illegible] to come." Paul looked [illegible], not a city to go to [illegible] and the Ruler coming down from God [illegible] as a Bride [illegible] God prepared for [illegible] that Christ [illegible] for his disciples.

But [illegible] why am I quoting Scripture to my cousin? I was once conversing with a Catholic lady, trying to prove from Scripture the doctrine I so much love, when she replied, "You need not quote Scripture to me. I do not go by the Scripture; I go by what my Priest tells me. I have no use for the Scriptures." You seem to have but little use for the Scriptures as long as you have Dr. Scott to consult. If I could prove my views by quoting Dr. Scott, no doubt my arguments would be far more potent than sustaining them from the Scriptures. But no! I would exchange all of Dr. Scott's writings for one plain "thus saith the Lord." When I can quote Scripture, I feel like running through a troop and leaping over a wall.

Please, cousin, ask Dr. Scott why God gave us the Bible at all, if he "closed it and sealed it from" those most interested in its teachings? Might as well burn up our Bibles as the Catholics do, and depend on our great men, our D. D.s and LL. D.s to expound to us what we are to believe and what we are to do. In short, let our D. D.s and great men do all our thinking, and they will soon develop another Catholic church, equal if not exceeding that gigantic institution at Rome.

And now dear cousin, in conclusion permit me to say, that I have shown beyond a reasonable doubt that salvation depends on a hearty belief of a whole gospel. That though the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ is gospel, yet it is not the whole gospel. That the gospel can be and has been preached without a word being said in regard to the death and resurrection of Christ. That a whole gospel embraces, as well the restitution and reconstruction of earth, as the death of Jesus. And this restitution and reconstruction of earth will be Paradise restored upon the same plane in which Adam found it. That this is the ultimatum of Christ's mission into the world, as also his death and resurrection. That the gospel was preached to Abraham. "In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations or families of the earth be blessed." That the death and resurrection of Jesus was all in the eternal purpose, and embraced in the promise. That Paul shows that Christ is the seed of Abraham, as well as all believers in Christ, hence the whole family of Christ together with the faithful of all ages will be constituted the seed of Abraham through Christ and together will form the immortal cabinet, (so to speak,) of our King who together shall all work for the general good of mankind. That when Abraham shall be raised from the dead all immortal as Jesus was, the kingdom will be set up and established. Then with "all power in heaven and earth," will Christ the exalted and immortal head, as the true seed of Abraham, be prepared to bless all the nations and families of earth according to the promise.

Dear cousin, my sympathies would extend to you an immortality, but where can I find a plain promise in God's word to that effect? You, evidently, together with the generality of Orthodox Christians, leave out of your belief the restitution of earth, consequently you ignore the object of the death of Christ, and have invented another gospel that Christ never preached, nor promised eternal life to any of its advocates. Orthodoxy is intoxicated with the thought of going to heaven, where God has never invited them, where he does not want them, and where it would be death to them according to the types, if they could enter there, as none but the High Priest in the old dispensation was permitted on pain of death, to enter into the Holy of Holies. Christ, our great High Priest, is now within the Holy of Holies officiating to make reconciliation for those waiting ones outside. And when he comes out, he will bless those who have been so long waiting, praying with their faces toward Jerusalem. Yours, dear cousin, in patient waiting for the coming of our King and his enthronement in glory.

S. A. CHAPLIN.

Editor Restitution:

June 30th I left my home for Connecticut and Massachusetts to visit my brothers in the flesh, and old associates of my boyhood days, also to preach the word as the way might be opened. Called on my old and tried friends in Syracuse, Brother and Sister Pino. Had a most delightful season with them. Found them sound in the Abrahamic faith, but they remind me of Lot in ancient Sodom. July 1st, at 1 p. m., I bid adieu to them, and at 3 p. m. I took the chariots of Nahum, and at 6 p. m. reached Springfield, Mass., and at 9 a. m. reached Williamantic, Conn., thence by stage and on foot reached North Windham at 12:15 p. m. Had a blessed season with Brother and Sister Chamberlin and family. One of their daughters requested baptism.

But I was made sad because death, the vile enemy to the children of God, had laid its icy hand upon my much beloved Brother and Sister Parish since my last visit in this place. Bro. Parish was in his 79th year, and I think Sister Parish was over 80. They were good people, known and read of all who knew them as living epistles of the Abrahamic faith. Brother P. was for a number of years a Methodist preacher, but upon his hearing the gospel preached by the writer he was led to embrace it, and through him Sister P. was brought to embrace the one faith and hope. But they "rest together in the dust" in one grave.

July 3rd I took my leave of this good family for Southbridge, Mass., my native town. Called on Brother McDonald, editor and publisher of the Putnam Patriot. Had a pleasant time in conversing upon the plan of human redemption. Arrived at Southbridge about noon and was joyfully received by my brothers and all my old associates who are alive.

On Sunday there was a meeting in a beautiful grove near my eldest brother's which I attended in the afternoon. Although it was Orthodox, by urgent request I addressed the Sunday School with great freedom, and at the hour appointed for public services at the stand I gave a discourse predicated upon the words of Jesus, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." Profound attention was given by the entire audience during its delivery. An excommunicated priest was present, who had been converted to Orthodoxy six months previous, came forward to the stand with many others, and gave me a hearty greeting, saying he had learned more from me than "he had ever learned before of Biblical lore?"

July 5th I bid farewell to my relatives, associates and the scenes of my early days and ministry, and started for the city of Auburn, where I stopped over Sunday and preached in Seward's Park, which the Mayor had kindly granted to us, to a noble audience of attentive hearers. The Auburn Morning Dispatch gave a flattering report of the meeting and speaker.

Reached my home the 12th. I left the last of the week for Norwich, Ont., a distance of 100 miles from my home. Preached on Sunday to a large audience of attentive hearers. Ate the memorial supper. It was a joyful time. Gave one discourse on Tuesday evening in the Town Hall in Burgessville to a large and attentive audience. Some of them came seven miles. Gave one in Hatchly and one in Mt. Vernon. All the friends of the truth were kind to me; never more so. Fraternally,

Oddities from Japan.

The following extract was made from a paper which was composed, compiled, written and read by a Japanese girl in a mission school in Yokohama. The paper was entirely in English.

DIFFICULTY OF THE PATH OF KNOWLEDGE.

How to do God's Will.

A teacher was explaining to her class the words concerning God's angels—"ministers of his who do his pleasure"—and asked, "How do the angels carry out God's will?"

Many answers followed.

One said, "They do it directly."

Another, "They do it with all their heart."

A third, "They do it well."

And after a pause, a quiet little girl added, "They do it without asking any questions."

"Thinking Ourselves Over."

"Please tell me, mother, what is self-examination?" said a child. "Our superintendent said something about it, and he told us to spend a little while every Sunday practising it—practising what, mother?"

"Self-examination is thinking ourselves over," answered the mother. "You know how apt we are to forget ourselves, what we did and thought yesterday, and the day before, and the day before that. Now it is by calling to mind our past conduct that we can truly see it as it is, and improve upon it."

Self-forgetfulness is a virtue in the common acceptance of the phrase, but it is not safe for one to always forget one's self. A bad man never likes to "think himself over." It is only those who aim at self-improvement who are willing to review the past, and to profit by its lessons. If we would become truly good, and successful, we must "think ourselves over." Mistakes must be corrected, and lost opportunities redeemed.

Dear Children:

When Moses, the man of God died, and the rod was laid aside, a new order of things was slowly developed.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCTOBER 13, 1886. NO. 38.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months the same rate.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint helps with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and baptism as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The one drawn out was succeeded by a Savior or deliverer. The children of Israel had passed under the rod in the wilderness, now they are placed under a different head to whom the Lord said, "There shall not any man be able to stand before thee, all the days of thy life, as I was with Moses so I will be with thee, I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. Be strong and of good courage, for unto this people thou shalt divide for an inheritance the land which I swore unto their fathers to give them." Two spies were sent out to search out the land, and when they returned they said, Truly the Lord hath delivered into our hands all the land, for all the inhabitants of the country do faint because of us. They declare to their Deliverer that as they had hearkened to Moses in all things, so would they hearken unto him. And he commanded the people, saying, When ye see the Ark of the Lord and the priests bearing it, ye shall go after it. They were not to come near the Ark of the Lord, a space of two thousand cubits was to be between it and the people. And the Ark of the covenant passed over before the people. And it came to pass as soon as the soles of the feet of the priests that bear the Ark of the Lord of all the earth rested in the waters of Jordan the waters were cut off, and stood upon a heap. It was the season when the Jordan overflowed all its banks, and at that time the river is a gushing, rushing torrent. But the priests that bear the Ark of the Lord stood firm on dry ground, in the midst of Jordan, "or he [illegible] the people, and command them to take out of the midst of Jordan twelve stones. Gather them from where the feet of the Ark bearers stood firm, each man shall carry a stone upon his shoulder, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Israel, and the stone shall abide with him in his lodging place until they come to Gilgal, "or a rolling away reproach." These stones were called memorial stones. And their Deliverer spake unto them, saying, When your children shall ask their fathers in time to come, saying, What mean these stones? then ye shall let your children know saying, Israel come over this Jordan on dry land. That all the people of the earth may know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty, that ye might fear the Lord your God for ever. After they had all passed over, their Deliverer pitched the twelve stones in Gilgal, and there they were all circumcised with a sharp flint, or stone. And the Lord said, This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you. And there they kept the Passover. While under Joshua or a Savior the children of Israel were yoked with "Stone Power," and circumcised with that which represented the name; and only this one took away their reproach. After this, they could indeed keep the Passover, and eat the old corn of the land, for the Prince of the host of the Lord had come to lead them safely into the promised land.

Your affectionate teacher,

R. COFFMAN.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean; we will just say, "Jan" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jan6" it means your subscription expired the first of January, 1886, and consequently is six months past due now. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year; "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

LITERARY NOTICES.

The Eastern Question in its various Phases—Although this work has not, as yet, appeared in book form, still from our personal knowledge of many chapters that will form a part of its contents, we are happy to announce to our readers that the volume is to appear at an early day. Bro. Westbee, its author, says:—"I have completed a contract with the Lutheran Book Concern, of Columbus, Ohio, in which they bind themselves to have the book called 'The Eastern Question in its various Phases,' bound and ready for delivery by Christmas next, or at furthest by Jan. 1, 1887, one week later. The book will contain 600 pages royal octavo, it being 100 pages larger than the "Coming ... will be sold in ... thing about the ... recent- ... women what ... 1,476, and obtain ... glory that fadeth not away.

British, ... Empires, the American Republic, and the Hebrew family under Israel. The Seventh and concluding Phase is the Messianic."

Millennial Dawn, Volume I. The Plan of the Ages.—This is the title of a book containing 331 pages published at Zion's Watch Tower, Pittsburgh, Penn. Price $1.00.

As a matter of curiosity we will, in the first place, direct the attention of our readers to the opinions expressed in some contemporaneous journals relative to the supposed merits and demerits of this somewhat unique and singular work. A Chicago Journal says:—

"Millennial Dawn,—The Plan of the Ages, by Charles T. Russell—(Pittsburgh: Zion's Watch Tower.) The Inter Ocean has before made mention of this work. It is the first of a series of volumes, each complete in itself, and designed to expound and make clear "the plan of the ages" in the salvation of man. It is a strong writing, showing much research and excellent arrangement and method in its treatment of its subjects. Upon the opening pages is a chart marked "the chart of the ages," which divides the periods into three dispensations. First to the flood—1656 years; second includes the Jewish or gospel age, and third, yet to be fulfilled, the millennial age under the reign of Christ. "For this end Christ died and lived again that he might be the Lord of both the dead and the living." There will doubtless be many exceptions taken to the theology of the writing, but none will doubt the honesty or earnestness, or the intended devotion to truth of the author. Christian readers may find teachings in the book to combat, but they will find much more to commend. From a scholarly stand-point the book will be marked as one of merited literary excellence."

On the contrary the New York Independent says:—

"Millennial Dawn, Volume I. The Plan of the Ages, throws no light on our mind, and only adds to the old perplexities. It is hard to classify either the book or the author. He is a fifth monarchy man, and talks in a wild and dangerously anarchic way of the authority of governments and of social order. He seems to belong in the wing of the Adventists, known as "Sleepers" on account of their belief that all men, good and bad, sleep in death until their "restitution" at the pre-millennial coming of Christ. At all events, he believes in the restitution at the second and pre-millennial advent of the entire race to an earthly life under the reign of Christ, and with Jerusalem as the world's capital. The mild reign of the Prince of Peace has hardens in his hands to a "rule of iron," which, with evident relish of the anticipation, he asserts will not be at all to the liking of a very considerable portion of the 142,000,000,000 of the restored dead. So far as we can disentangle the confusion of the book, it is a ludicrous mixture of restorationism, pre-millennialism of the more or less orthodox type, and a large portion of adventism of a kind which we must leave to those who believe in it to say whether it is orthodox or heretical. To us it falls into the large but simple class of well-meant fooleries."

Thus our readers will see how the "doctors disagree." While there is no paper that comes to our office that we more highly esteem than the Independent, we think the literary reviewer, who wrote the above critique, has been too caustic in some of his expressions, and somewhat unfortunate in a few of his leading objections; inasmuch as these very objections seem to conflict as much with positive Scripture language as with statements contained in the book reviewed. See Ps. ii. 9; Rev. ii. 26, 27.

Human destiny is a problem of immensely solemn importance. Ontology, Soteriology, Eschatology,—the doctrines of Existence, of Salvation, of Last-things—are the irrepressible questions forcing themselves upon the attention of all the thoughtful in this age of critical investigation. It has become apparent to many theologians—though painfully so in many instances—that the old creeds are about so many concentrated formularies of extravagant error on eternal retribution. To speak for ourselves, we like some chapters of this work. Of other chapters we must say that the themes discussed are open questions. To those ... thing about the ...

Communications.

To the Church of God in Christ Jesus, Greeting in His Name.

"Ye men of Galilee why stand ye looking into heaven? This Jesus which was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven." Acts i. 11.

Beloved in Christ, these are precious words, these are words of truth, uttered by our Father's messengers, sent to comfort those who were that moment separated unexpectedly from their best friend. The hope of return of a dear one takes away the keenest pang of parting. But with all other partings there comes doubt, the possibility of death, the possibility of change, restless change, that stamps all things earthly with his cruel mark. So that around the oft spoken words, "I will return," there cluster about as many fears as hopes. But to the words "shall so come," or shall come again "in like manner," or in the same way as given in the above text, there attaches no doubt. This message was sent from the Father of light with whom there is no change, neither shadow of turning; therefore, with full assurance of hope, and with unwavering faith we can rest on this ever blessed promise.

The messengers then gave no date as to the fulfilment of the promise. Neither did the Master himself while here, but he told us to "watch" to "be ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." The promise given is for us as well as for the faithful of all past ages, and so also are the admonitions. The latter seem indeed especially adapted to those who are living in these last days, as we evidently are, for although we are not told either the day or the hour when he will return, yet by the signs and way-marks on the pages of prophecy and history we know that the cup of the iniquity of this age is very nearly full.

Let us pause a moment and consider. How did he go into heaven? and who saw him ascending there? He went up in a small or thin cloud, as the original ("nephele") signifies. From this we may reasonably suppose there was nothing very portentious or attractive about it, nothing to arrest the attention of the busy world. They knew not, neither cared they to know, that the Lord of the whole earth had ascended up on high to his Father's right hand, and for the time being left them in possession of a part of his rightful dominion. We have no reason to believe anyone saw him going up but those who were with him in presence and fellowship. Even they were astonished at his sudden departure although he had told them that it was needful for them that he should leave them.

His departure, his ascension, was the crowning climax of their greatest hopes that he was truly the Messiah. The very one of whom Moses and the prophets had written. And now in the moment of their consternation comes the messengers of the Most High to assure them that he shall come again just as they saw him go away. This promise is yet in the future. We hope it will be fulfilled in the near future. We long to see him. But let us not now fear to ask ourselves, are we truly living daily in his fellowship, and do we keep constantly looking up to where he ascended? Let us remember that it is only "to them who look for him" that he will appear without sin unto salvation. Can we be truly and earnestly looking for him if our hearts are all engrossed with the cares and duties of this fleeting life?

In these closing days of Gentile rule the world's votaries have an inordinate desire to become rich. The lust of the eye, and the pride of life or high living, and the enjoyment of the beautiful at whatever cost, may safely be said to be the rage of this generation; and these characteristics of worldly ambition are quite as marked in the nominal churches as in what they call the outside world. But my brethren, my sisters, let us remember that our beloved Master said, "Ye are not of the world even as I am not of the world." We also read, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Again, "The world passeth away and the lusts (or pleasures) thereof, but he that doeth the will of my Father abideth forever." Shall we be counted among those who abide forever, or with the things that pass away?

... flesh, this weak sele... Atonement. On this solemn day they are wont to look carefully over the year just gone, and regretting all the discovered errors of their lives, they profess to begin anew and on an amended scale the journey of life.

Let us, beloved in Christ, take a lesson from them, and even now "renew our covenant with God." The cause of his truth has been languishing for means to send abroad the glad message of salvation. Too many are adding field to field, house to house, stock to stock, bond to bond, and taking pleasure in amassing the corruptible riches of this world, to the almost absolute neglect of spreading the knowledge of the everlasting truth. Let us stop a moment and ask, Is this right? To do right is to work righteousness; and it is written, the righteous shall inherit the earth and dwell therein forever. We cannot serve God and Mammon, and to whom we yield ourselves servants to obey, his servants we are whom we obey. Where our treasure is our hearts will be also. If our hearts are in the world we will follow the ways of the world and spend our best efforts in trying to hoard up the fleeting treasures of this uncertain age. If our hearts are in the truth, our works will evidence the fact. We cannot "hide our colors." Let us, my beloved, think on these things.

We were much pleased and comforted in reading the several letters addressed to the Argos conference. They contained some excellent suggestions to which all would do well to take heed. It seems very necessary to awake to a more decided and a more united effort for the support of the truth. And right here I beg to suggest that we as a people decide to give to the Lord's cause a certain definite per cent. of the means over which we are placed as stewards. In Israel's time the Lord demanded a tenth of all that they possessed. Shall we be less faithful? If all the churches in the several States and counties, as well as the isolated members of the fold would unite to give ten, five, or even one per cent. of their means, a fund would very soon be created by which living messengers could be sent into new fields. THE RESTITUTION sent out on its mission of light, giving fifty-two times a year instead of forty-eight times, and with a much larger circulation. We profess to be one household. Let us live out our profession and show to the world that we are indeed the household of faith. Let our works correspond with our faith, and let us hope that at the Plymouth conference some definite action may be taken on this very important matter. Yours looking for redemption.

EEL RIVER.

In the soft warm sunlight of Lord's day afternoon, Oct. 31, 1886, quite a company from the little church at Claysville, gathered on the green banks of this rushing river, just below the dam and near the bridge leading into South Whitley. Others, strangers from the town stood along the bridge, watching our movements, with hushed voices and sobered faces. A lovely young girl in the bloom of healthful, happy freedom, stepped out from among us and was joyfully robed for the watery burial. A few solemn words from the officiating minister, J. L. Wince, as to the meaning and purpose of baptism, and then she walked with brave, firm step, and calm, determined face down into the flood, and while the sweet notes of

"In thy ... on Rock of Ages,
...thou me"

rang from voices on the shore, she was buried, and came up rejoicing, an adopted child of God and a new made heir of salvation! to receive the congratulations of her new relatives, her brothers and sisters in Christ.

Dear, dear Cora, may God help you to walk faithfully before him, in this new life, may he keep you from sin, and so lead and guide you that you may at last receive the crown of life, with the never-ending joys of the kingdom, is my earnest prayer.

And you, her young friends who are still out of Christ, may you say to one another, "Shall we continue in sin?" "Shall we go in the broad road, when we know that loss of all that is worth having and death is at the end; while Cora is pressing on in the way of righteousness and peace, growing in grace, with ever increasing power to resist the evil, and happy in the consciousness of being hidden in the name of the Lord as in a fortress, with the prospect of all that is bright and glorious before her as an inheritance. shall we go on? shall we continue to sin?"

I hope you will be ... talking the matter over ... er, and that the answer ... tion, will be "No!" ... our sins and turn to ... will follow Cora's ex... with her to the kingdom ... only you, but many oth... neighborhoods may be f... the Lord. "There is pardon for you!" Rebel no longer, you are foolish to throw away the Father's proffered gifts for the sinful pleasures of an hour. All is vanity here, all is so fleeting. Today, you live; tomorrow, you are robed for burial and your destiny is told!

Your young friends are dying, cut down without warning, you too must die. Let no excuse keep you from Christ. Let no excuse cause you to make delay. While you parley you may be lost.

GREENUP, Ill.

Editor Restitution:

You will please give space in your columns for the following. I had the pleasure of meeting with Brother S. T. Hook, of Sugar Creek, Ind., at the R. R. depot at Greenup, Cumberland Co., Ill., July 23, 1886. He was then on his way to Clay Co., this State, where, I was informed, he preached a series of discourses with good attention and attendance, and is wanted there again. From thence he proceeded by the P. D. & E. R. R. to Toledo, this (Cumberland) county, and from there to Corinth Church, 5 miles southwest of the aforesaid place, where he preached a number of discourses besides preaching other places in the vicinity. He here baptized fifteen persons, eleven of whom had been formerly baptized by the Christian order. He next went to Mt. Moriah, which I believe is in Clark Co., and preached, baptizing two persons, and from thence to our place, where he preached two discourses and baptized three persons, two of whom had been formerly baptized by immersion, one by the U. B. Church and the other by the Newlight Christian order. He left here for his home at New Palestine, Indiana, Sept. 22nd, giving him two months in our State. God bless Brother Hook and grant him a speedy return, is the prayer of many people in this and adjoining places.

The above named Corinth Church is the same church where Brother Hook held a four days debate with James M. Hill, of the Christian order, last spring. I was one of the moderators in that discussion, but owing to the inconsistencies of the latter party, I never thought it worthy of a report. I will say here that Brother Hook stuck close to his subject and exhibited both a manly and Christian spirit, while Hill on the other hand did not exhibit either a manly or Christian spirit, but bore the appearance of a law pettifogger, quoting from a book which he called Rough on Rats, promiscuously, disconnected Scripture, without making any application of it, skirting, throwing inferences, etc., and I would earnestly recommend that Bro. Hook meet Hill no more, as I feel that he is not a representative man.

We have a little congregation here, three and one-half miles southwest of Greenup, Ill., of thirteen members; Brother Hook baptized twelve of them and Brother Stephenson one. Our door strings hang out to passing brethren. We have never as yet taken THE RESTITUTION here. We have had some copies scattered among us by Brother Hook, which we read with care and delight, and will make arrangements to take it. We organized our congregation by electing one of our number an elder, one deacon and one clerk, who keeps a business record of our congregation. We take the Scriptures for our guide, believing all that the Scriptures teach and paying no attention to anything that they do not teach. I remain your brother as ever in the one hope, looking with delight to the soon coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Editor Restitution:

I left home July 22, for Newton, Jasper County, Ill., and met Bro. Geo. W. Rawlings waiting with a team to conduct me to his home, some 18 miles in the country. We began meeting the next evening in a grove, with good attendance, and had a very pleasant meeting. This was a new place, and the people were well pleased, and very glad to hear the gospel of the kingdom of God. So we continued to sow the seed of the kingdom. From there I went to Corinth church in Cumberland Co., Ill., where I held a discussion last March with a Christian Preacher, on the following propositions. Do the Scriptures teach that the Kingdom of God or of Christ is now set up? He affirming. Second. Do the Scriptures teach that man is unconscious between death and the resurrection? I affirming.

The house was built by the people ... Christians or ... ... before. And to all ap... will endeavor to prove from the Bible that there were no rain clouds prior to the flood or until the windows of heaven were opened and the rain was upon the earth. Gen. vii. 11, 12. "For the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, but there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground." Gen. ii. 5, 6. "And a river went out of Eden to water the garden." ev. 10. It is quite probable that the garden was irrigated from the river that went out of Eden to water it. We present this article to the Bible students hoping it may be a help to them in their endeavors to prove the authenticity of the Bible. Yours in the cheering hope of the soon coming Life Giver, when "they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, and mount up with wings as eagles, and run and not be weary, and walk and not faint." Editor Restitution:

The passage in dispute between Edward White and J. Cameron, see Sept. 1st issue of THE RESTITUTION, reads as follows, Isaiah (Hesaias) vi. 8–12, "And he said, go thy way and say unto this royal people, with hearing will ye hear and ye shall not understand, and looking will ye look and ye shall not see. For the heart of this royal people hath become blunted (waxed fat) and with their ears have they heard heavily (with difficulty), and they have shut their eyes lest at any time they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart (sensibilities) and should return and I should heal them." Truly "the word of God is a two-edged sword" to cut in two any such cavil as has been caused by the mistranslation and perversion of this passage. Very truly yours in the faith.

Pray On, God ...

I had just been writing a few short articles for our much prized paper, when a thought of its needs dashed across my mind, and a prayer was sent to the God of my life that he would grant that it still might be a messenger of mercy to us lonely pilgrims in this wicked world. I have been praying for God to bless and sustain it, and I am sure that there are others praying with me. Pray in faith, pray on, God will answer. His ears are open to hear our cry. He knows how much we need the paper to strengthen and build us up in the most holy faith and to send the truth of a coming kingdom and Savior to others. God bless our paper!

THE SILENCE OF POWER.

Those among our fellow-men who impress us with a sense of power and greatness are not the restless and noisy, the fussy and talkative and meddlesome, but those who move quietly in their own orbits with the least apparent effort, or echo, or collision. It is not when the engine is blowing off steam at the wharf, with a shriek which startles the town, that it is putting forth its real power. It is when you see it out upon the waves, moving at its quietest. Nor is the power, then, where the noise is greatest, in the paddle wheels or at the hissing prow. In order to find it you must go down to the engine-room, and peep into the great incandescent silence of the fires, and at the dark, cavernous boilers wherein the imprisoned steam is mutely putting its shoulder to the wheel.

Do not all great things belong to the Kingdom of Quiet? Are they not all born of Silence? You go forth at night and look upward and outward into the starred universe, and lowl this universal frame of things has gone up without noise, and it goes on without noise. "There is no speech, nor language; their voice cannot be heard." And yet they do speak to thought and feeling, declaring the glory of God. The stillness of those stars is more impressive than their sparkle. And the sun, which is the world's life, and the great driving-wheel of all its powers, makes no sound. And the moon,—never was step of maid, bearing her lamp through the corridors of a sleeping house, so muffled. The huge world ... fest rolls on its axis with ... an absolutely imper... deplore motion, and all over its surface a mysterious and irrepressible life is going forward whose growths make no appeal to our hearing. It has built itself up, stratum on stratum, and formation on formation, storing away its treasures of stone and iron and gold and fuel and fossil through countless millenniums of silence. There have been exceptional and abnormal stages which have been attended with jar and uproar, but these cataclysms have not been so truly great as the budding of a tree, or the shining of a single star.

Perhaps you are standing by the sea, whose shallows are sounding and resounding all along the beach; but you know that away out yonder where the depths are almost fathomless it is as still as the grave,—which so often it proves to ships and men. Those vast forests of gigantic trees, inland, have grown from seeds and saplings as lightly as the snowflakes which descend upon them, and the woods have known no noise, unless the breaking of a branch, the cry of a bird or beast, or the snapping of twigs under your puny step.

What are the motor-powers of this world of silent life? They are light and heat and electricity; they are gravity and cohesion and chemical attraction, even as the forces which sway and mould the higher realms of being are thought and feeling, intellectual affinity, moral conviction, and the Spirit of God. And all these are "still, small voices." And when the history of the universe shall reach its culminating moment, there shall be silence in heaven! Is it not, then, a fitting "ambition" to be quiet, that one may be in harmony and not in discord with this divine order of things, in this kingdom of the greatest and the best, while the "soul, like a quiet palmer," traveleth toward that supreme, still hour?—F. N. Zabriskie, D. D., in New York Observer.

OCTOBER.

The months have had wings, not feet, this year:
The beautiful summer has sped away,
And brown October has hurried here:
Oh, things were fair if they would but stay,
And if life were long
It were full of song.

Yet 'tis fair to look back to the primrose spring,
To the nightingale's lay and the cuckoo's call;
The promise is now a forgotten thing,
For the gifts foretold are bestowed on us all,
And the blossoms of May
Are the fruit of today.

We have had our summer of light and song,
And our fields and orchards filled with food;
If the days are shortened they have been long,
And God has covered the land with good.
O, give him praise
For the summer days!

And the beautiful things are not wholly gone!
Some roses there are on the generous trees,
The sun in its splendor still shines on,
Though some flowers are kissed to death by the breeze,
And the leaves in the town
Are faded and brown.

My life is like the October time!
The prodigal season is past and gone,
And over forever the wealth and prime
Of the long, glad day when high deeds were done,
And quiet and rest
Are fair now the best.

And I cannot afford to lose an hour
Of the shorter day that is left to me,
Nor ceaselessly fritter away the power
Of head or of hand, since there soon shall be
No moments here
Of my life's short year.

But I thank my God for that which has been,
Of strength and sunshine, of flower and song;
And I will not shrink from the wintry scene,
Though the days are short and the nights are long,
Let the shadows fall,
For this life is not all!

UNROLLING THE MUMMY OF RAMESES THE GREAT.

Rameses II., or Rameses the Great, was, probably, the Pharaoh of the oppression, not of the exodus, but of the oppression. In his youth he was a companion and foster-brother of Moses, and in his maturity he was perhaps the mightiest conqueror and the most brilliant ruler Egypt ever knew. He it is who seems to have been known in classic story as Sesostris. Three years ago the mummy of Rameses II. was discovered in an out-of-the-way hiding-place in Upper Egypt. And now that mummy has been unrolled by Professor Maspero, who is in ... Egyptian Museum ... formal report of that unrolling appears below, taken from Prof. Maspero's Official Report. It is a marvelous suggestion, that the visitor to the Boolaq Museum will now see looking out at him, through one of the glass cases there, the very face itself of the oppressor of the Israelites in the days of their bondage, the face at which Moses looked more than thirty centuries ago.—S. S. Times.

MM. Gaston Maspero, director-general of the excavations and antiquities of Egypt, Emil Brugsch Bey, keeper, and Urbin Bouriant, assistant keeper, of the Museum of Boulak, proceeded, in the hall called "The Hall of Royal Mummies," to unbandage those two mummies which, in the printed catalogue, are numbered 5,229 and 5,233, both being among those discovered in the subterraneous hiding-place at Dayr-el-Bahari.

The mummy (No. 5,233) first taken out from its glass case is that of Rameses II., Sesostris, as testified by the official entries bearing date the sixth and sixteenth years of the reign of the high-priest Herhor Se-Amen, and the high-priest Pinotem I., written in black ink upon the lid of the wooden mummy-case, and the further entry of the sixteenth year of the high-priest Pinotem I., written upon the outer winding-sheet of the mummy, over the region of the breast. The presence of this last inscription having been verified by his Highness the Khedive, and by the illustrious personages there assembled, the first wrapping was removed, and there were successively discovered a band of stuff (etc) twenty centimetres in width rolled round the body; then a second winding-sheet, sewn up and kept in place by narrow bands placed at some distance apart; then two thicknesses of small bandages; and then a piece of fine linen reaching from the head to the feet. A figure representing the Goddess Nut, one metre in length, is drawn upon this piece of linen, in red and white, as prescribed by the ritual. The profile of the goddess is unmistakably designed after the pure and delicate profile of Seti I., as he is known to us in the bas-relief sculpture of Thebes and Abydos. Under this amulet there was found another bandage; then a layer of pieces of linen folded in squares and spotted with the bituminous matter used by the embalmers. This last covering removed, Rameses II. appeared.

The head is long and small in proportion to the body. The top of the skull is quite bare. On the temples there are a few sparse hairs, but at the poll the hair is quite thick, forming smooth, straight locks about two inches in length. White at the time of death, they have been dyed a light yellow by the spices used in embalmment. The forehead is low and narrow; the brow-ridge is prominent; the eyebrows are thick and white; the eyes are small and close together; the nose is long, thin, hooked like the noses of the Bourbons. The temples are sunken; the cheekbones very prominent: the ears round, standing far out from the head, and pierced, like those of a woman, for the wearing of earrings. The jawbone is massive and strong; the chin very prominent; the mouth small but thick lipped. The teeth worn and very brittle, but white and well preserved. The mustache and beard are thin. They seem to have been kept shaven during life, but were probably allowed to grow during the king's last illness; or they may have grown after death. The hairs are white, like those of the head and eyebrows, but are harsh and bristly, and a tenth of an inch in length. The skin is of earthy brown splotched with black.

Finally, it may be said the face of the mummy gives a fair idea of the face of the living king. The expression is unintellectual, perhaps slightly animal; but, even under mummification, there is plainly to be seen an air of sovereign majesty, of resolve, and of pride. The rest of the body is as well preserved as the head; but, in consequence of the reduction of the tissues, its external aspect is less life-like. He was over six feet in height. The chest is broad; the shoulders are square; the arms are crossed upon the breast; the hands are small and dyed with henna. The legs and thighs are fleshless; the feet are long, slender, somewhat flat-soled, and dyed, like the hands, with henna. The corpse is that of an old man, but of a vigorous and robust old man.

We know, indeed, that Rameses II. reigned for sixty-seven years, and that he must have been nearly one hundred years old when he died.

The unbandaging of the mummy of Rameses II. took less than one-quarter of an hour. After a short pause of a few moments, at precisely ten minutes before ten o'clock, the mummy numbered 5,229 ... other mummy in a very dilapidated condition. As this sarcophagus bore the name of Nofretari, the wife of King Ahmes I. of the XVIIIth Dynasty, it had been taken for granted that No. 5,229 was the mummy of this queen. The other mummy was supposed to be that of some unknown princess who had been laid beside Nofretari by the priests employed to conceal the royal mummies in the hiding place at Dayr-el-Bahari. Consigned to the museum stores, the mummy decayed, and gave out so foul an odor that it became necessary to get rid of it. It was accordingly opened, and proved to have been bandaged very carefully; but the body was no sooner exposed to the outer air than it fell literally into a state of putrefaction, dissolving into black matter which gave out an insupportable smell. It was, however, ascertained to be the corpse of a woman of mature age and middle height, belonging to the white races of mankind. There were no traces of writing on the bandages, but a small strip of linen discovered in the sarcophagus No. 5,247 was decorated with a scene of adoration of King Rameses III. in the likeness of two forms of Ameo. A short legend, written partly in cursive hieroglyphs and partly in hieratic, states that the piece of linen thus decorated was the gift of the head laundress of the royal household, and it was accordingly supposed that the anonymous mummy was one of the many sisters, wives, or daughters of Rameses III.

The mummy No. 5,229 was very neatly wrapped in orange-colored linen, kept in place by small strips of ordinary linen. There was no outer inscription, but upon the head was a linen band covered with mystical figures.

M. Maspero here reminded His Highness the Khedive that Nofretari is represented upon certain monuments as of a black complexion, while upon others she is seen with a yellow skin, and with the soft hair of an Egyptian woman. Hence there have arisen innumerable discussions among Egyptologists, some affirming that the queen was a negress, while others maintain that the black tint of her face and body was a fiction originating with the priests. The worship of this queen was extremely popular at Thebes, where she was deified under one of the forms of Hathor, the black goddess, the goddess of death and of the shades. The opening of mummy No. 5,229, would, therefore, probably settle this historical question for good and all.

The orange-colored winding-sheet being removed, there appeared beneath it a white sheet bearing an inscription in four lines:—"The year XIII., the second month of Shomeu, the twenty-eighth day, the First Prophet of Amen, King of the Gods, Pinotem, son of the First Prophet of Amen, Piankhi, the Scribe of the temple Zoserou-Khonsu, and the Scribe of the Neseropolis Boutchamon, proceeded to restore the defunct King Ra-user-ma Mer-Amen and to establish him for Eternity."

The mummy, which had hitherto been taken for Nofretari, was then the mummy of Rameses III.; and the anonymous mummy was without doubt that of Nofretari.

This point being verified, Rameses III. was placed erect and photographed in his bandages. Short as was the delay, it seemed too long for the impatient spectators. The strange revelation, which had substituted one of the great conquerors of Egyptian history for the most venerated queen of the XVIII. Dynasty, had astonished and excited them to the uttermost. The unbandaging of the mummy then recommenced in the midst of general impatience.

All had left their places and crowded round the operators. Three thicknesses of cloth were rapidly unwound, then came a casing of sewn canvas covered with a thin coat of cement. This casing being cut with the scissors, more layers of linen appeared. The mummy seemed to diminish and reveal its forms under our fingers. Some of the writings were inscribed with legends and groups in black ink, notably the God Amen enthroned, with a line of hieroglyphs below, stating that this bandage was made and offered by a devotee of the period, or, perhaps, by a princess of the blood royal:—"The Lady Songstress of Amen Ra, King of the Gods, Taitaat-Maut, daughter of the First Prophet of Amen, Piankhi, in order that the God Amen should accord her life, health, and strength."

Two pectoral ornaments were laid in the folds of the wrappers, one of gilt wood, bearing the usual group of Isis and Nephtys adoring the sun; the other in pure gold, inscribed with ... name of ... tumult ... ures. At twenty minutes past ... His Highness the Khedive left the hall of mummies.

The work was resumed in the afternoon of the same day, and on Thursday morning, June 3, a fresh examination of the bandages revealed inscriptions upon two of them. The first is dated the year IX., the second the year X. of the high-priest Pinotem I. The tarry substance upon the face of mummy being carefully attacked with the scissors was detached little by little, and the features became visible. They are less well preserved than those of Rameses II., yet they can to a certain extent be identified with those of the portraits of the conqueror. The head and face are closely shaved, and show no trace of hair or beard. The forehead, without being lofty or very broad, is better proportioned and more intellectual than that of Rameses II. The brow-ridge is less prominent, the cheek-bones are less high, the nose is less hooked, the chin and jaw are less heavy. The eyes appear to be larger, but it is not possible to be certain of this last point, the eyelids having been removed, and the cavities of the eyeballs having been stuffed with rags. The ears are closer to the head than those of Rameses II., and they are pierced in like manner for the reception of earrings. The mouth is disproportionately wide, and the thin lips reveal a row of white and well-placed teeth. The first molar on the right side appears to have been broken, or to have been worn away earlier than the rest. In short, Rameses III. is like a smaller imitation of Rameses II. The physiognomy is more delicate, and above all, more intelligent; but the height of the body is less, the shoulders are less wide, and the strength of the man was inferior. What he was himself, in his individual person, as compared with Rameses II., so was his reign as compared with the reign of Rameses II. His wars were not fought in Syria or Ethiopia, but at the mouths of the Nile, and on the frontiers of Egypt. His buildings were of a poor style and hasty construction. His piety was as pompous as that of Rameses II., but his resources were more meagre. His vanity was, however, as boundless; and such was his supreme desire to copy in all things the example of his illustrious predecessor, that he gave to his sons the names of the sons of Rameses II., and almost in the same order of birth.

The two mummies, replaced in their glass cases, will henceforth be exhibited with their faces uncovered, like the mummies of the King Pinotem and the priest Nebseni.

IS THE EARTH A PLANE?

It is so claimed; and that it has "not moved a yard." A challenge for proof to the contrary is enforced by a generous offer, of my friend, H. A. Ubittenden. This answer is in love, and to aid in reaching the truth.

Now, to begin with, what is a plane? The answer is, "A plain surface, without elevations or depressions, even, level, flat." Webster.

But the earth has both elevations and depressions, from east to west, north to south; and therefore it is not a plane! So this proof lies in the primal facts of the case, independent of all irrelevant philosophy. It lies in the contradiction between the word "plane" and the world-wide facts, that falsify the whole theory based on it! A good Base should have a good foundation to begin with.

Again, a continent is a great extent of land not separated by water; one of the larger bodies of land on the globe; the main land; western continent, the main land of Europe as distinguished from England," etc. Webster. Now, as there are five or six such bodies of land separated by water, the earth cannot be "a plane!" A spoiled ham or egg is detected without eating it through! Thus, this philosophy against such facts must be a mistake!

Columbus' good sense, came from his confidence in the wisdom of The Creator. To him the Eastern Hemisphere demanded a Western Hemisphere; otherwise the world would wabble! By sailing west, he ascertained the fact, that justified his faith. The Western is as essential as the Eastern Hemisphere, to balance the earth in its wondrous orbit, holding its place always with sun, moon and stars!

Then to confirm this proof more in ... we have the loftiest and long... ranges near the shore of ... the broadest and deepest ... the two hemispheres do ... to im-mobility ... "the earth is a plane," ... is but confounded ... outcast.

... "the gulf stream" ... with its collateral proof, as the main cause of this stream lies in this form and condition of our globe, in association of course, with its tropical heat and northern cold.

Note. An immovable planisphere would be adapted rather to stagnation; and so out of harmony with the life, the activities and the general welfare of the world. It would be an exception and to a reflection on the Creator's wisdom and goodness.

The truth is given us in an eclipse of the moon, which daguerreotypes in double demonstration; that the earth and moon, are both alike orbicular, in motion! True, an attempted evasion of this lies in one puerile aspect of the moon as a flat surface; but it ignores the further facts that the surface of the moon changes its aspects, and are varied perhaps, like the hemispheres and continents of the earth. The truth, alethoia, is disclosure, and like Apocalypse in Greek, without subtlety, evasion or fraud.

The notion of sailing round the world on the outside of it as a plane with a one shore (unbounded) ocean, assumes the fallacy that oceans and rivers, ponds and puddles, need but one shore. Then you soup dish, bathtub and water-tank, would need but half of their present material or make up! But no: it is absolutely best to be undeceived. To this end, take this unmistakably decisive application of this profound and comprehensive theme. An insect moving around an apple, a horse moving round its racecourse, proves both curvature and motion." While on "a plane" the farther they go, the more distant they are from the goal, the starting point. Nay more, the greater danger of plunging off the edge of the imagined "plane" to nowhere! The theory is just as blind and oblivious to the primal fact that "a plane" must have limits. But General Grant traveled easterly and after a while every advance brought him nearer his goal, his starting point, his home. Hence, the earth has no edge, boundary or limits that belong to "a plane;" and this fact with tens of thousands like it, demonstrate that the earth cannot be "a plane" within the range of ten thousand times ten thousand possibilities!!!

Very much of detail must be omitted for want of space; but the chain longer allows that "the sun, moon and stars move around the North star" but claims that the earth has not "moved a yard."

Note. The earth's relations to the North star, are no more determinate than its other relations to the sun, moon and stars, therefore this movement of the sun, moon and stars is but the measure of the movement of the earth!! Hence, the earth's "motion" denied in the challenge, is of necessity, commensurate with that of the orbs of heaven!! It must then move mightily to maintain its march with the sun that makes its day; and the moon and stars that "rule its night."

We read "the legs of the lame are not equal;" so this "Zetetic philosophy" is not reasonable. There can't be reason in attempting to reduce Creation to disorder, by arguing the earth out of its place in the otherwise universal order! No, indeed.

There is no pretence of reason that sun, moon and stars have subsistence and stability; therefore the earth needs none; except God's good pleasure that embraces them all in one harmonious movement! This essential order gives us the seasons, seed time and harvest, to sustain the life of the world!

Hence a stroke against this order, (if effective) would involve the end of our world-wide life!! But no! Its untruth discloses its impotence, except to impose on human credulity!

Wonders and pretenders abound, inexplicable. But "order is God's first law!" "Only believe, all things are possible with God, to them who believe." His works and ways are equal, "consistent."

To close, our world is now, (in its degree, and yet to be altogether) a living world. The Creation of "The Living God, because the sun by day the moon and stars by night, are all in ceaseless motion, as if to constitute the machinery of Jehovah to sustain and employ both men and angels in this living system, allied to its living source, The Living God!

Note. The sun beam, the twinkling star and the scintillation of the dew drop, are instinct with the elements of life. Then, the shadows chase each other over valley and hill, from "early morn to dewy eve." the pulse of the child and the sap of the tree, all (above the tomb of the dead, about to end, Rev. xx. 14), express "motion." Nay more they are God's contra... to im-mobility ... issuing notion that the ... it rest, divorced so far (as it w... then he) from its sun, moon and hea... en.

This brief waives further argument, as the grand facts forestall all occasion for it.

Then, as there is no charm in this Zetetic philosophy, (except the subtlety that beguiled Eve) to represent the works of God "unequal," I rest the case. J. B. COOK.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Now the throne of David can only be occupied by one who is a descendant of Judah. It is to continue in a fallen down state through all "the times of the Gentiles," and the mitre or crown will not be restored till the coming of the rightful Heir. The restoration cannot take place so long as heaven retains Jesus. When he returns, after he has taken out of the Gentiles a people for his name, he will build again the tabernacle of David. The setting up again of David's throne is in connection with the restoration to the holy land of the children of Judah and the children of Israel who will then be united as one nation.

We may here remark that these statements of the Divine word are not fulfilled by any of the facts either of past or present history; and therefore, Dr. Wild's theory as unfolded in his book, "The Lost Ten Tribes," falls to the ground. It can never be proven that Queen Victoria is a descendant of Judah. It can never be proven that the throne of England is the throne of David. It can never be proven that the throne of David will ever be occupied till the Son of Man, David's rightful heir, comes at his second advent. It can never be proven that the present scattered state of the Jewish nation answers in any sense to the predicted gathering which is to take place at the re-establishment of the Davidic throne.

Those who are inhabitants of the kingdom, who indeed are heirs of the kingdom, will be specially prepared for it. All will be made pure in heart, and of a great multitude it may be said, that their graces will be matured. And those who have struggled against temptation and have overcome, who have fought the good fight,—battled with their enemies and conquered,—shall share the highest honors of the kingdom, and have given to them authority and rule.

The phrase, heirs of the kingdom, or inheriting the kingdom, includes authority, rulership, sharing in the government. Not less than this would be denoted by this phraseology if used in regard to an earthly kingdom, and can we suppose that such phraseology when found in Scripture must have some foreign or unnatural meaning put upon it? However great or astounding the thought, the Word plainly teaches, that the saints shall judge the world. They will be civil rulers. The numerous nations of the earth besides the Jewish nation, will need political rule. This rulership will belong to Christ and his co-heirs.

In this respect, in the future age, the glorified saints will have an honor that angels will not have. They will be raised to a dignity, that of ruling the world with Christ, in which angels will not share. "For not unto angels did he subject the world to come, whereof we speak," Heb. ii. 5. The word world here means the inhabited earth. This rendering is given in the margin of the Revised Version.

But further: not only does the Word teach that the judgment of the world will be committed to the saints, but also the judgment of angels. Paul says, giving the whole passage which embraces the two things, "Or know ye not that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world is judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more, things that pertain to this life?" I Cor. vi 2, 3. Now it is as if the apostle had said, If the saints are to be co-heirs and co-rulers with the Christ in the kingdom; if kingly power is delegated to them, and their rulership extends to the angels, in the sense that they are joint-rulers with the Supreme King, whose regal authority is over all the angelic multitudes, are they not suitable in this present time for the government of matters of ordinary or common interest? In advocating this view, G. N. H. Peters says, "That our position is not an extreme one is evident from the supremacy of Jesus Christ over all angels, in which supremacy the saints by virtue of joint-heirship participate."

There will be different ranks among those who inherit the kingdom. ... ous stations will ... accord... authority, and with... commendation on matters of interest and importance, between the people and the great King.

What a blessed thought, what a ravishing thought is the great dignity that Christ will bestow upon us who believe in him, upon us who are living in this dispensation. When he comes to take the kingdom of the world and make it his own, he does not come alone. We are to come with him, having been previously caught up into his presence. We shall be his attendants. We are to share the glory of his kingdom. We are to reign with him. We shall be eternally safe under his protection, and eternally happy in his love and his smile.

Every real Christian, who is an heir to the kingdom, and is to reign with Christ, should on this very account, realize and manifest deep interest in this subject. That any should not, seems almost astounding, and indeed can only be accounted for on the ground of very defective, and life-long, teaching. We can hardly conceive of persons who are heirs to earthly thrones, or even to earthly estates, who would pass through their minority without many weighty and pressing thoughts of interest and anxiety not only regarding the time when they should become actual possessors of those thrones or estates, but in respect to their character and extent and value. How strange then it seems that any believers should regard themselves as heirs to the kingdom of God, and yet should not give themselves to the study of its nature, its character, its laws, its extent, and its design.

And to those who are seeking the kingdom of God, we would say, Be not content with simply entering the kingdom, but strive to have an abundant entrance. Covet not only a position among the rulers, but covet a high position, for thus you will do the greatest honor to the King. Not only do good works, but abound therein, and do them from a pure motive; then will they be rewarded. "Look to yourselves, that ye lose not the things which we have wrought, but that ye receive a full reward," 2 John viii. "Hold fast that which thou hast, that no one take thy crown," Rev. iii. 11.

The subjects of the kingdom, those who are under the rule of the Christ and the glorified church, will be the inhabitants of the earth. The heirs, or inheritors of the kingdom, will not be the subjects of the kingdom. Their position will be vastly higher and more exalted. As Dr. Maitland remarks, "If the saints expect a kingdom, and reign, they are not themselves the subjects of that kingdom." "Undoubtedly, men and angels—all created beings are, and ever must be, subjects of the ever blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, in the sense of inferiority and subjection, to sovereign and infinite power." But while this will remain true, Christ will share with them the reign of his Millennial Kingdom, while its proper subjects will be the peoples of the earth. Thus "all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God," Isa. lii. 10. And this Messianic age, or kingdom, will be the porch or entrance to the endless state, to the reign which shall continue unto the age, of ages.

THERE'S ONLY ONE.

"Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee." Psal. lxxiii. 25.

There's only One to whom dear arm
We safely lay our thought is real!
There's only One who knows the depth
Of sorrow in each stricken breast.

There's only One whose pity falls
Like dew upon the wounded heart;
There's only One who never stirs,
Though enemy and friend depart.

There's only One, when none are by,
To wipe away the falling tear;
There's only One to heal the wound,
And stay the weak one's timid fear.

There's only One who understands
And enters into all we feel;
There's only One who views each spring,
And each perplexing wheel in wheel.

There's only One who can support,
And who sufficient grace can give
To bear up under every grief,
And spotless in this world to live.

O blessed Jesus, Friend of friends!
Come, hide us 'neath thy shelt'ring arm;
And while amid this evil world,
Keep us from all its guilt and harm.

Thou art the One, the only One,
For whom no love too warm can flow:
Thou art the One, the only One,
In whom there's perfect rest below.

Editor Restitution:

I send you the enclosed intensely interesting, and I suppose quite reliable, account of the tremendous preparations of the great nations for war. The picture is one to quicken and startle even the enlightened Christian. The old prophets (in a figure,) will be ready to turn in their graves, if they can get a half-moment's glimpse of the fulfilment of their own words in the appalling and awful grandeur of the spectacle here presented. When chambers have been excavated with great labor in the solid rock, and filled with the restless dynamite, it only remains to apply the electric spark. So now in Europe, only the incendiary spark is wanting to fire the train. And though we may not know precisely when the conflagration will come, we may at least be entirely ready.

O. COLNUROVE.

of inquiry, it is Mr. Sweeny's habit to exhaust it as far as time and opportunity will enable him so to do. Contact with official and well informed persons, an easy reference to public documents and other literature of equal authority, have made Mr. Sweeny a particularly well informed man on the present condition of Europe, and he was kind enough to give to a reporter of the Herald a summary of his summer's reflections.

"European affairs," said Mr. Sweeny, "furnish too comprehensive and exciting a topic for an interview, but I can probably, with the assistance of some data which I have put in one of my notebooks—one of which I generally carry in my pocket—give you an idea of what I have seen and heard in relation to Europe."

"If it would not be troubling you too much, Mr. Sweeny, the Herald would like to know your views as to the final issue of peace or war in connection with the events which are happening in Europe."

This question put Mr. Sweeny on his legs, mentally and physically. Rising from his chair and walking to and fro the length of the room, as though the floor had been the deck of the vessel he had so recently left, he began—

"The next war in Europe, come when it may, and it may begin any hour, will be of a destructive violence unknown up to this day. Every source of revenue has been strained, if not drained, for the martial effect. It would be idle to say that the world has not yet seen the like, because never before has it had such destructive warlike means. Europe is a great military camp. The chief Powers are armed to the teeth. It is the combination of general effort. It is not for parade or amusement. Enormous armies in the highest condition of discipline and armed to perfection, leaving, as their muskets or bridle in hand, or waiting in camp and field for the signal to march against each other. A war in Europe settles only one thing definitely, and that is the necessity for another war. The approaching war may do more—it may settle those who are chiefly engaged in it. The ambition of kings and emperors may thus lead in the end to their own overthrow and open the way for popular progress.

"The nineteen Powers of Europe are divided, diplomatically, into four classes. In the first class, of course, are the great Powers, six in number—Russia, Germany, Austria-Hungary, England, France and Italy. Among the second class Spain and Turkey, Belgium and Holland, rank with the third class, and in the fourth are such countries as Greece, Switzerland and Denmark. The great Powers are the masters, who alone have anything to say in deciding international questions. The little ones don't count, and Belgium and Holland and the Balkan provinces, for examples, are allowed to exist on the map, so far as the great monarchs are concerned, only until they are wanted, to be thrown into the scale to establish some new equilibrium.

"Each of the great Powers has either lost something which it wishes to regain, become possessed of something which don't belong to it, but which it means to hold on to, or is seeking something to which it is not entitled. Those nations have not advanced much in the principles which control their action from the barbarous times, when might made right. Wordsworth's lines are still true:—

> That they should rule who have the power
> And they should keep who can.

"The savage, ruthless spirit of Russia was recently shown in a new form in the kidnapping of Prince Alexander, the lawful sovereign of Bulgaria, at midnight, in the palace of the capital of his country, by Muscovite emissaries, and his deportation as a prisoner to Russia, because he was not sufficiently submissive to His Imperious Highness the Emperor. He would have been kept a prisoner in the good old style in Russia but for the personal and energetic intervention of the Emperor William of Germany. The peace of Europe now depends on the capricious, erratic action of the present Czar of all the Russias, who feels the necessity of doing something on a grand scale to divert his people, and who is consumed by boundless ambition and an overwhelming estimate of his power. Russia, as represented by this inexperienced, unrestrained and [illegible] allows no treaty [illegible] diplomacy [illegible] opposition [illegible]. It may negotiate, in an insolent way, but it don't stop. It goes on with its aggressive work as if nothing had happened. Look at her recent contemptuous treatment of England in regard to Batoum.

"The claim of England as a first class Power is very generally questioned in influential circles. Her inability to compete with the Continental Powers in marching armies, the determination of the tories to throttle Ireland, which will give them as much as they can do, and her recognized diplomatic method of bluster and back out, all conspire to lower her crest. The Cologne Gazette said the other day:—'But who speaks nowadays on such questions of England. The people of Europe are now agreed that England need not be taken into higher political account than Holland.'

"The triple alliance by which Germany and Austria have been able to hold back Russia, chiefly through the efforts of the Emperor William, has thus far preserved the peace of Europe. But the good old peacemaker is in his ninetieth year and cannot linger much longer on the scene. Bismark, too, has exerted his unequalled skill to keep the armed belligerents apart. But he, too, may pass away soon. He is old and tired and frequently overcome by disease. When either he or his master shall go it will be the breaking up of the deep in European politics, and an overwhelming tide of destruction, whether for war or revolution, will roll over the Continent.

"It is said that large standing armies are guarantees of peace; this may be so for a time, but not in the long run for armed inactivity on such an enormous scale involves too many sacrifices, and the heavy burdens will inevitably force action. The long run has nearly run its course. Russia continues its preparations on the borders of Afghanistan for the inevitable struggle with England for India. And there is unquestionably a very undisguised feeling of hostility in Russia, especially in the army, against Germany.

"It was only a few weeks ago that no less a person than General Ignatieff, who negotiated the Treaty of Constantinople, which led to the Congress of Berlin, in an interview published in a Croatian paper, denounced Germany for her ingratitude to Russia. The neutrality of Russia, he said, had given valuable help to the Germans in their wars with Austria and France, but Germany had repaid her with duplicity and secret hostility. Bismark, he declared, was a more dangerous man in every way to Russia than Napoleon I. was, and the Russians must be prepared for war with Germany, which was inevitable. He said when the war began Germany would be between two fires, for to France all parties are eager for revenge, 'and so are we.' The Germans apparently recuperate this hostile feeling, and the fire is kept up in both countries through the press. An effort has been made to form an alliance between France and Russia, but Bismark has thus far frustrated the design. But that the league will be made is beyond question. It is a significant fact that Russia gives to France the [illegible] of all her war material outside of her own country. There are now being constructed, near Toulon, ten men-of-war for Russia at an expense of 50,000,000f. It will be noticed that the Czar was not a direct party to the recent meeting of the Emperors at Gastein. He evidently prefers to maintain a disengaged position of menace. The forced abdication of Prince Alexander of Bulgaria, is due to the determination of Bismark to assent to anything demanded by the Czar in his present attempts to prevent the French alliance, but no one can foretell what dangerous complications may arise from this.

"Segur says, 'Peace is the dream of the wise, but war is the history of mankind.' Now, let us glance for a moment at the extent of the martial preparations existing in Europe, and it should be remembered in this connection that Bismark has recently said in justification of Germany's activity, 'We are at war now,' meaning, of course, in the feeling which surrounds the questions, but which has not yet resulted in blows. The law of the 2nd of May, 1874, gives, in effect, to Germany the power in case of war to call for six millions of various classes of soldiers, and by the decrees of the 1st of January, 1874, Russia can call for a fabulous number to rally around her standard—over ten millions—but this would be an imperfect and excessive estimate. Germany, in case of [illegible] can dispose of 3,870,000 men [illegible] Russia 2,500,000 [illegible] and Austria [illegible] about 1,500,000, with large [illegible] qualities. Italy can place in the field an equal number with the last named. France can place in the field, in thirty days, an army of two millions of men thoroughly equipped, ready to fight, and knowing how to fight, and she is regarded as having, at this time, the best artillery armament of any Power in Europe. This was the point, it will be remembered, in which she was specially weak in the late war. What enormous preparations for a gigantic combat! It is a spectacle which arrests with the deepest interest the attention of the world."

"You have referred, Mr. Sweeny," said the reporter, "to the power of England on the land, but on the sea her supremacy cannot be disputed?"

"Near at hand as a brush may be with our old, unchangeable enemy of the Revolution, of the War of 1812, and of our own struggle for national existence—when she did her level best to sustain the Confederates and to break us down in our great peril—it is well to know what we will have to meet in the fight, because the battles will be fought on the sea by means of naval warfare, and all the engineers of maritime war would be arrayed against us. But until we are able to meet an enemy on something like equal terms we are in no condition to dispute anything that may be done against us. Until we can make our words good we had better submit to indignation and aggression in silence. How could we meet England in a quarrel. We really have no means of defence against such an enemy, to say nothing of attack. An army may be improvised, but a navy takes time. Ships must be built, experiences consulted and models studied, machinery constructed and, enormous cost on the largest scale. Then, too, maritime warfare needs special education. England today is the most powerful nation in the world on the high seas. She possesses twenty turret ships completed and six more in progress, with a total displacement of 129,000 tons, varying from 3,000 to 12,000 tons and in speed from ten to fifteen knots per hour.

"The Colossus and the Conqueror are each armed with breech-loading rifled guns, the former having four twelve-inch forty-four ton guns, and four others of five tons each. The Inflexible carries eight twenty pounder breech-loaders. The Agamemnon and Hotspur each two breech-loaders of eighty-one hundred weight, and the Rupert two of eighty-nine hundred weight. Six turret ships in progress will have an average displacement of 10,000 tons each. The armament of these vessels is designed to be entirely of breech-loaders, ranging in size from 110 ton guns in the Sans parsell, supplemented by others of smaller calibre to forty-five tons in the Edinburgh and the others. Three barbette ships, ranging from a little over 7,000 tons to a little over 9,000 tons, are completed, and six others are in progress. The latter will carry breech-loaders and two of the former are provided with them. There is a long list of broadside ships—twenty-nine in number—but no more of this class are in progress, the present direction of activity seeking chiefly devoted toward the construction of armed cruisers, of which seven, each of 5,000 tons, are returned completed or building. There are also many unprotected cruisers—torpedo cruisers and torpedo gunboats are still only in progress—but the torpedo boats are returned, all of them carrying Nordenfeld guns in addition to their special equipment. This does not take into account the remains of the older order of things—it is almost entirely a new navy on the best lines in every respect and the most formidable we upon known to science.

"Her insular position and extent of coast line to defend, the vast dimensions of her empire, the fact that she needs food from abroad, and the greatness of her maritime commerce—more than fifty per cent of the tonnage of the world sails the British flag—all combine to make it a matter of self-preservation that she should have a naval armament superior to that of any possible adversary. She is well provided in this respect. France ranks next to England as a maritime power."

Literary Curiosities.

A COINCIDENCE.

Pilate, when Jesus was brought before him, asked: "What is truth?" It is very singular that, if we translate this question into the original language in which it was asked (Latin), we can give the answer by simply transposing the letters. The question, "What is truth?" is in Latin Quid est veritas? The answer, [illegible] out of just the same letters, [illegible] est qui adest. It is the [illegible] present. It seemed to me [illegible] is well worth knowing [illegible] give it, with the remark, [illegible] been answer was given in [illegible] than the above.—J. R.

"HERE THEY ALL ARE."

Two negatives in English [illegible] each other, and are equivalent to an affirmative; but not so in Greek. In that language the negation is strengthened, and a third negative makes it stronger still, and so does a fourth, and a fifth. How strong must five negatives be! But do five occur? Yes!—In the Greek of the New Testament; and connected with one of the "exceeding great and precious promises" which are there given us. It occurs in Heb. xiii. 5:—"for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Only two of them are translated; but there they all are, as any one may see who reads Greek.

There must have been design in thus multiplying these negatives. I do not believe it was accidental. God meant to be believed. He would secure the confidence of his children in that particular. He knew how prone we are to doubt his constancy, and how liable we are to the dread of being forsaken by him; and he would therefore, with the humble, trembling Christian, make assurance more doubly sure; so instead of saying simply, "I will not leave thee," which alone would have been enough, he adds, "nor forsake thee;" and instead of leaving it thus, "I will not forsake thee," he uses language equivalent to the following: "I will not, I will not leave thee; I will never, never forsake thee."

—BY J. P. WESTHEAD.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research—covering a period of more than forty years. Involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand is in the present age, in shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, gaiety, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the creative power of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who upholds and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth, price $1.00. Send to this office for this work.

Kingdom and the Restoration.

Or, A Scriptural View of the Second Coming of Christ, with the Wonderful Signs that will Precede It, and the still more Wonderful Things that will follow it.

—BY SILAS HENN.—

NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS:

The book is truthful, reverent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Standard.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and careful reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a concept ful mind, and deserves careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Certainly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Lyceum Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry.....The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a wealthy, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

By careful readers of the Word it will be seen that no dispute was raised between the apostles and the Jews as to the nature of the kingdom; on that they appeared to be one. The great matter in dispute was whether Jesus was the very person who was foretold by their prophets should come. They were looking for the Messiah. They were looking for a King, a Deliverer, who should free them from the Roman yoke, and restore to them the kingdom; but through blindness and hardness of heart, they failed to see that Jesus was King, and that the kingdom was then nigh to them; so through their unbelief they caused a long delay in the restoration of the kingdom.

This doctrine, so clearly taught by Christ and his disciples, was also taught as might be expected, by the Primitive Church. "The Millennial kingdom of Christ," says Dr. Bennett, "was the general doctrine of the Primitive Church from the times of the apostles to the Council of Nice, inclusively." Another writer declares it "a universal belief among the Christians of the first centuries." By another writer, Hase, who is believed to be remarkably correct in his historical statements it is pronounced "the great faith article of the Primitive Church." In referring to what was most prominently taught by the early Christians, Hagenbach says, "The doctrine of the Messianic kingdom ruled the first period. This turned upon the point that the Lord was twice to come: once in his manifestation in the flesh, and in his future coming in [illegible] under says [illegible] or of the New [illegible] to perceive that such an expectation filled the souls of the apostles." The idea they had was, as he further states, a new, heavenly, eternal order of things which would commence at the Second Advent." Pressense, though holding the modern view, admits, in his "Early Years of Christianity," that in the second century, the Millennarian doctrine became widely diffused. Referring to the thousand years' reign, Stackhouse says, "It cannot be denied, indeed, but that this doctrine has its antiquity, and was once the general opinion of all Orthodox Christians." Dr. West says that "a true Christian Chiliasm was the orthodox faith of the Primitive Church in its purest days." In the second century the millennial doctrine was considered so thoroughly Scriptural, that according to Semisch, it was held up by Justin Martyr "as a criterion of perfect orthodoxy." Indeed, Justin himself, referring to the Millennial doctrine, declares "that it was the general faith of all orthodox Christians." Speaking of the Millennium which Justin preached and defended, Donaldson says, "The opinion just adduced is one in which the whole church shared."

Ignatius, Clement of Rome, and Polycarp were evidently believers in the Millennium. Very little of what they wrote has come down to us, and because in the little that has been preserved nothing is found asserting or defending the Millennial doctrine, it is unfairly concluded that they did not hold it. But let it be remembered that nothing is found that is against it. Then, further, some expressions and phrases are found which are in perfect harmony with that belief, and which believers in the doctrine are accustomed to use. Let it be observed further also, that when others of the Fathers speak of this being "the general faith of all orthodox Christians," they must have embraced those Fathers in the latter term.

The views now so common regarding the kingdom, or the Millennium, as it is often called, and which are preached as Scriptural, cannot be confirmed by a single quotation from the fathers of the first and second centuries. This is a fact of great significance. It is true that Caius and Dionysius, as well as Origen, in the third century, opposed the Millennial doctrine. And Shedd, in his history, speaks of it as "a peculiarity of the Jewish Christian, as distinguished from the Gentile Christian Church." Quotations, however, might be given from the most eminent historians to show the inaccuracy of this statement. Believing Gentiles as well as Jews accepted the doctrine,—fathers as well as members of the Church.

If the belief of the early churches on this subject, which was universal, is not accepted as the Scriptural teaching, it reflects greatly on the apostles' teaching. Such a belief could not have been so widely spread except as the result of their teaching, and if inspired, they must have taught the mind of the Spirit. We can easily understand how some, through adverse influences, may have imbibed views on some doctrines contrary to apostolic instruction; but it is incredible to suppose that all the early Christians, Gentiles as well as Jews, would imbibe views on the nature of the kingdom contrary to that instruction. The belief being universal among all who were regarded as holding the true faith, the only legitimate inference is, that they had grounded it on the teaching of the apostles and the plain teaching of the Scriptures. If the first churches every where held that faith, they must have received it from the first teachers. If the views of a spiritual kingdom now so generally taught are the true views, the early Christian church was all in darkness on this subject, though blessed with the light of the first inspired teachers; but if the early church had the truth, if the light it received from the apostles and first disciples was not darkness, the church of the later times has gone far astray from primitive Christianity.

Common sense would suggest that there was far more reason to call in question the Scripturalness of a doctrine of taught [illegible] Many Christian [illegible] desire to defend the modern notion of the kingdom, and throw discredit on the primitive view, degrade the inspiration and authority of the sacred writers. Pressense thinks that Paul held certain views on this subject when he wrote the first epistle to the Thessalonians, and modified them before he wrote his epistle to the Philippians.

Sceptics take advantage of the position held by Christian writers to assail Christianity. They take some of their strong arguments from the admissions and concessions of Christian writers. The latter having adopted a spiritualising system, find the plain grammatical sense of Scripture so often to stand in their way, that they not only put a foreign meaning upon much of the language, but some passages they reject as Jewish ideas. Unbelievers argue, and logically that if the first teachers of Christianity taught error in one thing, they might have done so in another. Admit this, and where are we? We are at sea, and know not whither we are drifting. Admit this, and where is our standard of appeal in matters of disputed doctrine? We have no standard upon which we can rely. We have no sure foundation upon which we can stand. If Paul taught doctrine in his first Epistle to the Thessalonians which needed modification before he addressed his epistle to the Philippians, what certainty have we that he did not afterwards teach doctrine which also needed modification? Many Christian teachers, who no doubt take pride upon being thought, and spoken of as advanced thinkers, do make this admission in reference to the apostles' views of the kingdom, and numbers of infidel writers use this as a weapon against Christianity. Is it any wonder that the faith of so many in the churches of the present day, is shaken? Is it any wonder that infidelity spreads, and gains so many new disciples? Let Christian apologists beware how they furnish infidels with weapons to use against themselves and the religion they advocate.

Report of the Third Annual Meeting of the Association for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge.

On Friday evening, Sept. 17, at 8 o'clock members of the above mentioned Association began to gather in the "Household of Faith" Church, Wilmington, Del. The officers and members of this church had previously offered the use of their commodious building to us, for the purpose of holding our Third Annual Meeting. And well it was for our members that the offer was accepted, for it would be difficult to find a more pleasant place, or kinder hearts and hands than are to be met with in the dear brethren and sisters in Wilmington. To say we had a feast of love is but feebly to express our glorious experience. Never, while memory lasts, will the devoted kindness of the brethren and sisters there be forgotten. But to proceed with a report of meetings. At the above date and hour, our gathering together was committed to the care of our kind Heavenly Father in prayer, after which our President Geo. W. Young, in a few well chosen words, gave a welcome to visiting members and brethren, and mentioned the objects for which we had banded ourselves together, to be the promulgation of the glad tidings of a soon coming Christ, when he shall reign on earth as the undisputed King of kings, and Lord of lords. All nations at that time to be blessed by the righteous government of Christ and his immortalized and glorified Church. The charter of the Association also calls for it to speak in unmistakable terms concerning the present mortality of all men, and that eternal life only be obtained [illegible] of unending life, when [illegible] consciousness, and piled [illegible] testimony from the [illegible] God, that if men desire immortality they must seek it by a patient continuance in well doing, prompted by a genuine faith in the redemptive work of the Lord Jesus, who will, when he comes again the second time, bestow upon all those who look for him, a blessed immortality.

Man by nature alone is a perishing, mortal creature, and excepting through the acceptance of the gift of God, which is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord, we have no hope of a future unending experience. The goodness of God, in thus offering deliverance from death, was the basis of an eloquent appeal to the hearers to rejoicingly accept in faith the precious gift of immortality.

On Saturday eve, Sept. 18th, at 7:30 o'clock, an essay entitled "The Divine Punishment for Sin," was read by the author, Bro. Jas. G. Gellatly, of Baltimore, Md. He successfully proved from Scripture that death was the "wages of sin," and that the doctrine of eternal existence in misery as the punishment for sin, is contrary both to the character and word of God. This was to have been followed by an address by Bro. H. V. Reed, of Chicago, Ill. But through unavoidable causes he was unable to attend, although it was his and our most earnest expectation and hope up to the very last moment. Bro. Dr. Walter R. Way, of Winchester, Va., was called upon to enter the gap, and he moved his audience by an able and sincere appeal to stand firm for God's Word, and to accept no teaching of men, no matter how learned or famed, unless it was confirmed in the promises of God, and teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ. He dwelt largely upon the importance of Christians not only contending for pure doctrine, but also pure every-day living, having the "golden rule" as our principle, and the Spirit of the Lord as our guide; these united to preaching the glorious truths for which this Association labored, would compel men to give heed to the message of God, which has been placed in our charge.

On Sunday morning, Sept. 19th, Bro. Alfred Graham, Pastor Church of the Second Advent, Philadelphia, addressed the meeting on the subject of "The Unity of the Spirit." He endeavored to show that while we should all labor to learn and accept the teachings of the Holy Scripture, we would grieve the Holy Spirit of God if we by harshness and severity drew lines for others, who had not yet reached certain doctrinal understandings, even though they by a consistent Christian walk gave evidence of being followers of the Redeemer. He called attention to the importance of conceding that there are "babes in Christ," as well as those who by long continuance of investigation had grown to be men in understanding, and that true unity of the Spirit, consisted therefore not so much in a complete agreement concerning teaching, but an acknowledgment of brotherhood, with all who are honestly trusting in the grace of God, and through meekness and the Spirit of the Master, are growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. At the close of the discourse, we partook of the bread and wine, in commemoration of the sufferings of Christ. His body broken, and his blood poured out for us. This service was the most impressive service which the writer ever witnessed. About one hundred partook of the emblems, each one grateful to God for the privilege.

On Sunday afternoon Bro. J. B. Keim, addressed us on "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined," Psa. l. 2. He called attention to the revelation of God, as given to Israel under the law, in the divine services and royalty of the house of David, and pointed out the fact of [illegible] being types of the future and glory of Christ. This was [illegible] a short address by John [illegible] those texts was "Creation." [illegible] Rev. viii. 10, 33. Creation [illegible] subjected to two conditions, [illegible] hope. Vanity, frailty and [illegible] holding earth and all creation in a bondage. But God [illegible] goodness had not only placed his [illegible] under subjection to temporary [illegible] and corruption, but had also implanted the instinct in all to hope for a time when only the good would remain and the evil be blotted out forever. The speaker referred to the hope as revealed in the gospel concerning the second appearing of the Son of God in power and glory, his saints being made immortal like their Lord, and judging the world with him, blessing the nations, conjointly with Christ as the seed of Abraham, as a result of which the "creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God." At this service we expected Bro. J. H. Pettingill, A. M., to participate, but he was prevented by severe illness, very much to our regret and disappointment.

In the evening we were treated to a splendid exposition of Scripture on the subject, "The Divine Attribute of Love." The speaker was Bro. Samuel Wilson, and he appeared to be filled with the spirit of his topic. Love he declared to be the motive of God in sending Christ to a rebellious race, and it was love that prompted Jesus to do good to men, and finally to suffer the cruelty of the cross on their account. It was love that brought the Redeemer from the tomb and glorified him as High Priest over the house of God. It was love that moved Jehovah to plan the second coming of his blessed Son to take charge of the earth and its affairs, and to establish his righteous government over men. He contrasted some erroneous teachings of men, with the Apostle John's declaration "God is Love" and man's littleness with God's goodness and greatness.

As a fitting close of our series of meetings our President Geo. W. Young in a few well chosen remarks, thanked the officers and members of the Church for their many kindnesses to visiting members of the Association, and expressed the hope that we all would be found faithful when the Lord came to gather together his ransomed ones, and that we all should participate in the glories of that kingdom of which we had heard so much during our meetings. At the conclusion of our President's remarks, a burden of thanksgiving was offered to Our Heavenly Father for the success of our coming together, and a prayer for his continued guidance.

We found it difficult to part from one another. Many were the tears shed, as hand was clasped in hand, but "Good Bye" (God be with you) had to be said. May that day soon come when we shall meet to part no more forever.

At our business meeting the following officers were elected for the ensuing year, Geo. W. Young, President; Marshall S. Driggs, Vice President; John Donaldson, Secretary; J. C. Barnaby, Assistant Secretary; Samuel Wilson, Treasurer. The Treasurer reported, that during the past year, he had received with balance at last report $620.11. Expenditures during same time $434 31. Balance on hand $185.80. The Secretary reported a membership of 327, an increase of 83 during the past year. These members reside in various places from Maine to California, and from Canada to Florida. We have printed 28,800 papers and tracts during the year containing 294,400 pages of reading, and during the same time have distributed 37,642 books, pamphlets, papers, etc., containing 327,132 pages of reading matter, besides a large number by other publishers. This literature is furnished to all members of the Association to the full amount of their subscriptions if they so desire. Workers in the cause of Christ are also supplied free upon application. The officers of the Association receive no pay for their labors. Every cent contributed is faithfully expended in distributing the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. This glorious work is well worthy of the attention of the brethren everywhere. One dollar a year will constitute any one a member. This may be paid at the rate of 25 [illegible] every three months [illegible] join our ranks and help spread abroad the glad tidings of Christ as our Life Giver, and Coming King. ### "If Jesus Leads Me There."

"If Jesus leads me there!" we were singing the words last Sunday, with all the earnestness of devoted hearts, and as the sweet chorus was repeated over and over, this thought caught my attention and seemed impressed on my heart more than all the rest of the hymn. Yes:

"All hail reproach and scorne,
If Jesus leads me there!"

The reproach and sorrow that comes not from the leading of Jesus, I want none of that. I can bear to have my name cast out as evil for his sake, but when I get away from him, into paths where he has forbidden me to go, the grief and shame are not welcome things. I cannot hail them with joy because I am not thus suffering for his sake, but only because of my own wilfulness and sin.

There is a good deal of reproach and sorrow and of persecution that comes upon us, only because we are out of the way; out of the way in our manner of living and out of the way in our manner of instructing the ignorant as to the truth of the gospel. There must be better, holier living, deeper experience, richer faith, if we want the crown. We must be courteous in teaching, meek in presenting the truth, and more in earnest.

"Come let us know
Our journey's period,
Roll round with the year
And never stand still,
Till the Master appear."

DOUMAN DISCUSSED.

HERETODOXY AT ANDOVER.

BOSTON, Oct. 10.—The doctrinal dispute which agitated the meeting of the American Board at Des Moines last week has already led to proceedings which will at once bring the questions involved to a decisive issue before the denomination at large. Three prominent Congregationalists, two of them retired pastors, have brought charges of heresy against five of the Professors of the Andover Theological Seminary. The matter will come up for hearing before the Board of Visitors two weeks hence, and from them will doubtless be appealed to the Supreme Court. Half the trust funds of the institution are conditioned upon the doctrinal views of the Professors, and the Supreme Court will be asked to pass upon the question whether these conditions have been complied with.

The accused professors are charged with believing and teaching a second probation. The form in which the matter is before the American Board is whether it is heresy to believe that heathen who die without hearing the gospel have another chance for salvation instead of going straight to hell. The old school say their doom is sealed. The Andover new departure is charged with giving them another chance after death. According to the old Andover creed, which the conditions of the trust fund require must be strictly maintained, the modern and more liberal doctrine is wholly unsound.

The Professors are required to appear before the Board of Visitors once in five years and read and reaffirm their belief in the old creed. This they have done thus far. A prominent member of the Board of Trustees, who appoint the professors, subject to the approval of the Board of Visitors, said tonight that the issue might as well be met and settled publicly and finally. He regarded the action of the three complainants as simple persecution, but he thought the time had come for the seminary and the denomination at large to come to some understanding regarding the disputed dogma, and if a division must come nothing could be gained by longer postponing it. [illegible] declined to name [illegible] they had written.

The whole subject is the [illegible] ligious question of the hour [illegible] and New England. Nothing has excited such interest within the past quarter of a century. In this city a large majority of the members of the denomination sympathize with the new departure. The only old school pastor in the city is the Rev. Dr. Withrow of Park street, who took a prominent part in the Des Moines Convention.—N. Y. Sun.

"AFTER DEATH, WHAT?"

The convention of the Congregational Commissioners of the American Board of Foreign Missions, now in session at Des Moines, and the general council of that religious body at Chicago at a later date, promise to be the occasions of lively discussions of matters of doctrine or dogma affecting the welfare of that church. The great question is as to the teaching of the modern or Andover school of Congregationalists in regard to the condition of the souls of the dead. First, to establish whether there is an intermediate state; and second, to determine what is the condition of souls in this state. When the teaching of the church on these points is settled, the next question is the vital one at issue, whether in this intermediate state there is opportunity for repentance and salvation of souls which have not yet been brought to a belief in Christ. This latter teaching is that of the Andover school, and it has arisen largely within the last few years.

The teaching is set forth as that of certain Andover professors. It is, however, merely a restatement of the doctrines held by Dorner, the celebrated German theologian, and by him taken from the teachings of some of the fathers of the church, elaborated into a positive statement of what was suggested but never taught. The connection of this subject with that of missions will be at once seen, as the missionaries of the church, the new theology claims, should be able to tell the unbelieving heathen whether they are to be certainly damned if they do not in this life repent and believe, or whether there remains to them a chance after death of which they may avail themselves to make their peace with the God against whom they have unrepentingly and perhaps unknowingly sinned. The leader of the present movement in the Congregational Church in support of the new theory is Egbert C. Smyth, Professor of sacred theology in Andover Theological Seminary, and with him agree most of the Andover professors and a large proportion of the Congregational clergy of New England. In the light of the new doctrine the teaching of the missionaries must be very much modified. They are now sent forth among theologians of the Buddhist and other heathen schools, who are very acute in their examination of Christianity, and who demand a certain declaration on a point of so great importance.

Are the millions of heathen who have died without the knowledge of a Savior, and without the sacrament of baptism—heathen who are found in civilized countries as well as in the ends of the earth which have not been fully reached by the light of Christianity—are these millions to perish, or is there still opportunity beyond the grave for their salvation? This is the question which agitates the opponents of the Andover school, and which will, no doubt, receive a thorough discussion at both of these conventions. This life, in the Presbyterian creed, is the sole period of probation for those who are within the reach of instruction, but room is left for possible mercy to those who have not enjoyed the privileges of the gospel. Concerning the limits of that possibility, orthodox preachers may not agree.

The old Presbyterian school had no doubts on the subject, and taught straightly that there was no help for the unbaptized child or the unconverted heathen who died in his sin. This doctrine is boldly followed out by the [illegible] form of the early theology which made purgatory out of the paradise of the earlier teaching, and added various doctrines to that which either prevail to the present day or have lapsed into innocuous desuetude. These teachers go much further than Dorner, and say that not only is there salvation for the wicked after death, but that this salvation can be helped by the prayers of the faithful on earth and the remembrance of mass offered up by the priest for them.

The Episcopal Church has still a different teaching on the subject. It does not solve the question, but while claiming that it is the positive duty of all to be baptized, acknowledges there is no warrant for believing that all who die unbaptized and unbelievers will be lost. This school says that the mercies of God are so wonderful that it is quite possible that there is some provision made for those who die in this state, but it teaches nothing in regard to it except that there is an intermediate state after death and before the judgment, in which the souls of both good and bad await the end of all things and the final resurrection. So far it agrees with the Andover school.

But that school goes still further and asserts the necessity of repentance after death and subsequent atonement. Professor Newman Smith, who first brought to the American public this teaching of Dorner, is certainly a long way from the teachings of Jonathan Edwards, as well as from what he calls "the visionary forms of the Scottish theology," and he agrees the reaction of the New England school to "enlarging culture, and increasing acquaintance with the Anglican theology and more particularly with the development of modern German theology." That his brother has taken the teachings of Dorner still further is apparent from the rapid advance that the new theology has made at the school of Andover.

This statement will help readers to understand what the discussion as to "future probation" at Des Moines and Chicago really means. The time has not arrived when unquestioned agreement on a question which has been discussed for ages can be expected in a denomination so little bound by authority as the Congregationalists.—Utica Morning Herald.

SOME long articles, especially those continued through several numbers, will have to be deferred till after the November meeting.

THE elements seem to be in a strangely unbalanced state. We have not room to detail the sad calamities that have happened both in Europe and our own country within two weeks past. For a few items see News Column.

In this and the following number we shall give an account of the remarkable conver[illegible] experience and conversion we reprint, was, while living, a minister of the word of life. Let no one fail to read the interesting narrative of his conversion. We also reprint two letters from the same periodical—one from Australia, and the other from Persia. See also the private correspondence from Jerusalem sent to a friend in Chicago, who forwards it for publication in THE RESTITUTION, as well as an interesting article from the Christian Herald, entitled, "Has the Restoration of Israel Commenced?" The long exiled tribes have commenced returning, and their Messiah and the Christ's Redeemer is soon coming. How important it is that THE RESTITUTION should be sustained! We have only just become acquainted with the wealth of information on some of the most important matters pertaining to this time of the end. The Editor can not make bricks without straw," i. e., he can not always work without compensation.

TO OUR PATRONS.

As the time is drawing near for the annual meeting of the Stockholders composing the Christian Publishing Association, and as the present Editor of THE RESTITUTION has signified, through the paper, his design of retiring from this responsible position after having made up the number for Nov. 10, it may not be amiss to explain more fully why this course seems to have become imperatively necessary on his part; more especially, since some brethren and sisters in the faith, both through the paper and by private letters, have expressed their regrets on account of this decision. One reason for this determination has already been given, namely, our age. Having passed the 77th mile stone in the journey of life, it not only seems desirable, but especially necessary to retire from responsibilities, from its very nature, imposes of heavy and at times anxious on both the physical and mental powers. It must be borne in mind that a weight that rests comparatively lightly upon the shoulders of robust manhood becomes a burden of insupportable pressure upon the declining strength of age. Our times demand that the strong and vigorous should be peopled for the conflict at this crisis in human history. In that fateful night, when the palatial residences of princely royalty, and the abodes of wealthy magnificence were going up in flame and smoke, and the sword of the brass-mailed Greek was filling the highways and by-ways of ancient Troy with countless multitudes of its slain defenders, it was no time for old Priam to gird on the armor of the stalwart hero."

Those times of sack and carnage demanded the unflinching nerve and the unpalsied arm. Some other reasons for the contemplated retirement may also be in place, in giving which, we will explain our past and present connection with our much loved paper. Ten years ago, nearly, when we undertook the responsible charge of Editing THE RESTITUTION, in addition to some other responsibilities connected with its publication, quite an indebtedness had accrued against the Association. As this Association was composed of numbers of good benevolent brethren and sisters, who had subscribed and paid in their money to disseminate what they believed to be the truth, without expecting any return whatever for this outlay, we did not feel like deserting them in the hour of trial, and leave them to get out of the dilemma as best they could. Accordingly, though but poorly qualified for the position, we consented to assume the responsible place of Editing THE RESTITUTION, in addition to the charge of being treasurer and keeping the accounts of all receipts and disbursements, for one year without any reward whatever except the consciousness of trying to do some good in promoting the interests of the cause that we had at heart. For this first year's work the brethren made over to us some stock, but hardly an equivalent for each we had paid in. After one year the Association commenced paying for Editorial services at the rate of $200 per year, which was continued on through 1881, when the salary was raised to $240 a year. With this small remuneration we were satisfied, as, with strict economy, we could get along with this amount in addition to some other small resources. It has never been our design to accumulate money from any work done for our dear Lord, or for his people, either in our ministry [illegible] any other way that we might [illegible] in the vineyard. [illegible] publication [illegible] not to re[illegible] brethren, who have sacrificed so much for the cause in the free gift of what they subscribed as stock and as subsequent donations. Several of those dear brethren have fallen asleep. We have attended the funerals of some, and seen the grave closed over the caskets that inclosed the sainted dead. Now to the dear brethren who patronize and read our paper we say,—that we never will consent to have the deficiency behind in our salary, accessed, as a debt, against our brethren of the Association. We can get along for the present without the amount stipulated as due us, and for the future we can trust the Lord who has never left nor forsaken his people. Now with regard to the future also we will say, that although we should be exceedingly glad to be entirely released from all Editorial responsibility at the coming meeting, we will not prove recreant to the cause by deserting our brethren now, should they continue to need such help as we can render for a little while longer. If some one younger can be found to take our place, we will assist till all gets to running smoothly in new hands. If a change of this kind can not at once be made we will go on, if desired, till it can be effected. As to the matter of compensation we shall leave this out of the question, trusting in the Lord. We are all bound to acquaint in the soon-coming judgment. "The mighty God, even the Lord hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Ps. l, 1, 4, 5. In view of this judgment we desire to do our part in doing or sacrificing for his cause. From many of our dear brethren and sisters we have received what is more precious than silver or gold—the words of loving sympathy and kind appreciation. Many of these we never expect to see in this world, but hope to meet them in God's Paradise. Paul said of those with whom he could not meet:—"What is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" We shall know each other there. A little more and we have done for this time. For this passing year, so far, our ministry and our Editorial duties have not left us one day for recreation, nor have we lost any time by indisposition except two days at the time of the Argos meeting in September. We have loved THE RESTITUTION, and have worked for its success by day and by night, and have poured out our tearful prayers for its welfare. If our Heavenly Father should so ordain we will continue to work a little while longer, though our sun of life is now low in the west. If Jesus should not soon come our head must repose ere long upon the clay pillow. Should the brethren fill our place with some one better calculated to edit THE RESTITUTION this may be our valedictory. Circumstances seem to make it necessary for us to write as we now write. And now, dear brethren, let us all try to hold up the hands of those who are trying to continue THE RESTITUTION. Let each subscriber try to pay fully and promptly for the coming year, and if we can do something more by sending it to friends, or otherwise by direct relief, let us do this. Let us not neglect to plan and contrive to see, between this and the Annual Meeting, what we can do for the paper next year. We have written what we have with some hesitation, lest we should seem to boast. Then it seemed necessary that all our brethren should correctly know our precise connection with the paper and we submit this in love. The paper may not be needed much longer. Christ, with all his holy angels, will soon come and gather the bridal church of the first-born-ones to the pavilion in the shekinah clouds of God's glory. The crowns will be in his hands. It will be sweet then to know that all our labor in the Lord has not been in vain. And then in the beautiful beyond—in the sweet restitution—how transporting it will be to walk along the banks of the pellucid river of life, beneath the tree of life in its magnificence of everlasting bloom, and beneath the uninterrmitting fruitage of those groves that grow only in the Paradise of God. O, as it is now only a little while—such a little while—till Jesus will come again, let us labor on, let us sacrifice on, and when he comes he will say "Well done; enter into the joy of thy Lord."

"Non tali auxilio, nec defensoribus istis, Tempus eget."—Baird B. H. 321.

Communications.

[illegible] Editor Restitution:

Let me once more through the dear RESTITUTION give notice of my travels to the scattered ones. I just returned from a trip that I made to Missouri, near Poppleville in Butler Co., where our old brother, John Willis, lives. It was a new field and some strange things happened while there. Began my meeting on Saturday night before the fourth Sunday in September, to continue until the following Thursday. We had a good attendance of all denominations. One rich old Methodist, who hardly would attend their own meetings, was there a good part of the time and was well pleased, both he and his wife. On Sunday I attended their Sunday-School. But Sunday Schools, if not conducted right, are a nuisance, and I found out that that was one of them. I never was at a place where the young men misbehaved as badly as they did there. As to some of the peculiar things there: there was a doctor in the neighborhood who wanted to control the house and stop the meeting. The reason was that the doctor's wife got interested and wanted me to baptize her. But Satan prevailed and she had to stay at home; at least she quit attending the meetings. One lady, a United Baptist, got dissatisfied with her former faith and baptism. Wednesday evening we announced that on Thursday at eleven o'clock we would preach at the Sheepskin school house, on the Heirship: what we had to believe and do in order to be made an heir of God and joint heir of Jesus Christ.

At the appointed time the house was filled and we preached from Gal. III, 16. At the close of the meeting we went to the river, a bright stream, some three miles distant. It seemed to me more like going to a burying than a baptism, because of the long line of teams and some on horseback. We landed at the water, and instead of immersing one I there immersed seven souls into the Christ of the Bible; the oldest one was about 58 and the youngest about 30, all heads of families. It was a time long to be remembered. To return to the last night of our meeting, it was reported that the doctor would close the school house as he had tried it for several days, he being one of the board. He had told some of the folks if I did not leave he would have me arrested. But Thursday night came and the school house was still open as the doctor was the only man there that wanted it closed, and he only wanted to show his authority. To say the least it was a time long to be remembered. Our meeting closed by singing,

We are going home, no more to roam,
No more to sin and sorrow.

Brother Willis and the friends remembered the wants of those that labor in word and doctrine, knowing that the iron horse must be fed and those who ride on them must be fed. On Friday morning I bid Brother Willis' family farewell, and in company with him started for Rich Hill, where I mounted Nahum's Chariots for Nevada, Mo. There I staid all night with my son and his wife. While there, in company with my daughter in-law and another lady, I visited the asylum, the buildings of which, when completed, will cover nearly six acres of ground. It was a sight to see. From there I went to Sulphur Springs and got a drink out of the heating springs of Nevada.

Saturday morning I left for Fort Scott to begin a meeting at the Lathbranch school house. When I landed at Fort Scott, Brother E. B. Vermillion was there ready to convey me to his house about six miles distant. On Saturday night we met at Lathbranch school house. There I met Sisters Chapman and McDonald, but our old Brother McDonald was not there any more. He has fallen asleep at his 85th year. He lived till he was 72 years old before he was satisfied to be baptized. He learned the truth partly from Brother Brokner. Brother McDonald told me that he never could believe the doctrine of the sects; that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and eternal suffering was too horrible for him to believe. But our old brother lived a consistent Christian life after he became a Christian, some ten or fifteen years. But in a good old age he has fallen asleep, leaving his old companion, wife, and daughter Mary to mourn his loss. The brethren also mourn with them. But we mourn not as those who have no hope.

We had a good meeting, speaking only twice, as they had a Sunday School Convention at the school house on Sunday. I had the pleasure of talking at that convention, subject, "The Living Bible." Closed our meeting with the best of feelings and left them with the promise to [illegible] when convenient, or opportune [illegible] afford. May the good [illegible] efforts that we have [illegible] will make, the Lord [illegible] God bless all the brethren [illegible] there be a general waking [illegible] the brethren, and all go [illegible] the time is short to do our [illegible] the Master comes. Amen.

Youth's Colu[illegible]

"All the Year Long."

All the year long have my steps been attended
Surely by one who regarded my ways;
Tenderly watched over, sweetly befriended,
Blessings have followed my nights and my days.
Tears have been quenched in the sunshine of gladness,
Anthems of sorrow been turned into song,
Angels have guarded the gateways of sadness,
Summer and winter-eyes, all the year long.

All in the dark would I be, and uncertain
Whither to go, but for One at my side
Who from the future removes the dim curtain,
Bearing the glory to mortals denied.
No other friend could so patiently lead me,
No other friend prove so faithful and strong.
With angels' food he has promised to feed me,
Who has befriended me all the year long.

He will not weary—Oh, eternal assurance!
Infinite love will the limits outlast!
But for my Heavenly Father's endurance,
Into the depths of despair I were cast.
This is my star in a midnight of sorrow,
This is my refuge, my strength, and my song.
Faith is today but there's heaven for to-morrow,
And Jesus to be with me all my life long.

The King's Son.

There was once a King's son, who heard that the people in one of the King's countries a long way off, used to be afraid of the King, and used to say that the King did not care for them. So he thought to himself, "I will go and teach them better!" But he said, "If I go with my fine robes and crown, they will say, 'What do you know about a poor man's life? You do not know what it is to be cold and hungry.' I will put off my royal dress, and I will wear clothes like the poor people, and live and eat as they do." So he changed his clothes, and left his palace, and went to that distant country, and there he lived among the poor, leading a harder life than any of them. And yet, though he was often hungry and cold, and sometimes did not know where to find a night's lodging, he never complained, and never broke the laws.

After he had lived in that country for some time, he went back to the King at home. It happened that soon afterwards the people of the country sent messengers to the King to complain that the laws were too hard. The King's son then said to the messengers: "Believe me, the laws are all for the best, and the King loves you as though you were his own children."

"Ah," said the messengers, "but you do not understand our way of life, how poor and miserable we are, and how hard it is to live."

"You are wrong," said the Prince; "I understand your life quite well, for I lived myself as a poor man among you for a long time. I know you have to suffer a good deal; every one of your troubles is known to me, for I have suffered the same things. Yet still I assure you that the latter is very kind of you, and will make you perfectly happy in the end."

Then the people knew that they heard that the King's son had lived among them, and knew all about their troubles, began to be more hopeful, for they said: "He knows what it is to suffer, and he will surely help us."

The King's son is Jesus, who is the Son of God the Father. Jesus was, as we are, tempted to do wrong. He knew what it was to be poor and hungry and homeless—he felt the bitterness of death. More than this, he knew what it was to be persecuted by enemies and to be misunderstood and deserted by his dearest friends. Do not fancy that when you have your little trials and troubles that Jesus knows nothing about them and cannot understand them. Jesus was a child as you are, and he has never forgotten that he was a child. You may tell him of your troubles—he will understand and sympathize with them all.

Dear Children:

I once read a beautiful story about a worthy handmaid of the Lord, the meaning of whose name is "merciful." She was beloved by her husband and everything he could do to minister to her wants, it was his delight to accomplish. He used to give yearly gifts to his household, but his love was so strong toward the merciful one, that he gave her a double portion. She keenly appreciated his affection, but there was something she longed for, something which her strong affections as nature pined for, and could not be satisfied until she had obtained it. For, her home was no joyous little step hastening to greet her kind husband, when he returned weary with toil, no voice of glee sounding about after a patient "[illegible] look, father is coming!" [illegible] in the morning, to [illegible] Of-

[illegible] humility. With her [illegible] grief, she prayed. [illegible] with fervent desire a sol[illegible] that if the Lord would give [illegible] a little boy, she would yield him up to the Lord all the days of his life. Her prayer was not loud; her lips moved, but her voice was not heard; only her heart spoke. O, what touching prayer! It could not fail to catch the listening ear of our heavenly Father who has promised to reward such an one openly. The High Priest who ministered in the Temple, thought she was drunk; but she said, "no my lord, I am not drunk, but a woman of a sorrowful spirit, and have poured out my soul before the Lord." There was not the least selfishness in her petition. She asked for nothing from the Lord but what she with joy had determined to give back. Her devoted mind had yielded him up to the Lord while asking, and according to her faith so it was granted her, even as it is written "The Lord remembered her." And when the sweet little boy was born, she named him, "One asked of God," for this is the meaning of his name. O how she must have loved this gift from the Lord! Every time she gazed upon his dear face her joyous heart would no doubt sing, "I am nursing a little one for the Lord." Such a thought would make her cling to him with a fonder affection, especially as it was the result of earnest prayer. But she loved him not for herself, but for the Lord's. She would not go up to worship the Lord as was their custom once a year, until she could carry the sweet young child, which she did when she had weaned him, and presented him to the Lord as a free will offering, saying: I have returned him whom I have obtained by petition to Jehovah. Such a blessed mother could not only pour out in silent prayer the bitterness of her soul, but in sweet melody she could also sing for joy of heart, the Lord having put a new song in her mouth, even praise and thanksgiving. We have no history that the child ever came home again, but his loving mother never forgot him, and once every year she brought him a little coat. I can imagine how rejoiced she must have been to see her little boy girded with a linen Ephod, resembling the High Priest of the Lord, and at the time he was thus ministering, he did not know the Lord, neither was the Word of the Lord revealed to him. In the kind sympathy of his sweet childhood he was in the Temple, hearing, and no doubt asking questions, which service Jesus declared was his Father's business. This child of promise came when there was no open vision, which made the Word of the Lord precious, when the eyes of the High Priest were so dim that he could not see, and concerning him it was the Lord that said he would take an end, given, just before the Lamp of God went out in the temple, where the Ark of God was, and where the Lord declared the iniquity of his priest's house should not be purged with sacrifice, nor offering forever. How necessary it was that a faithful prophet should be raised up, to whom the Lord could reveal himself by his Word. Such an one was this little boy, who when his daily [illegible] was soon into rest. But his sweet slumber was broken by the sound of a voice which he thought was that of the High Priest. He not only replied, "Here am I," but his willing feet [illegible] ran to answer the call. Each time the voice spake his attentive ear caught the sound, but on account of his extreme youth he had to be instructed how to answer, and it is written, he did not let any of the words of the Lord fall to the ground, and although it was painful no doubt for one so young to tell the aged High Priest what the Lord had said concerning his household, yet he kept nothing back. Surely such an one was fit to be a door keeper in the house of the Lord. May the Lord reveal his blessed Word to you, as he did to this dear boy.

Your affectionate Teacher.

GALVESTON, Oct. 16—Further particulars of the great disaster at Sabine Pass and Johnson Bayou are constantly being received. The situation has not been exaggerated in the least. A correspondent who has just returned from Sabine Pass telegraphs that the turkey buzzards are soaring over Sabine for miles around on land and water. It is one vast charnel-house. The town is swept out of existance. What was a prosperous village when last Tuesday dawned, is now the center of wreck and desolation. There are 127 persons missing and supposed to be [illegible] and Walter McClanahan are the only ones that can be repaired. Every other house is an absolute wreck. This, in brief, is the story of the storm. No tongue can tell how the people have suffered during the past few days. In many cases the dead ones are considered the lucky ones.

Later reports from Johnson's bayou bring the terrible intelligence that eighty-five persons are now known to have been lost in that settlement; it is greatly feared that the list will be swelled to one hundred or more, thus making the total number of victims by the hurricane fully two hundred. Reliable information from Johnson's Bayou arrives slow, all the roads being impassable and only two boats are running to that section. The destitution of the survivors, of whom there are over 1,000 around Johnson's and Redford village, is described as something awful. They lost everything, and are without food, drink and clothes.

Russia has declared the recent Bulgarian elections illegal, and has demanded a postponement of the meeting of the Sobranje, to which rebellious Bulgaria has replied that she intends to go right ahead with the election of a Prince. Evidently the point has been nearly reached where Russia will have to let the Bulgarians have their own way or use force to prevent them.

HAS THE RESTORATION OF ISRAEL COMMENCED?

Hear the Word of the Lord by his holy prophets—"And it shall come to pass, that as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah, and house of Israel; so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing; fear not, but let your hands be strong. For thus saith the Lord of hosts; As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked Me to wrath, saith the Lord of hosts, and I repented not. So again have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem and to the house of Judah; fear ye not." Zech. viii. 13–15.

"For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you unto your own land," Ezek. xxxvi. 24.

"And I will bring again the captivity of My people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God," Amos ix. 15–15.

"And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob My servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children forever." Ezek. xxxvii. 25.

An American now resident in Jerusalem, in recent letters to this country, states: "There are wonderful improvements going on in this land and in this city. Splendid buildings are being erected and a general and increasing interest is manifested everywhere. I believe that no other city in the world has so much improved during the past five years.... I am told that thirty years ago there were not ten Jews in Jerusalem. The man who gave me this information said that his father was one of the first who came. It is only about nine years since Jews have been coming back in any considerable numbers.... There are twenty-one thousand Jews in Jerusalem alone, and one hundred thousand in all Palestine.

Never before, since the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion of the Jews by the Roman army under Titus, has there been such a [illegible] of the covenant people to their land—"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," Luke xxi. 14. So said Jesus! Are we nearing the end? Think on these things!

Earthquakes.

It is estimated that not less than thirteen million people have lost their lives as the result of earthquakes. Among the most destructive earthquakes on record, the following are conspicuous: In 1531 thirty thousand lives were lost at Lisbon, Portugal. In 1828 seventy thousand were killed at Naples. In 1703 two hundred thousand were killed in Yeddo, Japan. In 1731 one hundred thousand perished in China. In 1746 there were eighteen thousand victims in Lima and Callao, Peru. In 1755 forty thousand perished in Reschan, Persia. In 1797 forty thousand persons were buried in Mexico. In 1868 twenty-five thousand persons were killed in Peru and Ecuador. In the Krakatoa earthquake in Java, one hundred thousand persons were reported killed. These are [illegible] the fearful destruction [illegible] ught by this [illegible] ve agent. The United States has been comparatively free from any great destruction from this death-dealing force. The recent disaster at Charleston is the most appalling of any in the history of our country, as far as our research has been able to observe. The only security in the face of such possibly sudden peril is salvation. He who is in Christ is eternally secure though the heavens may be "rolled together as a scroll," and though the earth may quake beneath and even "pass away with a great noise."—Wesleyan Methodist.

Announcement.

The First Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Indiana, will be held at Plymouth, Ind., commencing Friday, Nov. 12, 1886, and continue over the following Sunday. Brethren, this is your meeting. The friends in Plymouth can entertain all who will come, and are anxious to see a good number present. Let us have a representation from every church in the State, and let the brethren who are isolated come to this meeting and join in the feast of good things the Lord has provided us. At the Annual Meeting in September a good start was made toward better organization; but much remains to be done. Let every organized church meet now, and appoint delegates. Section 8 of the Constitution adopted at that meeting says:

Each church shall be entitled to one vote at all meetings of the Conference for every ten members, and one for every fraction of six, said votes to be cast by the delegates of the several churches. Each organized church, no matter how small the number, shall be entitled to one vote.

Brethren this is the Lord's work entrusted to your hands. If you are organized appoint delegates to represent you, and if not yet organized get in order at once; shake off the fatal lethargy that is settling down upon us, and let us do with a will the work before us, for surely "the night cometh."

HARVEST.

With tireless hand and tearful eye,
I watched the Spring-time fleeting by;
I saw the snow-drop at its birth
Veiled, by sprays of rain, to earth;

The violet burst its emerald sheath,
And threw the amethyst beneath;
The painted tulip fade and close
Before the glory of the rose.

And soon, down fields of sunburnt grass,
I saw the withering rose-leaves pass,
And night by night, and day by day,
The life of Summer ebbs away.

I see the granaries overflow,
The mellowing orchards bending low;
Oh, God, my heart in awe and fear
Looks back upon thy perfect year!

Thy bounty covers all the lands;
I lift in prayer my empty hands;
Of all the Summer of my life
My harvest is but sin and strife.

Oh could these tears, like April rain,
Make moist my heart's hard soil again,
And stir the seeds which thou didst sow,
Oh never should they cease to flow!

Could prayer but melt this ice away,
Never, never would I cease to pray,
Till thou in mercy, Lord, didst bring
Into my soul a second Spring.
Oh give that rich reward and sweet;
I'll lay its harvest at thy feet!

JEWISH WITNESSES THAT JESUS IS THE CHRIST.

Having been favored by God with pious parents, their great care was to impress my mind from childhood with a profound reverence for God and the Holy Scriptures. I was taught to repeat the morning and evening prayers with great solemnity; and on the feast days my attention was particularly drawn to the impressive confession in our Liturgy, "It is because of our sins we are driven away from our land," etc. On the Day of Atonement I used to see my devout parents weep when they repeated the pathetic confession that follows the enumeration of the sacrifices that were to be offered up for the sins of omission and commission; and many a time I shed sympathetic tears as I joined them in saying, that we have now no temple, no high priest, no altar, and no sacrifices. As I advanced in years and understanding, my religious impressions became stronger; fear and trembling often took hold upon me; and what was then my refuge,—what [illegible] asking lips. This satisfied my mind [illegible] time; but the satisfaction arose from ignorance of the character of God as a holy and a just Being, and of my own state as a guilty sinner, whose prayers, proceeding from unclean lips, could not be accepted as a sweet savor by the thrice holy Lord God of Sabaoth.

I continued in this state of mind until I was about sixteen years of age. During this period of my life I often spent three sleepless nights in a week, studying the Talmud and other Hebrew works. I also committed to memory several chapters of the prophets every week, in order that I might become sufficiently familiar with the Hebrew language to correspond in it. At this period I became acquainted with a Jew, who had studied several years at the University of Berlin, and consequently had become acquainted with the Gentile literature. He strongly advised me to give up the study of the Talmud, and devote myself to the study of German and secular literature. After a hard struggle of mind, I resolved to follow his advice, and accordingly went to ———. Here there was not only a change in the character of my studies, but an entire change in my habits and mode of life. Many things that I formerly regarded as essential parts of my religion were considered by my fellow-students old fashioned, quite unfit for the enlightened.

At first my conscience was much disturbed, and I was often very unhappy; but, after a time, these feelings were off; I conformed to the manners of my fellow-students, and I also "lived like a Christian," as the Jews in those parts are wont to say of such of their brethren as have no fear of God before their eyes.

I formed the acquaintance of many young Gentiles; and this I could now do with impunity, as they nor I troubled ourselves about each other's religion; neither of us, in reality, having any, although they called themselves Christians, and I was a Jew. The only thing that reminded me what people I belonged to, was the look of contempt that I received now and then from Christians; and the little children in the streets calling after me, "Jew, Jew." Then, indeed, I realized that I belonged to the people who have become a proverb and a by-word among the Gentiles.

I well remember the first time I ever heard of one of my brethren becoming a convert to Christianity. It was a young Jew who was apprenticed to a tradesman in the town where I studied. My idea of Jewish converts to Christianity was, that they renounced their national privileges and obligations; that they separated themselves from the covenant God made with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and publicly joined themselves to the ungodly Gentiles, who live without God and without hope in the world. Although at this time I had laid aside many of the outward observances of the Jewish religion, I had still a strong attachment to the fundamental doctrines of the Jewish faith, because I believed them to be of divine origin. The idea of any Jew becoming a Christian, therefore, seemed to me a dreadful apostasy; and I regarded the youth above mentioned with mingled pity and contempt, as one who had forsaken God and given up all hope of eternal life.

I pass over in silence several years of my life, which were devoted to the world and the things of the world; during which time I kept up such a measure of conformity to the customs of my religion as I considered respectable and consistent; but my early convictions and impressions were faded and forgotten, and I belonged to that class whom the Psalmist designates "men of the world, which have their portion in this life."

In process of time the Lord laid his afflicting hand upon me. The death of my beloved mother, whose tenderness to me I remember to this day with the deepest gratitude and affection, was a heavy stroke to me, and plunged me into the utmost grief. I was then visited with sickness, and my conscience became much disturbed. What I then endured can only be expressed in the language of the sixth Psalm. I solemnly vowed to become very religious. I resolved to fast one day in every week, to repeat many prayers, and show kindness and charity to the poor. But this could not pacify my guilty conscience, as the study of German literature had weakened my confidence in religious observances,—had driven me from my own religion and given me nothing in its place. One day I was in acute distress of mind, feeling, as David expresses it, that I had sunk "in deep mire where there is no standing." That all my own efforts to free myself were of no avail, my struggles [illegible]

[illegible] reproach thee, for I am guilty; help, help me, for the sake of my father Abraham, who was willing to offer up his son Isaac, have mercy upon me and impute his righteousness unto me." But there was no answer from God,—no peace to my wounded spirit. I felt as if God had forsaken me; as if the Lord had cast me off forever, and would be favorable no more. I fully understood the words of the Psalmist, "Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of my head; therefore my heart faileth me." Psa. xl. 12; and I felt that all my devotional exercises were what the prophet Isaiah was instructed to declare the sacrifices and offerings of the Jews in his days to be, —vain oblations, an abomination in the sight of God.

I was far from my home and relatives; and my gay companions, seeing I was depressed in spirits, though ignorant of the real cause of this depression, earnestly urged me to frequent the theatres, and other public amusements, to cheer my mind. At first this partially succeeded; but the merciful kindness of God left me not thus to my own devices, but graciously interposed, and again roused me to seek after more solid happiness.

God, in his tender mercy, had again disturbed and disquieted my conscience so much that I fully realized the words of the Psalmist, "I am troubled, I am bowed down greatly, I go mourning all the day long, for my loins are filled with a loathsome disease, and there is no soundness in my flesh. I am feeble and sore broken; I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart." Psa. xxxviii. 6–8. I had no peace nor rest; but wherever I went, or however I was employed, I carried about with me a sense of misery that was intolerable. I could say with Job, "The arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poison whereof drinketh up my spirit." Job vi. 4.

One morning I went to purchase an article in a shop, little knowing that God had there stored up for me the "pearl of great price," which he was about to give me "without money and without price." The article I purchased was wrapped up in a leaf of the Bible, which contained a portion of the Sermon on the Mount. The shopkeeper was, probably, an infidel, who thought the Bible merely waste paper, and therefore turned the evil for good. As I was walking home my eyes glanced on the words: "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." This arrested my attention, and I read the whole passage with deep interest.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit, for their's is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled. Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for their's is the kingdom of heaven." Matt. v. 3–10.

I was much struck with the sentiments contained in this passage, and felt very desirous to see the book of which it was a portion; I had no idea of what book it was, never having seen a New Testament. A few days after, God directed my footsteps to the house of an acquaintance, on whose table lay a copy of the New Testament. Impelled by curiosity I took it up, and, in turning over the leaves, I beheld the very passage that had interested me so much. I immediately borrowed it, and began to read it with great avidity. At first I felt quite bewildered, and was so shocked by the constant recurrence of the name of Jesus, that I repeatedly cast the book away. At length I determined to read it through. When I came to the twenty-third chapter of Matthew, I was astonished at the full disclosure of the nature of Pharisaism contained in it; and Christ's lamentation over Jerusalem in the concluding part: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" affected me even to tears. In reading the account of the crucifixion, the meekness and love of Jesus of Nazareth astonished me; and the cruel hatred manifested against him by the priests and rulers in Israel, excited within me a feeling of compassion for him and [illegible] tion against his [illegible]

[illegible] and Nicodemus [illegible] chapter, riveted my [illegible] by this time to a great measure of sympathize with Nicodemus in his opening address to Jesus: "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest except God be with him." John iii. 2. And I was as much astonished as Nicodemus himself at the saying of Jesus: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." vs. 3. If he had told me to fast, to give alms, to go morning and evening to the synagogue, to repeat the prayers twice or three times a day, and then I should see the kingdom of God, I could have understood it; but when told of a new birth, I was ready to exclaim with Nicodemus, "How can these things be?" Christ's explanation of the reason of his sacrifice, by a reference to the serpent lifted up in the wilderness, struck me very forcibly: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." vs. 14, 15.

I had many times read the account of the brazen serpent, but had never understood its spiritual import before; nor perceived that it was the forgiving love of God that healed the poor Israelite, when his veins were filled with the poison of the serpent, and his soul defiled with the poison of sin. When utterly unable to help himself, the free mercy of God provided a remedy; and the poor sinner, whose body was in danger of death, and whose soul was in danger of everlasting punishment for his rebellion against God, had only to look at this serpent lifted up, and he was immediately healed. Christ here declared that what the brazen serpent was to the wounded Israelite, he is to the perishing sinner, who feels that he is guilty before God.

This doctrine was so new and strange to me that, instead of at once perceiving it was just such a remedy I needed, and entreating God to show me if all this were indeed true, I became more agitated and distressed; and feared that if I continued to read this book, I should be led away from the religion of my fathers. I therefore resolved to lay the New Testament aside and devote myself to the study of Moses and the Prophets, and the Psalms. I felt that I had never hitherto studied the Bible with a desire to know what God therein taught me as an individual; to learn what he would have me think, and feel, and do. I had only read it with the explanations of the different commentators; and whatever they said respecting it, I took for granted to be the truth. But I now felt that this implicit confidence in man, in a matter of such infinite importance as that of knowing what God requires of me, is hazardous and unwise; and I felt how misplaced such confidence was in the present case, when I remembered how frequently these commentators differ from each other. The revealed word of God was not meant to be kept as a hidden mystery, but was given to all Israel; that every individual might learn from it that which concerns his eternal welfare. I therefore began to study the Bible with views and feelings very different from any I had experienced before.

I now viewed the Scriptures, not as a record of historical events, nor as the authoritative standard of Jewish law and theology, but as a portion of the mind of God, which he has graciously revealed for my instruction,—a revelation of his will, with which he sees it good I should be acquainted. When I read the account of the creation of man and of the earth, the question that arose in my mind, was: "Why has God revealed these facts; and what does he wish me to learn from them?" The eternal God, infinitely holy, and happy in his own perfection, saw good to create a race of beings who might participate in his holiness and happiness. He created man in his own image and likeness, crowned him with glory and honor, and made him have dominion over the creation. When I thought of the unclouded happiness of the first man,—his unobstructed communion with God, his knowledge, his power, his full enjoyment of all the blessings with which a loving Father had surrounded him, I began to inquire, "Why am I unhappy? Why do misery and wretchedness abound in that creation which God at first pronounced 'very good'?" The answer to this question was not far off; the third chapter of Genesis revealed the mystery. With what earnestness and solemnity of feeling did I now read a portion of Scripture, the words of which had been familiar to me from childhood, but the real import of which I had never before understood! I had formerly regarded it as an allegory, or [illegible] description of events that related solely to Adam and Eve, with [illegible], as one of their descendants, [illegible] personal condition. But I now perceived it to be a narration of the way in which sin entered into the world and death by sin," Rom. v. 12, an explanation of the problem, why the creation now "groaneth and travaileth in pain." The subtle enemy of man succeeded in his attempt to instill into the minds of our first parents a doubt of the love of God towards them: "Ye shall not surely die": this is not the reason of the prohibition, it is because God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Gen. iii. 4, 5. Unbelief in the love of God was the cause of the fall of man; had Adam and Eve believed that God loved them, they would have felt assured that all his commands were imposed for their own good; but, doubting this, their hearts became alienated from him, and they were ready to act in opposition to his will. The outward act of disobedience was but the manifestation of an altered state of inward affection towards God.

The fatal deed was done, the rebellious will of man declared to the living God that it spurned his control; and forthwith misery and confusion entered into the fair creation. Could all the delights of Eden now render them happy? Ah! no. Was the presence of God now a source of joy to them? "They heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day; and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God among the trees of the garden." Gen. iii. 8. And thus have their posterity done ever since. The thought of a Being of infinite power, in whose hands our destiny is,—who "knoweth our sitting down, and our rising up, who understandeth our thoughts afar off," Psa. cxxxix. 2, has ever been a source of dread to fallen man. The vain pursuit of earthly pleasures, by banishing the thought of this unseen power, serves to "hide" him for a time from this unwelcome presence; but when the conscience is fairly aroused, when he feels that he has been madly living in opposition to the will of a power that could at any moment crush him into dust, every attempt to hide himself from this awful presence is vain: "Whither shall I go from thy spirit, or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there. if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there: if I say, surely the darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me." Psa. cxxxix. 7, 8, 11.—R. H. H., in Hebrew Christian.

FROM PERSIA.

Dear Brother:

While reading the Hebrew-Christian, I have sometimes thought you might like to hear a word from Persia, about your "brethren according to the flesh" in this land. We have no Jews in Tabris, though it is a very large city. Many years ago there was a popular uprising against them, and they were driven out. There is one exception, who, though a baptized member of our Church here, has always passed for a Mussulman. He married a Mussulman wife, who is also a professing Christian. They need your prayers. You probably know something of the work at Hamadan, where is the tomb of Esther and Mordecai, and where the Jewish community has been very accessible, but of this I cannot speak from personal knowledge. This summer, while staying in the plain of Salmas, about a hundred miles west of this city, I went with a Nestorian deacon, to visit a Jewish synagogue. Perhaps you know the Nestorians, or many of them, believe themselves to be the descendants of the ten tribes, and their physiognomy would seem to support the claim, while their language is closely akin to the Syriac used by Christ. The Jews also believe this, and look on them with scorn, as having apostatized from the faith of the fathers, which themselves have kept. Arriving at the synagogue, we were met by the Rabbi and two other men. We slipped off our shoes at the door, and walked around the single room, looking up to the woman's gallery, but not going up. We were told the women and girls were seldom permitted to attend the service. This synagogue belonged to a community of about fifty families. The only object of interest was the Old Testament, beautifully copied in parchment rolls, which were covered with handsome cases, and kept in niches in the wall. One copy was 150 years old. The Rabbi chanted for us a passage, one of those touching the daughters of Zelophehad. The conversation which followed was carried on through Deacon Yohanan, [illegible] in Armenia to him and [illegible] ing into Turkish-Turkish, [illegible] of this province, which you [illegible] is Azerbijan, or ancient Media.

"What meaning do you attach to the sacrifices of the ancient law? Why did God choose that the sinner should come to him bearing the blood of an innocent animal?"

"Their object was simply to remind man of his mortality."

"We do not say so. We believe that God taught by type and figure, that the just should die for the unjust. To whom does the prophet refer in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah?"

"His reference is to the prophet Zechariah."

I afterwards learned that these Jews accept only the Pentateuch as inspired, though they revere the other books. "Now that you have no longer altar, priest or king, how can you keep God's law, and be justified before him?" To this they excitedly replied, they had a king, a wealthy man living in London, who would soon assume the sceptre and reign. They then began all to talk at once, seizing the Deacon by the coat, and hardly permitting him to reply, asking such questions as the following: "Who is the prince of this world, of whom Jesus spoke?" Being told "Satan," they said that was impossible, as it made Satan and not God the ruler of the world. Their other objections were similar. The Rabbi had read the New Testament, and I think, so had the others, but am not sure. After they became quiet, I said to them, "I want to say one thing to you. Your salvation is dear to us, and daily we pray for you. We are assured that Jesus Christ is the Savior sent from God, for you and for us, and we beg you to accept him."

The Rabbi replied, "We do accept him as one of the great prophets."

"If that is true, he is more; if you believe his own words, for he claimed to be the Son of God, and you must accept him as such."

"In that case we reject him altogether."

"When we meet in the day of judgment, I do not wish that you should be able to say, that knowing this truth, I concealed it from you."

The Rabbi answered with the utmost politeness: "It will be a source of deep regret to us to meet you in the day of judgment. You will most inevitably be lost."

So we came away, wondering at the hardness of their hearts, and grieved at their obstinacy, yet seeing a new proof of the truth of all that Paul has written concerning them in Romans. Will you not pray for these Jews on the plain of Salmas, in Persia, that the veil may be taken away from their hearts, and that they may look on him whom they have pierced? I can hardly describe the sorrowful impression left by this interview. They were so kind, so courteous to us, so bitterly hard toward our Master. We rejoice, here, in your work in New York. May God abundantly bless you in it.—G. Y. H., in The Hebrew-Christian.

FROM AUSTRALIA.

Dear Mr. Freshman:

My heart is filled with gratitude to Almighty God for the progress you are making in the good work which you have undertaken, and my earnest prayer is that it may continue to prosper. It is evident that Jews are everywhere exhibiting a spirit of restlessness and expectation which nothing but the coming of their brother Jesus, the true Messiah, can satisfy. A leading Jewish citizen of this town has given a beautiful silver medal as prize for proficiency in Old Testament History, to Christian Sunday School children of all denominations. The good deed to be repeated every year during his life. Is not this a cheering sign of the times. Simply for your encouragement and to cheer you in your holy mission, I enclose two letters which I received since my last communication to you. They both refer to the same subject and prove the wisdom of "sowing beside all waters." I have much pleasure in sending you the enclosed P. O. order.

Nothing would afford me greater pleasure than to hear of Missions such as yours being established in every town where there are Jews and Christians. My belief is that it is God's will that we should all do what we can to prepare the Jews for the second coming of their King, whose advent may be sooner than many of us suppose. And it also is my belief that the Lord will bless and crown with success every sincere and self-sacrificing effort in this cause. I earnestly pray that the Holy Spirit of God may continually supply you with wisdom and understanding to deal with every form of unbelief that may [illegible] ed to you.—O. S., Christian.

[illegible] our language [illegible] such awful import[illegible] the grave makes [illegible] and shriek, and cling to life, when even life is an intolerable burden. Yet, why should it be so? What is the grave that it should so awaken stout hearts and all humanity with terror? What is there in the grave that even the very word should be awful? Look at it; look down into it; look through it—it is only a little narrow opening in the fresh, sweet earth; a retired, shaded spot, aside from the bustle, whirl, and commotion of a restless world; a little mound, then completed, and rounded up, and sodded over, planted with shrubs and flowers; a little palace, with its marble shaft standing up in the midst of the beauties of Nature, surrounded by the decorations of art; a suburban retreat, where the weary and overworn can retire and find rest and repose. Ah! well!—adorn, paint, embellish the grave as we may, the very word is still awful, and its solemn import still clings to it, as the perfume clings to the rose after it is crushed. Beautiful as the place may be with natural loveliness, lavish as may be the adornments of art, the sight is yet appalling. To tell the afflicted that it is the most frequented place of earth; that the great and small of all generations resort to it, and there all distinctions are blotted out; that all grades meet there on a common level; that in the grave all oppressions cease and all wrongs have an end, does not meet the wants of the afflicted soul. Both of the views of death and the grave may be literally true, outward and materialistic, but they cannot satisfy the living soul when going to its baptism of suffering and despair. The grave is the end of life, for only the dead dwell there. It matters not what we say to the sorrowing about the beauties of the place where the dead repose, it does not relieve the subject of any of its terror, nor bring to the sorrowing any relief or comfort. But tell them that their loved ones shall rise again, that the grave shall give up its dead; that they who are in their graves shall hear the voice of God and shall come forth, and you have instantly transformed their night into day, their sorrows into joy, their mourning into rejoicing, and robbed both death and the grave of their terror. The Lord says: "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death." That meets the case; that annihilates death and the grave; that sends the tide of joy bounding through the hearts of a sorrowing world. Some long to be laid at rest after valorously battling with the troubles of the world.

ON OUR BOOK SHELVES.

Brother Wiley Jones' work "The Gospel of the Kingdom." Leather binding, former price $1.50; now 75c. Cloth gilt, former price, $1.50; now 75c. Paper cover, former price was 50c.; now 25c. Friends, you who are at work in the Master's vineyard, think of this chance offered you from week to week to get the book that gives the foundation of our hope in the clearest manner possible, for so little money. It is not right for these books to remain long on our shelves. There is work for them all over the land. "Key Words" is another work by the same author, former price 25c.; now 18c.; and "Thanatopsis," former price 10c.; now 5c.

Have you any smart infidels in your neighborhood? Do they sneer at and ridicule your views of the Bible? If you have we have a little work here that will aid you in routing them completely, and if you have none near you now you can scarcely stir many miles without meeting one, and if you are posted in their theories you have already won half of the battle. Sister Reed's little book, "Creation vs. Evolution" is the work we refer to, and all should possess a copy. Price 25c.

Our lamented Brother Magruder's "Reply to Ingersoll" is another book that should be more largely circulated. It is just what its name indicates—a Reply to Mr. Ingersoll—a reply that Mr. Ingersoll or any other infidel will not even try to answer, so it stands, for its foundation is laid in God's holy word. Price 50c.

The Gift of Life Eternal through Jesus Christ is the great subject for us. Eternal Life a Free Gift. Brother J. H. Pettengill has written a book on this subject, and all who read it say the work is well done. We can send you a copy for $1.00.

We write and talk much of the Kingdom and its Restoration. Brother Silas Henn has written a book on this subject that will aid us very much in our study of the Kingdom and the wonders of the Restoration. One dollar will place it on your table.

There have been different ages and [illegible] we live now [illegible] What is it? by Jos. Lasier; A Translation of Matthew's Gospel, by Chas. Gardner; that grand work, A Letter to a Friend, by Mrs. Woodruff; Which is Right? or Is Christ's Throne in Heaven or on the Earth? by Thos. Wilcox; When Shall These Things Be? by H. Bowman; A Letter to a Baptist Minister, by Daniel Heward; the Doctrine of Baptism, besides a host of those little silent leaflets that work all the time. When you are resting, being wearied, they keep on. Who will help circulate these books? They are all good. There may be an isolated expression that some might object to, but the teaching in the main is endorsed by all our best writers and thinkers. We are ready to fill your orders. See advertisements in other parts of this paper.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first of January, 1886, and consequently is six months past due now. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to oppose some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card or inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

WILL HE GIVE HIS BELOVED SLEEP?

When the feet are worn and weary,
When the eyes grow dim with tears,
When the days are long and dreary,
With the monotone of years:
When the fainting footsteps falter
In the matches dark and steep,
With the griefs no time can alter,
Will He give His loved ones sleep?

When our happiness has vanished,
And the heart is worn and old,
Feeding on the husks it famished
With a hungering untold:
And the way is dark and lonely
Up the rugged mountain steep,
Faith asks the assurance only
That He gives His loved ones sleep.

Will He lead them by still waters,
In the pastures fair and bright
Earth's poor heartsick sons and daughters,
Out from darkness into light?
Oh! I long to know the secrets
The eternal silence keep,
Will we lose our burden some day?
Will He give His children sleep?

Till there come a day of resting,
When the pain and toil are done,
Done the penance and the fasting,
And the final needs are run?
Will the heart forget its sorrows,
And the eyes forget to weep?
Then will be no weary morrows,
If He gives His loved ones sleep.

JERUSALEM CORRESPONDENCE.

JERUSALEM, Sept. 15, 1886.
Under a fig tree between Bethany and Olivet.

Dear Friends:

This tree is not an "only but leaves" sort, for although a little tree not much taller than a man, it has a good number of figs and some would be fit to eat, although so near the road you would expect even the immature ones to be stripped off. Figs are too cheap this year for any one to care for only good ripe ones. One has fallen off and is at my side and seems ripe enough to eat. On the other side of the road, when here in March and April, 1882, I was told that my informants, some Chicago Christian "Overcomers" were sure that it was the place from which our Lord ascended. As it happened, while we were there, thinking and talking, a large company of [illegible] me wisdom from the [illegible] learn not to take [illegible] without leave.

I fully believe that [illegible] the miracle and parable were one and the same. Read Hengstenberg's Commentary on John xi. for capital arguments to prove the above. I have just been out, not to meet Christ, but to bid God speed and send on their way his two disciples, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lethaby, going to see if they can open a mission and benevolent work in that heretofore deemed inaccessable region "beyond Jordan." Kerak in Moab (or Kir of Moab) is the town they aim for. I nearly arranged to go with them but the present condition of my health would not permit. A Christian Syrian said he would go to accompany me back but we must wear the Bedouin's costume. It is so perilous an undertaking that no one here favors it. May they find friends through this notice which I give of a daring undertaking. No servant or fire arms are taken and only a little money. No mission board supports them. He is an English printer but has worked in Philadelphia. His years, forty-nine, ought to count in his favor so far as experience with the world goes. Sending him money, enclose a draft on London to Wm. Lethaby. Address it to his friend, Miss L. Baron, care of British Consulate, Jerusalem, Syria. Now farewell. While sitting here an Arab woman has picked up one of the good figs, eaten half and thrown it down. C.

JERUSALEM, Western slope of the Mount of Olives,
September 16, 1886.

Dear Friends:

This is my noon prayer and confession today with you as witnesses. I was half an hour ago writing under a fig tree between Bethany and Mount Olivet, but this tree was a few feet from the path and not beside it as the one from which our Lord hoped to find a satisfier of his hunger. This, too, is the "season of figs" and a good one laid beside me on the ground, which I first thought of taking, but then concluded that, the tree being in a field, it was not "anybody's," so as it was not my meal time and I do not care to eat between meals, I piously (?) resisted the temptation, expecting to get a large lot of them when I do eat. Before I left, however, a woman (one of two) came along to see me writing. picked a ripe fig, ate part and threw it down. When I was about leaving I saw an Arab coming, looking on a fig tree in the distance for figs and then up to the tree where I had been and had then deserted with a changed conclusion, for I picked up the whole and half fig to carry off. He was a stone cutter, I saw, and asked me questions in Arabic which I could not answer, and then felt in my side pockets using one word "teen" which I understood; teen means figs. He had seen me pick up the two at a distance.

His hand came on a bag of coin and he was ready to run up the hill with it, but I held on and put it in the other pocket. He followed me and after I had got it in my pants pocket, he pulled it out with a rough tear while a woman a few feet off saw the operation as she was returning from market. Again I saved it and as we were nearing the Mount he made off. Four years ago I went down this road to Jericho and have boasted over others that I was not robbed. This spiritual pride needed to be taken out of me. May God keep me from boasting over others. Then I had deemed it prudent to give all my bread (2½ Arabic loaves) to two hungry Bedouins who came along with guns. Then I had but a few cents worth of copper coin. Today I had a whole loaf of European freshly baked bread given me by Mrs. Lethaby from a Swiss woman living outside of the Damascus gate of the city. It was in my clothes but I had given it to no beggar in Bethany nor this hungry stone cutter or mason. My principles are not to carry bread when traveling and have almost decided not to take money, but here I had a good sized loaf of one and about $2.00 of the other, which a poor missionary just going to a dangerous place over Jordan had loaned me. So I deserved the fright, and I pray God to make me more humble and honest in the future. May God make my trepidation and shame at my folly worth more to me than a pious (?) meditation such as my spiritual pride delights in, where I generally make myself many degrees better and more favored of God than all others. I have got so I can't bear to hear other boasters of how the Lord has and will use them for great things, because I am jealous of my own reputation.

[illegible] value. May I [illegible]'s cane (or staff) as [illegible], as our Lord told his "sent ones" to carry one if they wished. This stout oak staff, begged by me from the superintendent of the German Hospice was the human instrument which saved me the money. It had been left by some former German pilgrim in the room where I have just had two weeks free lodgings and board. Last summer on the Plains of Mongolia I had been obliged to carry a stout, iron-pointed cane borrowed of a missionary at Kalgan, because the dogs are fierce there. May I be wise enough to know that in China, with a full acquaintance with its customs and language, one can do differently than without such knowledge, among the bold, intrepid Arabs and Turks.

A gospel of Luke in Chinese was in a side pocket. May God give me the good Samaritan's spirit of diligence in good works, incapable of sauntering an idle day in the country. In the night I thought I would work today picking out stones on the land of people who give me all I can eat of grapes and figs. A letter which the Arab tore in pulling things from my pocket was from a Scotch Christian brother in Japan to me in which he hopes the time will return when we shall have all things in common. Well, may I be more ready to share money and bread and not become a temptation to compulsory communism. May my friends in America heed this warning. May the good Samaritan of our lives pour in the oil and wine for our healing and comfort.

C.

JERUSALEM, near the Garden of Gethsemane,

Dear Friends:

Should I be taken up with the antiquities and recollections of the past or live and act in the present? Which course would my 'Restorer pursue? Which is pleasing to God? I think both the remembrances of the past and the duty of the hour as a brother may have their place, but the latter occupation, if faithfully carried out, will leave only a minimum of time for recollections and reveries. The duty of a brother's part so easily slips out of mind that we need a perpetual reminder. Our Elder Brother is himself that reminder.

There is room for practical good works in this city. Many poor Jews can get but a county support. Trades should be taught and shops for work opened. A paper factory started on a small scale by an industrious man now in some mill in America, would give many the employment of gathering rags and other materials. Paper is now too high in price for such a city as this is rapidly becoming. The starter of the enterprise should learn the German and the Arabic languages after he came if he did not know the former before. More should be done for the blind in teaching them trades and to read.

I have too much to say on these subjects for the pen to take down. May we meet before many months. I see that it is not easy to settle here and yet Jews and Christians are doing so in astonishing numbers every year. The ear can hardly believe what the eyes of us witnesses see of this wonderful progress within a few years of Jerusalem's claim to be a great city. The religious element is always predominant here; never more so in the building line than now. Improved hand mills for wheat, etc., could be brought or manufactured here at a great advantage. Improved stone cutting, drilling, etc., tools would probably make their way in time. There must be thousands of stone cutters about the city and suburbs, all as busy as possible, for the work is great. Yours for the peace of Jerusalem. C.

The Book of Jobab, called Job, Son of Zare, Son of Bruguel, Son of Reuel, Son of Isaac, Son of Habraam. — According to the Septuagint.

CHAP. XXIV.

1. Why is it that hours have escaped the notice of the Lord,
2. And irreverent ones have overstepped the boundary line and plundered the flock along with the shepherd?
3. They have led away the orphan's beast of burden and taken the widow's ox for debt.
4. They have pushed the weak out of the way of right, and with one accord they've hid the meek of the earth.
5. They've gone off like asses in a field; they've gone over me in their own way. Bread for children hath sweetened him.
6. Before the season have they harvested a field not their own. Feeble ones have worked vineyards for the irreverent without wages and without food.
7. [illegible] have made many lie down [illegible], without their outer garments [illegible] covering for [illegible] (body of course here) have they stripped off.
8. With the dew of the mountains have they been wet, and because they had no shelter they wrapped around them the shelter of a rock.
9. They have snatched the orphan from the breast, and oppressed the fallen.
11. They have laid in wait iniquitously in narrow places.
12. Some have been cast out of their own city and their own houses; and the life of infants hath sighed in extremity.
13. And hath he not appointed a visitation for any of these things? Of these upon the earth none have even comprehended, and the way of righteousness they have not known, nor have they gone their ways by the way that doth not turn.
14. And he who knoweth their works hath surrendered them to darkness, and like a thief in the night will he be.
15. The eye of the adulterer hath even watched for darkness, saying no eye will observe me and he hath hid his face.
16. He hath dug through houses in the darkness; they have sealed themselves up in the daytime; they have not recognized the light.
17. Therefore the morning to them will be with one accord a shadow of death; therefore will the disturbing fear of death be recognized.
18. A light thing is it upon the face of the water; accursed shall be their allotted portion upon the earth; their plantations upon the earth when dried up shall vanish away.
19. For they have snatched away the armful of orphans.
20. Thereafter his sin was called to mind, and like a dewy mist he vanished away; and that which he did shall be paid back to him; every wrong-doer shall be crushed down like a tree that cannot be remodled.
21. The barren he hath not treated well and the erring woman he hath not been merciful to.
22. But with anger hath he turned away the helpless; therefore when he standeth up he shall have no faith in his own life.
23. When sick let him not hope to be well; for he will fall by disease.
24. For his uplifting hath brought ill to many; and he hath withered like a mallows' shoot in the scorching wind; or like a grain head that is about to fall of its own accord off of the stalk.
25. And if not, who is he that hath said, I am a liar, and he shall show my words to be untright.

C. GARDNER.

The Egyptians Who Wrote for the Future.

Let us look first of all at the Egyptians, who seem to me to possess the consciousness of the most distant, an almost immeasurable, past. They did not adorn their temples with inscriptions for their pleasure only. They had a clear idea of the past and of the future of the world in which they lived; and so as they cherished recollections of the past, they wished themselves to be remembered by unknown generations in times to come. The biographical inscription of Ahmes, a captain of marines of the eighteenth dynasty, is addressed, as Champollion says, "to the whole human race," (tet a enten ret neb). A monument in the Louvre (A. 84) says: "I speak to you who shall come a million of years after my death." These are the inscriptions of private persons. Kings, naturally, are still more anxious that posterity and the world at large should be informed of their deeds. Thus Shabak I., the conqueror of Judah, prays in one of his inscriptions at Silsilis: "My gracious Lord, Amon, grant that my words may live for hundreds of thousands of years."

The great Harris Papyrus, which records the donations of Rameses III. to the temples of Egypt, together with some important political events, was written to exhibit to "the gods, to men now living, and to unborn generations (hamemet), the many good works and valorous deeds which he did upon the earth as great king of Egypt." Whatever other motives, high or low, may have influenced the authors of these hieroglyphic inscriptions, one of them was certainly their love or fear of humanity, their dim conviction that they belonged to a race that would go on forever filling the earth, and to which they were bound by some kind of moral responsibility. They wrote for the world, and it is in that sense that I call their writing the first germs of a world literature. And as in Egypt, so it was in Babylon, Nineveh and Persia. When the dwellers on the Euphrates and Tigris had learned that nothing seemed to endure, that fire and water would destroy wood and stone, even silver and gold, they took clay and baked it, and hid the cylinders covered with cuneiform writing in the foundations of their temples, so that [illegible] after the destruction of these temples and palaces future generations would read the story of the past. And [illegible] in their safe hiding places these cylinders have been found again after [illegible] years, unharmed by water, and [illegible] by fire, and fulfilling the very purpose for which they were intended, carrying [illegible] to us the living message which the ancient rulers of Chaldea wished that we, their distant descendants, should receive.

Often these inscriptions end with imprecations against those who should dare to injure or efface them. At Khorsabad, at the very interior of the construction was found a large stone chest, which enclosed several inscribed plates in various materials; one tablet of gold, one of silver, others of copper, lead and tin; a sixth text was engraved on alabaster, and the seventh document was written on the chest itself. They all commemorate the foundation of a city by a famous king, commonly called Sargon, and they end with an imprecation: "Whoever alters the works of my hand, destroys my constructions, pulls down the walls which I have raised, may Asshur, Nisib, Rachau and the great gods who dwell there, erase his name and send from the [illegible] his seed to sit bound at the feet of his foe."—Max Muller.

THE COMING AGE,

—IN—

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WESTBEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar features, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that His supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great thinking Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in Cloth, Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

"THE TWO HOUSES OF ISRAEL."

Our Brother Grant's work on this subject needs notice to supply his dispensational and historical omissions, with all good feeling; for it is no great duty to God, than "good will to men" that this truth should be told. "They are not all Israel who are of Israel," and this should be kept in mind, Rom. ix. 4–8; but it is equally true that they are not all Christians who are of the church! We must take "the word of the Lord" with its own applications.

1. The eternal purpose which God purposed in Christ," takes in the patriarchal and Mosaic—the Christian and future ages. Hence the deliverances from Egypt by the judges, kings and Cyrus, were as stages and incidents in the one yet unfolding purpose. To switch off at the return from Babylon or anywhere, even at the first advent, would be gospel suicide! Yet Brother G. unconsciously did this so far. He quoted Luke i. 30–32 to "the throne of his father David," omitting "and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end!"

Note. This is, with many others, a pivotal text. The question of Israel, "the house of Jacob," turns on such Scriptures. Faith fastens on it but unbelief omits it with all like it. However, the gospel pre-preached to Abraham, Gal. iii. 8–29, embraces it and reaches on through the past and present to the second coming of Jesus, and "the restitution of all things spoken." Acts iii. 21; Heb. ix. 11–28; 2 Peter iii. 8–13; Rev. i, 1–8.

2. "The seven times" of Israel's punishment, Lev. xxvi., their down-trodden sanctuary through 2800 years, Dan. viii., were only about one-fourth fulfilled at the first advent! They embrace "the times of the Gentiles," Luke xxi. 24; Rom. xi. 25–29, and the apostasy, 2 Thess. ii. 1–8. Also the destruction of Jerusalem by Rome, the fourth and last of those Gentile powers, leaves their "house desolate, till they shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" Matt. xxiii. 37–39. Paul is the pattern of absolute grace!

3. "The twelve tribes" are expressed six times, and with single tribes, twenty-six times in the New Testament, enough surely for recognition. What, then, avails, as argument against God's word, to the contrary, At the outcome of their "seven times" you and I read Lev. xxvi. 28–42. "Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham, will I remember; and I will remember the land." This belongs only to the future. Note verses 43–45

4. While they forfeit the honors of "the first born" given to Christ and the church of the first born in Christ, Matt. xxi. 42, 43, yet they are still the oath-confirmed and covenant-promised seed. Rom. xi. 26–33. They exist as absolutely as the creation of God! Jer. xxxi. 31–37; xxxiii. 20–22. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah, for I will be merciful and their sins will I remember no more!" Amen and amen. Heb. viii. 1–12.

Brother Grant's logic in the rejection of Israel for their apostasy, if fairly applied would reject the world and the church too, for its still greater apostasy under far greater light. But as it is, Brother G. leaves that covenant people to the curse, and appropriates the plenitude of promise to the far more flagrantly offending church! (both taken dispensationally). Surely "the remnant shall be saved," human failure notwithstanding! Please then, Brother G., revise and amend. Amen. "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound!" Rom. v. 20; Luke vii. 47; 1 Tim. i. 14–16. Paul the pattern.

To conclude, the return of Israel under Cyrus was indeed signal; yet the superlative remains to grace the inauguration of "the kingdom to come!" "It is the Lord's doing and marvellous in our eyes!" Amen. Lovingly for truth,

J. B. COOK

THE GEOGRAPHY.

Geography of what, and when? The geography of the Bible lands in the time of Abraham and on to Cyrus and to Ezekiel and minor prophets.

1. But my special reference is to the prophet Ezekiel, and Daniel. In Ezek. xxvii. I count some forty geographical terms that were embraced in Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome. These are noted in my Bible maps—that should be the best in the world—by Bagster & Sons.

2. The leading names are given us, Gen. x., from the sons, grandsons, etc., of Noah,—Gomer, Magog, Madai, Meshech, Tubal, Togarmah, etc., all in the sphere of Bible geography! Its center often is Canaan. Judea, Jerusalem, the land of promise to the patriarchs, and so north and south, east and west, related to that land.

3. The Roman Empire, "the fourth" and last of "the four" great world empires, was bounded on the north by the Danube, except Dacia, and the Black and Caspian seas.

4. Rome, its capital, the home of the Cæsars and Popes, is embraced, Rev. xvii. to xix., and is the object of divine judgment, as it is in the Old Testament, Dan. ii. 40–45; vii. 14–18; xxv. 27.

5. Rome embodied the Gentile symbols of Babylon, Persia and Greece, and is the central focal scene of "the judgment written." Rev. xiii. 7, 8; and xvi.

6. No imagination can add a fifth to God's "four" as given seven times in one chapter, Dan. vii. It is an absolute erring notion!

7. "The kingdom" that follows "the fourth" is the divine kingdom under Christ, and his "Bride the church." Both Testaments teach this. Russia, as such, is about twice as old as our nation. It belongs like our U. S. A., to "the ends of the earth," offshoots from the old Gentile tree, Isa. viii.; Dan. iv. Dr. J. Thomas made "Russia, fifth;" others make our nationality "the fifth kingdom;" but both subvert the most emphatic testimony of revelation! The ten times "four," with judgment on "the fourth," Dan. ii. 45; vii. 14, 26, can never yield to any theory of men. I've been brief, but the truth of God is told as to the judgment on Rome the desolator of Jerusalem. Dan. ix. 27. Lovingly for truth,

J. B. COOK.

Jerusalem Correspondence.

JERUSALEM, Sept. 27, 1886.

Dear Friends:

Having today interviewed a German missionary who has been in Abyssinia thirty years, let me put on record these important items. The Abyssinians claim to be in a large measure the children of Israel, as they say that in Solomon's time there was a levy made of the first born of the rich and poor, high and low, in Judea who were taken to colonize the country. The king was a son of Solomon and the Ark of the Covenant was the particular treasure given him by his father. A duplicate was made of the original Ark and left in its place in the temple at Jerusalem. At the capital of Abyssinia, Axum, are the temples or synagogues or churches of their faith, and beside the finest one is a smaller one, most religiously guarded night and day by men in holy orders. No profane eyes may see inside, but the people come to kiss and reverence the building, and even the very trees and earth about it. The golden cover, cherubim, etc., are not claimed to be there.

The Abyssinians practice circumcision. Saturday, which they call Sanbat, has a reverence from the people which forbids their bringing water, starting on a journey, and many other things, from Friday afternoon through the whole of the next day. Jerusalem is to them a most sacred city, a visit to which is a work of great merit. The Old Testament has come down to them in their ancient Ethiopic language. These facts about the Jewish customs and the claim to possess the Ark are not only given me by this thirty years' resident, but from "Three Years in Abyssinia," by Bishop Gobat, of Jerusalem, and "Wanderings Among the Falashas in Abyssinia," by H. A. Stern.

Bruce, Salt, and Ruppell are three writers who many years ago describe Axum. An Amharic and English Dictionary, printed in 1841, confirms what I learn about the Ark, Sabbath, etc. Now in these stirring days, when Palestine is being restored to the Jews, and great events are upon us, these statements have an interest. Who would not like to see that ark? I imagine that the real one is hid in some safe place, but I do not know. The bringing of this one to light, if the real one, would of course be a wonderful event. If it is in some way a copy it would also have great interest. Yet the devout readers of this bear these things in mind. Harder looks than that sacredly guarded building at Axum have yielded to the two keys, faith in prayer and humility in works. The Ark is called Tabut.

Now for some other items of interest. The Abyssinians became Christians very early in the apostles' days. I can scarcely doubt but that the race are Israelites, Mongrel Israelites or proselytes, and that these Jewish customs were with them of old, but it is possible that Judaizing Christians introduced them. St. Mark is considered the head of their church, which dovetails in well with the generally admitted fact that Alexandria was at one time his home, and the church has drawn its patriarchs from Alexandria. Frumentius, from Tyre, is claimed by some to have been their first bishop. He flourished about the time of the Nicene council, 325, and the translation of the New Testament into their ancient and sacred language, the Ethiopic, is agreed to have been his work. Now some more tidings or news to us is brought to light.

Among the Abyssinians live a people called Falashas who are known certainly to be Jews, but, wonderful to relate, instead of being the merchants and wealthy class, they are the workers in iron and other metals, carpenters and soldiers. They build the churches and synagogues—churches for the Christians, synagogues for themselves, which buildings, by the way, are all round like the engine round houses, only they are completely circular.

Here is something unique, Jews that are artificers! What a help they will be in the restoration of Palestine! We wonder if this state is due to some ancient prophesy of one brother's serving another. Well, time will show these mysteries. They are not Hebrew scholars, but learned men among them read the old Ethiopic, as do the scholars of the Abyssinian race and church. The Amharic is really the spoken and practical language of the country. There are but these two written languages. Just think, the Amharic has two hundred and fifty one letters. The Ethiopic, which is the older language of the two, has seventy-eight letters less. The letters are the same in the two languages. The Chinese language has two hundred and fourteen radicals, on which to build its characters, difficult and numerous, but here are two hundred and fifty-one letters. There is, however, a logic about it which makes the sounds easier to learn; for instance, one consonant will have seven vowel endings, and so on down in order. There are unwritten languages, but books in Amharic are prized. Even the priests who must use the Ethiopic as the sacred language, do not well understand it.

Attempts have been made to Christianize these Falashas or Jews by Roman Catholics and Protestants, but none have been baptized other than by the State church, unless secretly, for no dissenting church is allowed. Complete immersion in a river is the method of the Abyssinian, like all these Eastern sects of Christians. We wonder how any students of history or language can write books to prove sprinkling to be the true apostolic method. At present all missionaries are expelled from the country. Even other Europeans are not wanted. My informant was one of four German missionaries sent by Bishop Gobat of Jerusalem thirty years ago. One soon died, another gave up and went home. He, Rev. John Mayer and Rev. J. M. Flad remained. The latter is now at Kornthal, near Stuttgart, Wittemburg, putting through a new and greatly improved edition of the Scriptures in Amharic.

Two German mechanics soon followed these four, one a worker in iron, the other a cabinet maker. It was thought it would be a means of access and greater intimacy with the Jews, who, as we have said, are the artisans and laborers of the country. A professor of the Abyssinian languages, Joseph Halevi, in an Oriental College, Paris, has visited the country on a mission of inquiry from the Orthodox Jews. Mr Mayer knows of only two of these Falashas who have visited Jerusalem. "They seem to take little interest in outside matters. The other Abyssinians make much of coming here. There are about fifty of their monks here all the time. Last year a deaf man of thirty odd years was here for a couple of weeks. He conversed in writing with these monks and their Abby, as he has learned the Amharic. He lives in New York, but proposes to visit Abyssinia next January.

The Deaconesses have had some Abyssinian girls in their school in former years. It was during a time of persecution. The daughter of a German missionary and an Abyssinian wife was trained in this "Tabitha Kumi" Institution and is now in a Deaconesses' Hospital as nurse in Cairo, Egypt. The opinion this Deaconess had of the Abyssinian church was that it was fanatical. She says they claim that Jesus himself went to their country and founded their church; I visited their new church edifice today. It is not very large, but round, with doors at the four points of the compass. Stone crosses are over the doors. Abyssinians use pictures, but not images in worship. They do not acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope at Rome.

In the Abyssinian church are some men and women who are quite humble. It is a special duty with these people to visit this city if possible, and a wonderful desire and poverty-stricken lot they seem to be. They have a convent close to the Holy Sepulchre precincts, but have scarcely anything more to eat than the paring stones of the scours afford. These people are wonderfully grateful for even a fragment of the Scriptures.

One of the German Deaconesses told me today (Sept. 24, 1886) that once when the Abyssinians at their convent seemed starving, she prepared a quantity of what she thought good food for them, and found upon offering it that it could not be taken, as there were a series of fast days occurring at the time which debarred them from accepting it. O.

Paper bed clothes are made at a factory in New Jersey. They are double sheets of manilla paper, strengthened with twine. They have a warmth preserving power far out of proportion to their thickness and weight.

The Wedding Garment.

This parable of Jesus was taken from an Eastern custom. When a king made a marriage for his son, all his young companions were invited, and robes similar to those worn by him were provided for every one of them, so that they all looked exactly alike. The robes being thus provided there was no excuse for being without one, hence the summary dealing with the delinquent. This is exactly the case with the robe now provided, even the righteousness of God by faith in Jesus Christ, being witnessed by the law and prophets which is to and upon all that believe.

This witness we find in the law in type, Gen. iii. 21, where Adam and his wife were clothed with the skins of beasts. There was yet no allowance for the slaughter of animals, and this clothing could be nothing else but the skins of sacrifices to typify the Great Sacrifice, Jesus. So Abel seems to have understood it when he offered the "better sacrifice," the lamb.

The witness of the prophets we find in Jer. xxiii. 5, 6, "this is his name, the Lord our Righteousness." Thus we find a beautiful fulfilment of Rom. iii. 21, 22. Then we are told in 1 Cor. i. 30, that God makes Jesus, "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption" to all his believing people. Further we have in Gal. iii. 27 the grand information, "So many of you as have been immersed into Christ have put on Christ;" we put on his glorious robe of perfect righteousness in baptism, i. e., if we know what we are doing in the act of baptism. Do you suppose if men know or believed this they would refuse to be baptised? Most assuredly they would not. In all the revisions, new or old, except the American, this word baptize is not even translated the Greek word "baptizo," with the double "o," which is detached and an "e" substituted, and thus "Anglified" is made to mean anything men choose to call it. Those who are going ahead without immersion can never have the "wedding garment" under the arrangement of the present dispensation.

This is also the robe which Paul wanted, he having "no confidence in the flesh;" indeed he thought everything that could be wrought out by man's doing, so far as justification is concerned, was nothing "but dung." He wanted to be "found in Christ," having nothing of his own about him. See Phil. iii 7–9. God will not accept an imperfect righteousness, and nothing else will ever be found in any man, with the single exception of the man, Jesus. Hence the robe is provided for every believer and no excuse will be taked from those who are found without it! Then at the marriage of the bride every one of them will look alike, and being in Jesus, they will be "loved like Jesus." See John xvii. 23. "Thou hast loved them as thou hast loved me." If we believe in Jesus and are immersed into his name, we shall be saved. The "shall" of Jesus is good for and fully guarantees every thing else necessary for our full and complete salvation. Please read these Scriptures referred to. In Jesus we have everything—in ourselves we have nothing.

This is the last testimony, I think, which I shall ever be allowed to bear to the "truth as it is in Jesus." About three months would put me into my 90th year, but I do not expect ever to reach that period. I am waiting the Lord's will on that point. If you can find room to insert this, I shall feel much obliged; if not, there is no harm done. At the same time I thank you very kindly for your kindness in continuing the paper. Yours for the truth as it is in Jesus,

THOMAS CHURCHILL.

An Island Destroyed.

RESULTS OF AN ERUPTION IN THE TONGA GROUP.

A correspondent of the Auckland Herald gives the following account of the destruction of the Island of Niua fu by a volcanic eruption Aug. 31:

The evening of the 30th of August a very great number of earthquake shocks were felt at Niua-fu, which is 400 miles from Tonga, until 1:30 o'clock the 31st of August, when the eruption commenced with a tremendous report. The terrified natives immediately left their respective villages and fled to the highest parts of the island, where they imagined they would be safe. It continued in active operation for several days, throwing up immense quantities of sand and stones. A mound of considerable height has been formed in the ..e, and some millions of tons of sand have been deposited upon the island, varying in depth from a few inches to several fathoms, and presenting a most desolate appearance. The number of nut trees destroyed by the falling sand and water must be immense. The bread-fruit trees have been damaged greatly; in fact, the whole of the large trees have been literally crushed down by the immense quantity of sand which has been deposited upon the branches, giving the island a most desolate appearance. The plantations of the natives have been destroyed and in a number of instances buried many feet under newly-deposited sand. A great many of the houses have been broken down by the weight of sand collecting upon the roofs. The outlook is by no means a cheerful one. Many of the natives would like to leave at once, and it is probable that when the King makes his anticipated visit in the course of two or three weeks many will be brought away.

The news of the eruption reached Tonga Sept. 18. The eruption was first noticed by the French gunboat Decres, but after cruising about the island she sailed away, to the great disgust of the natives. As soon as the intelligence reached Tonga a relief expedition was organised by the Premier, the Rev. S. W. Baker. The steamer Sava was chartered and proceeded to the island. The natives were found in a great state of consternation and in actual dread of food. In their anxiety to communicate with Tonga they had well nigh dashed a boat of native construction in order to wait for Tonga or Fiji, to tell of the terrible eruption which had, for the present at least, done so much harm to their island. A very remarkable fact in connection with this outburst is that no life was lost through it. The Premier has made arrangement for an early supply of food to meet their present requirements.

It may be a fact of considerable interest to men of science to know that the volcanic eruption of Niua-fu took place on the same date (Aug 31st) as the severe earthquakes are reported to have occurred in the United States and some parts of Southern Europe. The island has been the scene of several volcanic eruptions, the first taking place some seventy years ago, the first within the memory of the living. A second outburst took place some forty years since, and the third nearly twenty years ago. The present eruption commenced at one side of a lake which is found in the center of the island. It may prove of interest to some to know that at the time the terrible volcanic eruption in New Zealand took place a considerable number of severe earthquakes were felt at Niua-fu. Aug. 12 a severe earthquake was felt. It, is said, to have been the worst ever experienced in the island, and a fissure was made in some of the rocks, and little was left that a very powerful smell of sulphur was observed.

Letter Drawer.

The following letter from Sister Sarah Armitage, of Ohio, shows her experience is much like many others. This interchange of experience by short letters is too much neglected. Write again, dear Sister, and by thus encouraging others you will gain strength yourself.

"The thought has often occurred to me that I might say a few words to the brethren and sisters, through the columns of our much loved paper, and then I would dismiss the subject, thinking there were others that were more able and competent to write than myself. But as I do not have the privilege of meeting with any of the brethren or sisters, or hearing the sweet message of the gospel preached, I will write a few lines. While reading some of the letters I have shed tears of sympathy, for it seemed to me the writer was traveling the same path of trials that I have trod. But oh, what a consolation we have in prayer. Can we not lift our tear-burdened hearts to our Father, and lay all our sorrows at the feet of Jesus? We need not go away sorrowful. Dear sorrowing ones, why need we carry such heavy hearts from day to day, when we have such a precious friend as Jesus, who has bidden us come and cast our every care upon him. Oh, for more faith and confidence in the blessed Son of God. Let us pray faithfully for one another."

Sister Mary A. Rose, of Wisconsin, though crippled send us this very welcome letter:

"I take my pen to write you a few lines. I write myself, it is more like talking to you myself. I would much like to see you and tell you the benefit yours paper has been to me, and thank you and all that have contributed to send me the paper. There is much that I would like to write but I cannot write much. I am a cripple in right hand, and it makes me very nervous to write. Dear brethren, when you meet together to sing and pray, remember me. I will send you one dollar. I hope I will be able to send you some more."

One of our "Trial subscribers," in Texas sends these few words of encouragement: This was delayed in transit, and though written some weeks since, is still fresh and good. Write again.

"I will write you a few lines to let you know, that I too am a devoted reader, and lover of your much prized RESTITUTION. Its pages of truth, and inspiration of holy writ, are meat and drink to the hungry soul. At being a present to me from a very dear friend makes it more sacred to me, while at the same time, I learn through it there are others, who are seeking salvation, and praying fervently, for the second coming of our Lord and Savior. There is no one here who takes THE RESTITUTION besides myself, in fact, I have never met with ... one person, since I come to this state, who fully understands the gospel of the kingdom of God. It seems to be a strange doctrine. I dearly love to read letters from the sisters. It proves that they as well as myself, are not ashamed to own their Lord. Sister Carrie Williams writes with great force and enthusiasm. Her letters remind me of a babbling brook on a hot summer's day, refreshing, pleasant and instructive. Keep on, sis., that is right, my dear sister, let us keep on serving and owning him, for we know if we reject him, what will be the result. The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord, Rom. vi. 23. 'Tis true, there are many things to draw me away from him, who freely laid down his life for us, while at the same time if we worship him in spirit, and truth, there is nothing that can lead us astray: Would to God I were able to do more for the cause of our blessed Redeemer, but finding myself an invalid at the age of twenty-four, must and will be content with my lot. For who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Let me answer unhesitatingly, No never. So let us ever be ready to explain, with the the apostle; Heb. xiii. 5, 6. I hope I will be able to renew my subscription, when my time expires. Your sister in hope of an immortal resurrection."

NANCY E. THOMAS.

A sister in Oregon writes the following cheering words, to show her estimate of our paper.

"I inclose one dollar in this letter for which you will please send me THE RESTITUTION for six months. I am one of your trial subscribers. I love your dear paper. I expect to take it as long as I can get the money to pay for it. Why do I love this good paper? Because it teaches such good Bible truth, and that is what we want. Truth can make us free. The servant abideth not in the house for ever, but the Son abideth ever. John viii. 35. There is quite a number here that believe the gospel that Christ taught when on the earth, and are looking for him to come again to set up his kingdom. Oh may we all be ready, for he will come in an hour when we think not. I do not wish to weary you so I will close. I remain your sister in Christ."

Our late Conference was a season of sunshine in our cloudy pilgrimage. Our brethren and sisters were made to rejoice in the faith and hope of the gospel. We were all strengthened and parted expecting to meet again in "the sweet by and by." Particulars by the Secretary.

TO OUR READERS.

Last week we bade our readers, as we then thought, the farewell, so far as our Editorial connection with THE RESTITUTION was concerned. But a sense of duty to God, to the cause of Christ, and to our brethren, who claimed that our continued assistance, for a short time at least, was almost indispensible, has decided us to hold the position for a very little while longer. In doing this we are making a sacrifice of personal ease and quiet, and, at the same time abandoning a much cherished design of going to a more congenial clime to pass the coming winter, for which our only son had most kindly proffered all needed help, financially and otherwise. Now as to whether the motto "Man proposes, and God disposes," shall turn out to be applicable or not, is left for time to unfold. To have retired and peremptorily refused to serve our brethren any longer, would, in our own view, have looked as base and dishonorable as for a soldier to desert his comrades in the critical hour of peril. So regardless of burdens that this Editorial calling may impose upon us at our time of life, and without anxiety as to whether the pecuniary reward shall be the little stipulated, or nothing, we have concluded to stand by our brethren awhile longer. In doing this we shall hereafter regard our place something like that of an Editor pro tem., claiming the privilege to retire whenever circumstances will permit. While we may continue to supervise the columns of our loved paper we shall especially try to make it worthy of patronage. On the signs of the times, the restoration of Judah and Israel to the promised father-land, the near coming of Christ, eternal life through him alone, and other important subjects revealed in Holy Writ, we shall endeavor to treat fully and explicitly. Nor shall we neglect the important matters of personal piety, and holiness as pre-requisites to having a place in God's everlasting kingdom.

We expect trials. We expect our poor, sad heart will be often anguished with hidden griefs! But in the future we expect to whisper these griefs only in the ears of him who was once a Man of Sorrows. We will tell Jesus for he will best understand them. He walked through the shadows and darkness, and he perfectly knows the road his followers must pass over. When our eyes suffuse our furrowed cheeks with tears, and our heart grows faint, and our strength fails, he will take our hand, and not only kindly help us along, but soothe to sweetest peace all our heart-griefs. We have tried human friendship, and found it has its weaknesses; it does not know the sorrows of another heart, but Jesus knows, and we will go to him.

We near the end of our pilgrim pathway. O it is now but a little while and we shall lay our burdens down. Soon Jesus will say, "It is enough, Rest! Our heart-anguishes in this world are for the best; they will make our heart-ecstacies all the more rapturous in the world to come. Let us bear, then, a little longer all the complaints and censures that fall to the Editor's lot, and our Heavenly Father knows they are many. We will work on, for—

"We live in deeds, not years: in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial,
We should count time by heart throbs: he most lives,
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

Jesus was not only baptised in Jordan, but afterwards in intensest sorrow and suffering, and a baptism in sorrow may be needful for us.

Brethren, pray for us. It is only a little while we shall act for you in the Editorial capacity. Remember the paper with your means, for it will not be needed much longer. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Conference Report.

The First Quarterly Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith in Indiana, met as advertised at Plymouth, Ind., Friday, Nov. 12, 1886, and continued over the following Sunday.

As it was the time of the Stockholder's Annual Meeting of the Christian Publishing Association, which occupied most of the time on Saturday, the conference business was necessarily shortened. Eight churches were represented by delegates, namely, Macy, Argos, Claysville, Pierceton, Plymouth, Rensselaer, Teegarden and Antioch. The reports of these churches were encouraging, and though some are not in as good condition as they might be, a determination was manifest to press on in the work for the Master.

A letter recommending that Brother L. E. Conner be given a letter of recommendation by the Conference, was presented by the Macy church, and a resolution passed granting such letter for one year, as provided by Section 7 of the Constitution adopted at Argos, Sept. 10, 1886.

The following resolution was offered and by vote adopted and made a part of the Constitution of this Conference:

WHEREAS, The work of evangelizing is of the utmost importance,

Therefore, This Conference recommends to the Churches of the State that each Church collect and send to the Conference, each quarter, as large a fund as they can, for evangelical purposes.

The public speakers present were B. W. Woodward, of Dutton, Mich., L. E. Conner, Macy, R. S. Driggins, Rensselaer, J. L. Wince, Pierceton, and S. A. Chaplin, Plymouth. Chapel Hall was filled at each session throughout the Conference, and the best of attention given. The Social Meeting Sunday morning not giving sufficient time for all who wished to take a part and for the reading of letters sent by those who could not attend, it was decided to continue it in the afternoon, and it was wise, for I can safely repeat the words of a brother, "Today we have had the best Social Meeting we ever had in this hall."

During this meeting the friends assembled had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Brother and Sister Jesse M. Smith, of Council Bluffs, Iowa. It was truly a pleasure to meet these friends, and we hope they will again favor us with their presence among us. Brother A. T. Benedict of Arkansas, formerly of this county, attended our meeting, renewing old acquaintances and making new ones. Brother Benedict's hair is white, and we may never meet him again in this life, but we know if we are faithful we will clasp hands with him in the sweet by and by.

Our hearts were gladdened on Sunday morning when one more of our young Sunday School scholars decided to go forward and cast her lot with the children of God. Sister Rose Wright was immersed by Brother J. L. Wince on Sunday evening. She has made the start in the springtime of life; trials and temptations will have to be endured, and we pray the Father to give her strength as she may need, and that she may be among that happy company who shall hear the "Well done, enter into my joy."

Notice of the next Conference will appear in due time in THE RESTITUTION.

The following letter was read at the Conference. Others will be given a place next week.

A. B. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

MILLFIELD, O., Nov. 4, 1886.

Brother Driggins:—

Being called away from the Argos Conference so suddenly, I failed to have the interview with you and the brethren which my visit contemplated. The two principal subjects I had in view were:—(1) Some arrangement by which our Editor of THE RESTITUTION, might be kept and sustained in his present official position. (2) Some well arranged system, by which we, as a people, working to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord, could act with more efficiency.

I was called into the interesting work of this great movement at a very early period (1843), and have always taken some humble part in its general operations, and have ardently desired its success. I was delighted, therefore, when your resolutions were presented, for the deliberations of the Conference; and still more highly pleased to learn that they were adopted. My influence, whatever it may be, will be given to carry out and sustain them.

The individual Congregations of believers (called churches) must be well organized and efficient workers, to add to and keep up the vitality of the body. Co-operation is also necessary.

We as a people, have been called out from the various denominations to accomplish a mission by them totally neglected, and in many particulars, totally discarded, viz., the proximity and personal reign of Jesus the Messiah. The proclamation of his coming and a preparation for that event are the chief elements of that mission. Other topics are associated, it is true, but, to sound out this proclamation is our great work.

How shall this be done? Shall it be done by individual, or by combined effort? Our work is too arduous for individual success. We contend with enemies well disciplined. What can raw militia accomplish against veteran armies? We require discipline with our whole armor; and union superadded. We have our families for elementary drill; our separate churches for more public exercise, and our whole body for more general and efficient conflict.

In our families we prepare ourselves for congregational work; in the congregation, we drill for general field work. These points are so familiar to you that I need not dwell. You are familiar with the nature and the vastness of our mission. The problem now before us for solution is, How can this work be accomplished with the greatest efficiency? Ours is mission work like that of the angel of the Apocalypse, flying through mid heaven with an everlasting glad tidings, or the glad tidings of the everlasting age. We have two classes of missionaries on the wing. (1) The living missionary. (2) The Flying Roll, (the printed sheet). With the living missionary you are quite familiar. On this class it is not my purpose to dwell. Of the Flying Roll, I am now especially interested. Of these rolls we have four classes. (1) The sacred Scriptures, which is our only authoritative text book: (2) our journals; (3) our tracts; (4) our books. Of the Bible it is not necessary to speak. We all have it, and profess to love it, and implicitly obey its commands. The more we study that word the more of the spirit we shall imbibe, and the more efficiently we can work. This will readily be granted, whatever be our daily practice.

(2) Our Journals.—Of these, only one, THE RESTITUTION, now claims our special notice. Of its history under various names, you are better informed, perhaps than myself, of the future rather than its past I am more particularly interested. What is its field? What is its mission? How can its efficiency be increased? These are questions of great interest to the entire brotherhood. I shall be allowed, therefore, to speak freely, hoping that what I may say will meet with some little approbation, at least.

THE RESTITUTION is our home and foreign Missionary. Its field is the world, its pupils are all, in every land, of the Anglo-Saxon world who will read and investigate its contents. It enters the dwellings, (at home and abroad) of those where no living missionary can be sustained. To many it is their only minister, pointing them to the life and reign of that age which hastens greatly. Whoever helps sustain that weekly messenger, adds a mite to sustain our most efficient missionary. As the President of that Association which soon meets to deliberate on the ways and means of sustaining that Journal and enlarging its circulation, allow me to say, that you can count on me to render it all the support that my circumstances will allow. My domestic circumstances and my own publications are at present, a severe tax on my limited means, but I have consecrated what little I possess to the cause of him whose it is, and whose servant I am, and design to be while he spares my life. I will aid to sustain Bro. Chaplin as its Editor, as long as he is willing to fill that chair. His ability, natural and acquired, fit him to discharge the duties of that office in a manner that does great credit to the cause we advocate. His chair cannot be filled by any other one in my knowledge. You may find others to sit in his chair, but there will be ample space about him unoccupied. His library, his brain and his heart, are such as I, in my long life, have not often seen. These are my honest convictions from personal knowledge.

Other publications are useful, such as tracts and books. We need, what other denominations call "A Book Concern." Under efficient management, such an institution would be self sustaining, and render great service to the cause.

My domestic affairs and "proof reading" will confine me very closely at home for the next seven weeks.

I regret that I was called away so suddenly from the Argos Conference. Mrs. Westbee is suffering under nervous prostration. How it will terminate I do not know. I ask an interest in the prayers of all our people. Kind regards to yourself, your wife, and to all the brethren. Please write me when you can spare time. Yours in hope.

J. P. WESTBEE.

Conference Report.

The Northwestern Pennsylvania A. C. Conference met, pursuant to notice, with the church at East Branch, Warren Co., Oct. 9th and 10th, and was called to order by the President. The churches represented were Oil City, Edinboro, Reetville, Sutton Hill, East Branch, and Chapmanville by letter. Preaching brethren present: Elder C. W. Stephens, J. W. Niles, Newell Wood and W. Darrow. The reports of churches gave a good showing that they are all in a live condition, each church supporting a Sunday School, with one exception, where there were only four believers. Elder Miles was reported as doing a good work at Wallaceville, having set a church of fourteen persons in order at that place. On Saturday evening Elders Wood and Stephens assisted at the ordination of Brother J. W. Niles, which was a very impressive service. The thanks of the secretary are extended to the brother who kindly sent in resolutions of condolence in regard to the death of her father. The invitation of the Oil City church to the conference to hold its next session at that place was accepted. Adjourned to meet at the call of the chair.

FRAGMENTS OF THE FEAST.

"Jesus saith to Philip when He saw the great company, Whence shall we buy bread that these may eat? And this He said to prove him: for He Himself knew what He would do."

What company so great that the "omnific word," the opening of the Divine hand, the instant easy exertion of Divine beneficence cannot feed to the full! How readily we acknowledge this! Yet how often does God find it needful to start this question in our short-sighted minds, in our forgetful memories, in our unbelieving hearts! He knows what he will do. He has it in his gracious purpose to supply all our needs however great they may be, however numerous the months to be filled. He is always ready to be put to the proof. God is able to make all grace abound toward you that ye always—having sufficiency for all things—may abound unto every good work."

And his favorite mode of answering these questions that rise in our minds, and sometimes force themselves from our lips—his general mode of silencing the desponding reply "Two hundred penny-worth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one may take a little," is by proceeding at once before our eyes, to demonstrate at one and the same moment his care for us, his munificent provision, his inexhaustible resources, his unexpected Omnipotence. Hardly do we despairingly inquire "What are these among so many?" ere his blessing breaks alike the bread that feeds us and our hearts that for one moment had forgotten or distrusted his Divine ability.

But will we discover that wastefulness is as obnoxious in his sight as unbelief? "Shall we sin that grace may abound?" Shall we be careless in using or saving the lavish provision he has made for our need? While we are yet feeding upon his bounty do we not hear his voice, "Gather up the fragments that nothing be lost?" Shall we remember that Divine provision is no reason for human prodigality? Doubtless in all this vast universe of seeming decay and apparent waste, there is not an atom once created that has ever been or ever will be lost. What remains from one season reappears in the fruitfulness of the next. The vapor vanishes only to revisit the earth in the subsequent shower. The vast profusion of color, of fragrance, of verdure, of fruit, only demonstrates the Divine goodness whose tender mercies are over all his works. One cannot say to the other I have no need of thee. Bod, and mind almost unconsciously drink in the delicious draughts of Divine plenty, so well suited to supply our every need. And all that God demands of us is, that, having fed ourselves upon his ever miraculous provisions, we shall not abuse his very bounty by neglecting to "gather up the fragments that nothing be lost." Our luxuries may well give place to the necessities of others, and our necessities to the still greater needs of others. "The very dogs gather up the crumbs under the table." And humanity all about us may be hungering and starving for "the fragments that remain" from our feast, and that may be lost by our prodigal carelessness. Therefore, "gather them together," and make proper distribution of the fragments after we ourselve have been "filled."—E. I. D. Pepper.

The Joys of Prayer.

Even in those parts of prayer that might seem painful, there is a pleasure that would be ill exchanged for this world's most boasted bliss. In the bitterness of repentant sorrow for sin, there is a sweetness; in the agony of fervent supplication for pardon, there is a joy, as much superior to the best the world can boast, as the heavens are higher than the earth—

"The broadest smile or darling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than penyer's repentant tears."

Of what a happy, heaven-foretasting life the children of God might enjoy on earth if they would live a life of prayer! How calm they might be in the midst of the wildest storms! How joyful in the midst of deepest tribulations! How composed and cheerful, while all around was agitation and alarm—the smile of heaven sparkling around their path, the peace of heaven dwelling within their hearts. It is said that travelers in Alpine regions are encompassed with a clear atmosphere, and cloudless sunshine, whilst traversing the summit of those lofty mountains, at the very time that the world below them is wrapt in mists and darkness, and thunder-clouds are bursting at their feet. Even thus does prayer lift the believer to a loftier and serener region, far, far above the clouds and storms that darken and distract the world below. In that region of purity and peace, the atmosphere is clear and calm; and the light of God's countenance shines brightly on the believer's soul, while he sees the thunder-clouds of earthly care and sorrow rolling beneath his feet; thus realising the beautiful illustration of the poet:

"As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its base the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head."

One Less.

"One cross the less remains for me to bear,
Already borne is that of yesterday;
That of today shall we tomorrow share,
Tomorrow's with itself, shall pass away."

Yes, this conflict cannot always last. The wonderful warfare in which we are engaged must sooner or later end. Each trial through which we pass makes the number one less for the time to come. Each temptation we endure or overcome lessens the number of those with which we can possibly be assailed. In this earthly state our afflictions are truly varied and numberless. But each one as it goes by and is numbered with the past, ever diminishes the sum still allotted to us. The difficulties of the way once overcome make the whole along life's journey so much less to come. The possible shadows that enshroud us diminish so much the more, as we approach the light of the heavenly world. Many disappointments we have had will be shared by us no more forever. Life's great book are long will be written.

Yet with the good man the greater trials that come in life's wondrous drama, the greater triumphs are shared. The darker the shadows that sometimes darken our way the more glorious the light that will dispel them all and cheer us on to glory and to God. The fiercer the deadly conflict the more wondrous and signal the victory! When we have patiently and prayerfully repelled temptations we shall come forth as gold tried in the furnace. So one by one our crosses and our trials show always the number less. As our days and years glide away our sorrows and sighings must go with them. The number, beloved, is wondrously diminishing! Soon will come the end, when death itself shall be swallowed up of life, and this mortal put on immortality. Sweet by and by that will plant our feet within the confines of an eternal Spring! Hail fair day that will bring us to our Father's house!

"The storm that yesterday ploughed the sea
Is buried now beneath its level blue:
One storm the fewer remains for me,
Ere sky and earth are made forever new."

—I. N. Kenaga.

Ye Must Be Born Again.

Why? Because such is one's natural state that you cannot repair it; you cannot build upon it; you cannot put the new wine into the old bottles. There must be a total remaking. Wholly new foundations must be put in. The old is so bad that you cannot count it good, and make it better, and finish it up as best—meet for the Master's use. Look at the natural man through the clear glasses of God's word and see how dreadful he is in all his parts: His "whole head is sick;" his "eyes are full of adultery," and cannot cease from sin; his "mouth is full of cursing and bitterness;" "the poison of asps is under" his "lips;" his tongue uses deceit; his throat is an open sepulchre: his "heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," his "hands are full of blood;" and his "feet are swift to shed blood." How graphic is Isaiah's description of one or many such people! "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint; from the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores; they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment."

Apply this to his body if you will, but is he any better within? How is the mind? "It is enmity against God." This is its nature, not his relation, as though he might be hostile toward him; his mind is hostility itself. His understanding is "darkened," being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in him. His "thoughts are thoughts of iniquity;" his heart deviseth wicked imaginations; his conscience is "seared as with a hot iron;" both mind and conscience are defiled. What a condition! Such men made "better?" Impossible! In them "dwelleth no good thing." Indeed,

"How sad our state by nature is:
Our sin, how deep it stains!
And Satan binds our captive souls
Fast in his slavish chains."

Well then did Jesus say, "Ye must be born again." But a new birth is a new creation, and only he who created at first can create again. But for this cause came Christ into the world and now stands with outstretched arms inviting to himself. And shall we not at once arise and say,

"With this cold, stony heart of mine,
Jesus, to thee I flee;
And to thy grace my soul resign,
To be renewed by thee?"

Thousands have so come and found their darkness turned into day—with them old things have passed away, and behold, all things have become new. Try what others have tried and be like them, gloriously saved.

THE PRIVILEGE OF PRAYER.

Prayer is not a consultation with the highest wisdom which this world can supply; it is not intercourse with an angel or spirit made perfect: but it is an approach to the living God. It is an access to the high and holy One who inhabiteth eternity; it is detailing in the ear of Divine sympathy every sorrow; it is consulting with Divine wisdom on every want. And this not once in a life-time, or for a few moments on a stated day, but at any moment, at every time of need. Whatever be the day of your distress, it is a day when prayer is allowable. Whatever be the time of your calamity, it is a time when prayer is available. However early in the morning you seek the gate of access, you find it already open. However deep the midnight moment when you find yourself in the sudden arms of death, the winged prayer can bring an instant Savior near; and this wherever you are. It needs not that you shall ascend some special Pisgah or Moriah: it needs not that you should enter some awful shrine, or put off your shoes on some holy ground. Could a moment be rested on every spot from which an acceptable prayer has passed away, and on which a prompt answer has come down, we should find "Jehovah-shammah"—"the Lord hath been here"—inscribed on many a cottage hearth and many a dungeon floor. We should find it not only in Jerusalem's proud temple and David's cedar galleries, but in the fisherman's cottage by the bank of Gennesaret, and in the upper chamber where Pentecost began.

Uttermost.

How rich are the terms Scripture applies to salvation through Jesus. "He is able to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by him." What can go farther than "uttermost!" Dr. Clarke says: He is able to save from the power, guilt, nature, and punishment of sin—to the uttermost—to all intents, degrees and purposes; and always, and in, and through all times, places and circumstances; for all this is implied in the original word. The Dutch Bible translates the word "per-

...found... Dr. Leander ... place." Berleaburg... perfectly," Catholic Bible (Ger... "eternally," Dr. Stier ... renders "most complete." The original word seems to combine the two ideas of continuity and utmost completeness. Hence Jesus saves forever to the uttermost. But you must come unto God by him, and keep coming all the time, which implies a complete separation from sin and an entire consecration to God. Here is full salvation for you, hungering soul. Christ offers to you the overflowing well of salvation, thirsty heart. You are not straitened in him, you may receive from his fulness, grace for grace. Come and be saved forever to the uttermost!—Evangelical Messenger.

Exegetical.

PASSING UNDER THE ROD.

It was the custom of the Jews to select the tenth of their sheep after this manner. The lambs were separated from the dams and enclosed in a sheepcote with only one narrow way out; the dams were at the entrance. On opening the gate the lambs hastened to join the dams, and a man placed at the entrance, with a rod dipped in paint, touched every tenth lamb, and so marked it with his rod, saying, "let this be holy." Hence saith the Lord by the prophet, "I will cause you to pass under the rod." Ezek. xx. 37.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first of January, 1886, and consequently is six months past due now. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

PATIENCE.

Ye have great need, O weary hand
When sunset's gold shall flood the land,
And bid thy daily task undone
While evening shadows slowly come,
Yet rest is here, and rest is thine
"It shall be light at evening time."

Ye have great need, O watchful eye
So often raised to one on high,
Watching for light to rift the cloud
While earth is wrapt in night's dark shroud,
Though tears may fall like ceaseless rain
Thine eye shall brighten soon again.

Ye have great need, O weary heart
Whose restless fevered pulses beat
O'er thorny path and rocky height
In noontide's heat, or starless night;
But on the crystal river's shore
Is peace and rest forevermore.

Ye have great need, O weary heart
Whose quiv'ring cords would gladly part
If not the burning cross be riven
Beneath the loving hand of Heaven—
Today forget the cruel strife
And crown with patience all your life.

"Rest in the Lord, and wait for Him"
Though days be dark and hope be dim
Though martyr fires with naked feet
Be legal still, while hearts shall beat,
For hope and promise both are thine
"It shall be light at evening time."

CAPITAL vs. LABOR.

This is the absorbing topic of the day because of its effects upon the masses of the people. It has been much discussed by the pulpit and the press; but they both have failed to give light on the subject. They have not shown when or how it commenced, nor the cause of it; but their conclusions are that it will soon be settled, peace, harmony and prosperity will prevail, etc., but they fail to produce from either Scripture or reason, any argument of proof to sustain their conclusions, therefore from them we must dissent. I can recollect the time when if a person spoke a disrespectful word against an employer in the presence of an employe, he would resent it as quickly as if spoken against himself, and vice versa if spoken against an employe. When did this antagonism commence? The first I know of it was at the time of the southern rebellion, help was scarce, and the working classes formed labor unions, strongly tainted with socialism. They saw a chance to take advantage of the necessities of their employers; they yielded to the evil impulses of their nature, and then commenced an unjust course of dictation to their employers. I conversed with a number of employers who said they were not allowed to run their own business, but were compelled to submit to the dictation of their employes or close their business. But such a state of things could not continue always, a reaction must come sooner or later, and when the reaction did come no doubt many of them retaliated against their employes. I knew of one large chair manufactory in Massachusetts which was closed for some length of time and then started with few hands, and increased by ones and twos as they could get them, and this was because the firm discharged a drunken, worthless fellow; and this shows the unjust dictation of labor unions of that day; and this course of dictation and retaliation has been going on and increasing to the present time; of this past the few months have given abundant proof. This antagonism has assumed such alarming proportions that it has disarranged the business of the whole country the present season and caused a direct loss of millions of dollars to the working classes, and untold millions to the business of the country. Although these facts are admitted, yet our wise men have failed to show a cause for such a state of unrest among the people in this enlightened day and age of the world. Most of what has been said and published has been in favor of labor organizations, and these unions being controlled by the socialistic element, have been encouraged to commit more unlawful acts, and thus the breach has increased instead of being healed. One of our great men at a public meeting in New York said: "Socialism cannot grow on this soil," yet facts show that it has grown more luxuriant on this than any other soil, and those men and ministers who take this serpent to their bosom will find to their sorrow, when it has got sufficient warmth and vitality, that it will sting them to their vitals. The leaders say "they will not stop the labor agitation until every monopoly and business firm in the country is broken up and every man his own boss, and there are not any wage workers."

Mr. Powderly says they are not sufficiently organized, and he keeps hundreds of missionaries out to form unions in new places. He further says: "When a man joins the Knights of Labor he lays aside his religion and politics," and he might have added, their business. If they [illegible] work; if they say stop work, they have to obey whether they wish to or not, and the same with boycotting and many other acts to injure every person who offends them. The cause of all this trouble is the increasing pride and selfishness of this age, the inordinate desire for wealth and pleasure. It is a fulfillment of the prophecies of both the Old and New Testaments. Read what Paul says in his second letter to Timothy, 3d chapter, "But know this, that in the last days grievous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, haughty, railers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy without natural affection, implacable, slanderers, without self control, fierce, not lovers of good, traitors, head strong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God," etc.—Revised Version.

This is Paul's description of what the state of society would be in the last days. By last days I understand the last or closing years of the present dispensation and the ushering in of a new era. And now compare the state of society throughout the civilized world with Paul's prophecy and we perceive that it is having a literal fulfillment at the present time, and we have no doubt but that these wicked traits of character will increase as we near the end. With regard to the future the Scriptures are much neglected by both ministers and people. "Watchmen what of the night? The morning cometh and also the night." But the night of trouble must be past before the morning of peace to this world can come. The Scriptures contain abundant proofs of our position on the chart of time. The prophet Daniel delineated the long course of events which would transpire from his day down to the setting up of God's everlasting kingdom. Commencing with the Babylonian kingdom, the Medo Persian kingdom, the Grecian kingdom, and also the Roman kingdom in its different stages, it has existed in its divided state for centuries, and the stone kingdom is the next in order; the stone cut out of the mountain without hands (without any human agency) becomes a mountain and fills the whole earth, and the signs of the times indicate its near approach. "Wicked men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." This world will grow worse and worse until Christ shall come literally in person and set up his kingdom. The other kingdoms described by the prophet were all literal, and so will Christ's kingdom be literal, not spiritual. His first coming was literal and so will be his second: "This same Jesus who is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." His second coming will not be as the babe of Bethlehem, but as the lion of the tribe of Judah. It is written in the 2nd Psalm, "Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession, and thou shalt rule them with a rod of iron and dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel."

We read in 2nd Rev., "And he that overcometh, and he that keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give authority over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, as the vessels of the potter are broken to shivers." Luke xix. 27. "Howbeit bring thither these mine enemies who would not that I should reign over them and slay them before me."

No conversion taught in the above texts but subjugation. Christ said, "Nevertheless when the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth." He compares the state of society at his second coming to Sodom and Gomorrah, and to the world before the flood. These comparisons cannot refer to a converted world.

A few weeks ago one of our great men, referring to this subject, and to suggestions that had been made concerning the preventing of socialists being allowed to come to this country, said, "Let them come, nihilists, communists, anarchists, socialists, etc., we can control them." But how? While the leading object of a majority of our politicians and statesmen is place and plunder, some of our judges are suborners of perjury to save themselves and friends from disgrace and punishment. Can such a government work out any moral reform among the lawless classes? No! Impossible, blind infatuation. "The seers hath he blinded." What are the facts, comparing the past and present, why, there are more murders committed in a month now than there were in a whole year forty years ago. How is justice administered? Why, if a poor man steals a few dollars he is pretty certain to go to state prison for a term of years, but if a man steals a hundred [illegible] only to be put caught and convicted, he will not get more than two or three years in prison, and this is very irritating to the working classes, because many lose their little savings by these contemptible rascals. We cannot hold the church blameless in this matter, for in pride and ostentation the Protestant outstrips the Catholic church; the poorer classes among the Catholics can attend church, while in our cities the working classes cannot take their families and attend a popular Protestant church, therefore many attend the meetings of the labor unions, which are generally socialistic and infidel harangues, and have a very demoralizing effect upon those who attend them, which in some measure accounts for the increase of infidelity in our day.

We read in Rev. 13th chap., of a power that should arise and forbid all people buying and selling except those who have the mark of the beast or the number of his name, said number is 666. And whether this has reference to socialism and boycotting, we must wait and watch for further developments. We think it has reference to them because it is further stated in the same book that the last plagues, the last judgments upon this wicked world will be upon those who have the mark of the beast and the number of his name.

No matter to what length of unjust dictation and boycotting these socialists shall go, it will be in vain to expect any protection from our law makers; on the contrary, congress has passed and the president approved a law to legalize and protect these societies. Not that our law makers care for the interests of the workingman, but a society that controls thousands of votes (no matter what its character) must be encouraged for the purpose of getting those votes.

Strife, antagonism and unrest is the order of the day the world over, even the elements appear to be unduly agitated, the winds, waves and electricity are causing destruction and death in many places, the troubles of the last days of this dispensation are coming upon us, the last day scoffers are upon the stage of acting their part of the drama, "saying where is the promise of his coming, for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."

Men may prophesy peace, but God's word will be fulfilled, and it behooves us individually to watch, to lay aside every weight, to keep clear of all socialistic societies, put away pride and ostentation, and live as becomes the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, then if it shall be our lot to suffer affliction, it will be of short duration, and the end will be eternal peace in God's everlasting kingdom.—S. Harper.

Trust in God.

The only being in the universe who is absolutely trustworthy is God. Not anything nor everything else can be relied on to support us in those hours when we most need support. Not riches, for they "shall certainly make to themselves wings and fly away," and "he that trusteth in his riches shall fall." Not our own strength, for that "is perfect weakness." Not our own righteousness, for the woes denounced against such as trusted in themselves that they were righteous, prove that it is untrustworthy. Nor are earthly friends always to be relied on. "Take ye heed every one of his neighbor, and trust ye not in any brother; for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbor will walk with slanders." And if they were thoroughly faithful and willing, they have not the power to help us in the hour of greatest need. Nor is our own wisdom sufficient for our support and guidance. Hence the command: "Trust in the Lord with all thy heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding."

The study of the Word of God will not only convince us that he, and he alone, is worthy of our entire trust, but will show how great interest we have in trusting him, how much he is able to do for us, and how ready and willing he is to honor our faith. How precious and abundant are his promises to protect and bless those who trust in him! "They that put their trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be moved, but abideth forever." "And the Lord shall help them and deliver them; he shall deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in him." "Trust in the Lord and do good, and thou shalt dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed."

But there are other conditions of intelligent trust in God beside the knowledge of his trustworthiness—his ability [illegible] his will, and unless [illegible] not any doubt of God's goodness or ability to bless us that makes it difficult to trust him; it is the consciousness of a lack of harmony with his will. It is when our sins come between us and God, and hide from us the light of his countenance, that we are most tempted to doubt his care for us—not that he would help us if he could, but that we have put ourselves out of the reach of his help. "And there is truth in what we feel, for we rightly judge our wrong-doing has taken us away from him. We are thrust out of his sight by the frown of our own consciences; we feel cast away from his presence; we feel that we have forfeited his love, and we interpret his disposition toward us by our sense of demerit." In short, we feel that we are not complying with the conditions on which God can bless us. Wherefore, an indispensable condition of trust in God is the consciousness that we are doing his will, and that we are not guilty of any willful disobedience to his commands. "If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God." If we have confidence in ourselves, in the rectitude of our intentions and life, we can trust God fully and availingly. Our trust in God rests with certainty upon his help, when it lives in us throughout our daily life and influences all our thoughts and actions. It is such a trust that enables us to commit ourselves and our dearest interests to the unwearied love of our Heavenly Father, knowing that he will care for us, and, according to his promise, make all things work together for good to them that love him. This trust brings peace and hope and strength, amid the severest vicissitudes of life; so that, whether we are tried with pain or bereavement, or beset with temptation, we shall still be able to rest in the everlasting arms of him who careth for us.—Methodist.

Passed Through the Fire.

A person the other evening spoke of high price watches, and of one in particular, whose works cost $500 00. A scientific man bought it and traveled with it round the world for the space of one year, and the watch had not lost one moment's time; it had never varied an iota in keeping time; but what made this watch keep such good time and command such a price? Simply this, "It had passed through the fire," thoroughly tested for every emergency, but the fire process made it perfect. So we must pass through the fire to be strong and entire, thoroughly complete in God. We may feel the "heat" not pleasant, the fire burns, the flame scorches, the weary stay in the furnace, very hard to be borne; but if we only bear it and let the fire burn all dross out of us we will keep perfect time for God. So free to men the race set before us because set loose from all incumbrances of the flesh. We can run faster, in other words we can be fully equipped for the warfare. If we are willing to endure this fire the refiner's face will be reflected on us, and we will emerge into the glorious sunlight of God and enjoy the liberty of God; for nothing is so slavish as this thraldom of self; it binds us with cords of pride, envy, unrest and worldly-mindedness. But freedom from these things brings intense happiness and quietness and rest: therefore shrink not from suffering.

The art of conversation is one of the most valuable qualifications for the teacher. Children are delighted with one who has the ability to talk with them in a sensible and entertaining manner. It is admitted that the art of conversation can be taught as a branch of school-work, and by the guidance of certain general rules the teacher can exert an influence, by her style and example, that will be of great value to the young in securing for them felicity of expression and ease of manner. Children always listen to a good narrative with delight, and to listen well is almost as desirable as to talk well. Conversation is a mutual matter, and in real life "small talk" is the basis of a large proportion of social intercourse. Talks with children should be varied, natural, free in style, governed always by the rules of good breeding, such as avoiding interruptions, personal insinuations, indefinite allusions, or double meanings, cheap witticisms, etc. The great secret of a successful talker consists in displaying genius in bringing out the thoughts of others. Children analyse and philosophize with great correctness; and the teacher who talks too much or who aims to show her own superiority will soon lose her power to interest or instruct the young. It requires wisdom to talk well, and sound judgment must be exercised when to keep silence.

The Choice of Hercules.

Choose thou, oh, youth, thy path in life;
Let not events decide;
Be not, in life's remorseless strife,
Like weeds upon a tide.

Determine what thy aim shall be.
Toil with that aim in view;
If circumstances hinder thee,
Make circumstances new.

Be not the iron that is bent
And beaten as it glows,
But be, through toil and fixed intent,
The arm that gives the blows.

They win in life who will to win,
They fail who faint and fear;
To him with dauntless heart within
No obstacles appear.

There is no mount to high too scale,
No stream too wide to span,
For him who wills he will not fail.'
Who will and therefore can.

So choose, oh, youth, thy path in life,
With firm resolve decide;
Bring all thy powers into the strife,
Success shall thee betide!

—Philip Burroughs Strong.

How to Keep a Situation.

The following bit of good advice is from the workingman, and is worthy the attention of all our readers:

Lay it down as a foundation rule that you will be "faithful in that which is least." Pick up the loose nails, bits of twine, and clean wrapping paper, and put them in their places. Be ready to throw in an odd hour or half hour's time when it will be an accommodation, and don't seem to make a merit of it. Do it heartily. Though not a word be said be sure your employer will make a note of it. Make yourself indispensable to him, and he will lose many of the opposite kind before he will part with you.

Those young men who watch the time to see every second their working hour is up, who leave, no matter what state the work may be in, at precisely the instant, who calculate the exact amount they can slight their work and yet not get reproved, who are lavish of their employer's goods, will always be the first to receive notice that times are dull and their services are no longer required.

Capital Letters.

Many children as well as grown persons do not know just where to use capital letters. No writing looks well when nearly every word begins with a capital letter. We here give you a few of the principal words where they should be used.

Always begin with a capital letter:
The first word of every sentence.
The first word after every full stop.
The first word after an introductory clause.
The first word of a direct quotation.
The first word in every line of poetry.

Proper names—of persons, countries, cities, rivers, mountains, months, days, etc.

All the names of the Deity should begin with capitals.

The pronoun I and interjection O should be capitals.

Besides these there are several other places where it is proper to use capitals, but if you learn the above rules well, you then can have a lesson of the more difficult places of their use.

A Boy Grown Up.

Young people rarely realize, when criticising their elders, that the traits or habits that seem to them obnoxious were formed in early life. If their manners are rude, if they lack tact, if, they are not well informed, it is because they have not made use of their opportunities. Manners are the truest indications of character. A discourteous person is both careless and selfish, for the best manners are but the expression of the golden rule; they are the card of introduction to strangers. A friend can introduce you to good society, but he cannot keep you there; that depends on yourself.

A boy of kindly nature is rarely rude. A boy of selfish nature is polite only when his own desires are not interfered with. Every man is the result of his own boyhood and youth. If he has read good books, kept himself informed of passing events, he becomes what the world terms a well-informed, intelligent man. If he has wasted his time in trifling conversation, read only sensational books and papers, neglected to develop the talent which he surely possesses, he becomes a superficial, a tiresome, if not a wicked man.

If as a boy he has not cultivated the graces and amenities of life, he cannot expect to become that most delightful of men, a polished gentleman. If as a boy he has not studied to avoid collisions with those about him, has not recognized the rights of others, has not cultivated a desire to lead men to higher motives, to give to others the benefit of his own opportunities, he becomes that most unfortunate person, a tactless man—a nuisance wherever [illegible] and carefully avoid their fault in it, both of mind and body. Remember the old adage, "By others' faults correct your own."—Christian Union.

Brevities.

The passage of the Suez canal is now made in sixteen hours by the aid of the electric lights, which make night travel possible.

The Brooklyn bridge is found to be thoroughly magnetized, the wire cables and iron work showing that the constant jarring of the structure has induced magnetism from the earth.

The present cost of operating the railroads of the country with steam power is in round numbers $502,000,000 per annum; but to carry on the same amount of work with men and horses would cost the country $11,308,500,000.

At the Mechernich Lead works in Germany the tallest chimney in the world has recently been completed. It is 440 feet high, six feet more than the famous chimney of the St. Rollox Chemical Works near Glasgow, Scotland, which, until the German one was built, was without a rival. The flue of the Mechernich chimney is 11½ feet at the bottom and 10 feet at the top.

There is a pool in Utah only a foot deep and situated at a very high altitude, that refuses to freeze even in the severest winters. There is another that mysteriously replenishes itself with half grown trout. One stream, though clear as crystal to the eye and tasteless, stains all the vegetation it flows over a deep brown. A warm spring near Salt Lake City, is the strongest sulphur water in the world. A hot spring a few miles off, with waters so hot you can hardly put your hand into them, and as bright as diamonds, is one of the most remarkable combinations of chemicals ever analyzed.

The first coin ever issued in this country was the old-fashioned cart-wheel cent. The first issue was in 1793, and there were three dies made. With the single exception of the year 1845, there has been no break in the issue of cents from that time to the present. The labor required to secure a sample of the three varieties of cents made in 1793 is very great, and they bring from three to five dollars each. The cent of 1794 is a trifle more common and can be bought for about sixty cents, while a sample of the issue of 1795 is worth $1 25. It was this year that the liberty cap was changed to the fillet head, and these were issued regularly for thirteen years, when the Goddess of Liberty appeared on the face of the coin, with thirteen stars surrounding it.

Berlin papers copy from the Germania the account of an important discovery in glass manufacture made by Friedrich Siemens of Dresden. He has succeeded in casting glass in the same way as molten metal is cast, and obtaining an article corresponding to cast metal. This cast glass is hard, not dearer in production than cast iron, and has the advantage of transparency, so that all flaws can be detected before it is applied to practical use. It will be much less exposed to injury from atmospheric influences than iron. The process of production is not difficult the chief feature being rapid cooling. The hardness and resisting power of this cast glass are so great that experiments are just now being carried out at the Seimens glass foundry at Dresden with the purpose of ascertaining whether the material could be employed for rails on railways.—London Times.

From the new volume published by the Italian General Director of Statistics, which contains data from 1878 to 1884; the following figures are taken respecting murder and manslaughter in the following countries. The proportion of individuals condemned is for every 100,000 persons: In Italy, 8.12; France, 1.66; Belgium, 1.78; Germany, 1.11; Great Britain, 0.60; Austria, 2.24; Hungary, 6.09; Spain, 7.33. Thus Italy, Spain, and Hungary have the unenviable precedence in murder. In offense against morality Italy shows more favorably. The proportion of persons condemned for such offenses is: In Belgium, 15.11 in every 100,000 inhabitants; Germany, 14.03; France, 9.77; Austria, 9.18; Hungary, 6.62; Italy, 8.77; England, 1.76; Spain, 0.96. Germany occupies the first place in robbery, the proportions being in round numbers: Germany 222; Italy, 154; Great Britain, 147; Belgium, 128; France, 113; Hungary, 77; Austria, 60; Spain, 58. Taking all crimes together Germany is at the top of the scale and England at the bottom. The volume, which is compiled from [illegible] 1878 to 1884, and the proportion [illegible] 000 inhabitants is reduced to 20.62.

OBITUARIES.

BENNETT.—At the residence of her sister in Madison, Lenawee County, Michigan, October 31, 1888, of cancer, Sister Margaret Bennett, aged 43 years.

Seven years ago the deceased first heard the "glad tidings of the kingdom of God and the things pertaining to Jesus Christ" as set forth by Jesus and the apostles, proclaimed by the writer in a series of meetings held in the township of Palmyra. She was the first of seven as the result of these meetings to become obedient to the truth. Her life ever since has been of such a character as to adorn her profession. In her those in trouble always found a helper and the poor a friend. By her death the neighborhood has lost a good citizen, society an efficient member, and the church an earnest worker. She leaves a husband and an adopted daughter, and a number of more distant relatives to mourn her loss. The writer spoke words of comfort to a large concourse of people from the following, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." We then laid Sister Maggie in the silent tomb to await the coming of the Master.

HE FAILETH NOT.

I have tried love, and I have known love to fail.
Have trusted friends and found that friends forgot,
Sought help from my own heart without avail,—
He faileth not.

Neither by day nor night, in age or youth,
In poverty and in the fairest lot,
In sorrow and in joy his word is truth,—
He faileth not.

If I should let all other comfort go,
And every other promise were forgot,
My soul would sit and sing, because I know
He faileth not.

I cannot tell what winds of God may blow,—
What safe or perilous ways may be my lot;
But I have little care, for this I know,

ISRAEL'S LITERAL RESTORATION AND GLORY NOT FORFEITED BY ISRAEL'S APOSTACY.

The spiritualizers of prophecy concerning Israel, deny the literal fulfilment of the promised and predicted glory, on the ground that the promise and prophecy alike were conditional as to their fulfilment; that is, that the realization of both promise and prophecy were made dependent on Israel's righteousness. Obedience was the condition. Inasmuch, therefore, as the condition was not fulfilled, so neither could the promise or prediction be fulfilled. Disobedience operated the forfeiture of the national blessing forever. So, in like manner, under the covenant of grace, not less than under the covenant of law, the condition not being fulfilled by the nation, viz., faith in Christ, the forfeiture has become a fact the second time, because Jesus and his gospel were rejected. Take it either way, under law or under grace, the forfeiture of the final and perpetual possession of the land and the glory is complete. The Jews have been as a race, and nation, cast out from the covenant forever, and stand before God today, just as Arabs, Turks and Teutons stand. The only future for the seed of Abraham is either as individual units, to believe in Christ and come into the church, or to be lost. National restoration and conversion, repossession of their own land, and glorification therein, there is none. The prophecies are to be spiritualized, and are fulfilled in Christ and the Christian Church. A literal fulfilment is impossible. Everything, save the promise and prophecy of personal salvation has failed through Israel's disobedience and unbelief. Such, in general terms, is the view taken by the class referred to.

The view is ruinous in every way in which it can be contemplated.

1. It assumes what is required to be proved, viz.: that none but conditional promises are made with respect to Israel, and that unconditional prophecies are excluded: a task never yet accomplished.

2. It confounds promise and prediction; the absolute and unerring foresight and announcement of God's purpose, with the moral warnings appended to conditional promises and threatenings.

3. It identifies the word forfeiture with the temporary suspension of the promise and prediction and the temporary national chastisement of Israel, for their disobedience and unbelief.

4. It omits the vital theological truth, that while all the blessings of grace and glory, whether material or spiritual, are, when viewed on the human side of the question, ordinarily said to be conditioned on human obedience and faith, those same promises and predictions, viewed on the divine side, are ever said to be unconditioned, rave by the unchangeability of the being, truth and power of God, which can never fail. God has no other way in which to deal with man or himself. What men call conditions, are themselves the gift of God to man. Every act of obedience, and every duty required, is both a gift and a grace of the Holy Spirit.

5. It forgets that the law was merely a preparation, to demonstrate the failure of man to inherit anything by his own righteousness, and that while the fulfilment of the promises and predicted glory was, humanly speaking, conditioned on faith in Christ, the heir of all the covenants, to the whole extent of blessing both temporal and spiritual, yet the fulfilment of this condition stands in the power of God and not in the power of man; in the covenant of grace, God unconditionally promising to do for Israel what Israel is unable to do for itself, viz.: to give acceptance and faith, to sprinkle with clean water, to renew, to sanctify, to regather, and restore.

6. It contradicts God's own express statements that, so far as he is concerned, the fulfilment of his purpose toward Israel and their land, in the latter day, is conditioned on nothing but his own sovereign grace and will. The accomplishment is not for their sakes, nor on their account, but for "his own name's sake." In language the most express, Paul has declared that God's "gifts and calling" to Israel, which includes the gift of national pre-eminence, the gift of the land of Canaan, the gift of a historical mission to nationally mediate salvation to the world, not only at the first advent when diminished, but at the second advent when replenished, are absolutely irreversible and irretractible, so that it is not in the power of Israel's apostasy, or unbelief, to forfeit forever, the promise and the prediction. Their very sins and punishments are the way to their final restoration. God's covenant, Paul argues, is not to be set aside, and can not be invalidated by Israel's disobedience. After all that satan, and sin, and man, can do, God is determined to have his own way, and keep his promise. So far as they are concerned, he will cause them to fulfil the condition they have not fulfilled, by having mercy upon them, and washing away their sins, and putting his Spirit within them, and causing them to walk in his statutes; yea, opening their graves, and regathering them from wherever they are scattered, and planting them again in their own land, to be plucked out no more forever. What certain writers choose to call "conditions," are veritable parts of the salvation itself, unconditionally promised, predicted and to be fulfilled, to the glory of God. Repentance, faith, and righteousness shall be his gift, and not their payment. Meridian sunshine is not clearer.

7. It makes God's whole plan, purpose, will, providence, prophecy and promise alike, as also God's foreknowledge, dependent on man's merit, and possible only by means of the dubious contingency of man's will. Whether God shall accomplish anything, is suspended upon the changing caprice of the creature. Whether Israel shall experience what God has foretold, and sworn by himself shall occur, is for Israel, and not for God to say. Prophecy becomes a plexus of oriental exaggerations and fancies, requiring a spiritual or figurative interpretation, in order to save the semblance of either wisdom, truth, knowledge, or power, in God. It annihilates the very idea of divine prediction, by affirming that it must fall through man's moral perverseness, or be fulfilled, if at all, through man's own righteousness. It foists upon the bosom of prophecy a glaring schism and contradiction, two opposing senses, one the historical which can not be fulfilled unless man allows it, the other the spiritual or figurative which must be fulfilled whether man is willing or not. It thereby not only dishonors God, but mocks the expectation of his people, and stones for this double injury to him and to them, by extolling its own hermeneutics as necessary to save the Bible from ruin. It makes prayer to God a folly. It brings in Christianity debtor to Jewish righteousness, and not to God's eternal purpose in spite of Jewish transgression. It closes up the future instead of revealing it. Prophecy is no longer a "sure word" and a "light," but an uncertain divine guess, and a dark cloud: no longer a support and cheer, but a corroding disappointment and pain. The Shoyl is just as good.

8. It fails to distinguish between what is common to all believers, Jews and Gentiles, and what is peculiar to Israel, in their historic mission, and relation to the kingdom of God. According to God's plan, when the "falling away," or apostasy in the branches of the "wild olive," has brought the kingdom of God on earth almost to extinction, Israel once more shall be recalled to the covenant, and re-engrafted shall again form the centerpoint of a new and mightier blessing than ever to the nations. Spiritualism is right in making the unity of the Jew and Gentile a spiritual one in Christ Jesus, where there is no difference, and honoring believers as the spiritual seed of Abraham, calling them the true circumcision. But when prophecy describes decided facts as to Israel's distinctive, historic vocation. In the last days, Israel's special mission to introduce that latter day glory, it is a deep error to interpret this as bound to fall through Israel's unbelief, which God says shall never be the case, nor ever be allowed. Israel's final mission, as such, enters into history when the Gentile apostasy has reached its culmination, and the fulness of the Gentiles has come in. It is the very soul of prophecy, and the very center of Paul's great argument. And it is inseperable from Israel's own land. The prophecies are to be interpreted just as they read. Israel has not forfeited, nor can forfeit, forever, the promised and predicted glory. It would operate the forfeiture of the whole future kingdom of God on earth.

9. It misconceives the case of Jonah and Nineveh to which it appeals to prove that the fulfilment of prophecy is contingent on men's actions, or, as it is said, is "conditioned" upon them by asserting that Nineveh's repentance overthrew a prophecy of judgment. That style of speech is mere rhetoric. Repentance overthrows nothing except Nineveh's impenitence. Any thoughtful reader can see that the threatening of destruction was not a decree of absolute ruin, but simply a moral preaching, a faithful warning of what is sure to follow continued impenitence, coupled with a call to repentance with implied salvation. It was Israel's first mission to the Gentiles, and intended to teach them a first lesson in God's way. The repentance that saved Nineveh was itself God's gift, the work of God's mercy. It was a part of Nineveh's salvation, and that result was the unconditioned purpose of God. Even so Israel's final conversion, restoration, and possession of their land, promised in the covenant made with Abraham, are unconditionally decreed of God, and shall come to pass in spite of Israel's apostacy. God has determined to be merciful to their unrighteousness, to make an end of their sin, to finish the apostasy, overcome their unbelief, and introduce everlasting righteousness, and so remove forever what men call the "forfeiture," and secure forever the predicted glory. "He will perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to Abraham." Luke i. 72, 73. What men call "conditions" are not conditions, but parts of the great salvation itself, reserved for Israel, unconditionally promised, predicted, and fulfilled, that a sovereign and gracious God may have all the glory.—N. West, D. D., in The Truth.

Affectionate Preaching.

There is something in an affectionate statement of gospel truth which is peculiarly calculated to find its way to the heart. Christianity is a religion of sympathy. It is founded on the principle of human wretchedness. It meets man in every species of sorrow and affliction. It takes him by the hand when deserted by human supports. It pierces the clouds which throw a melancholy gloom over the path of life, and opens before "the wayworn traveller" a "hope full of immortality." Let us reflect upon this peculiarity of our holy religion, and consider what advantage it gives us in our public addresses. By far the greater part of our congregations are suffering in one way or the other. We cannot enter a family, and be permitted to know what is passing within it, without perceiving that there is a worm corroding the root of their comforts; some poisoned arrow drinking up their spirits; some intolerable burden subduing their strength. To such, how suitable is the invitation of the compassionate Savior: "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will refresh you!" How appropriate is the character of the great High Priest who "is touched with the feeling of our infirmities!" To such, how adapted are the consolations of the Spirit, the promises of the gospel, and the resting-place of the saints! To overlook such circumstances, and to discuss abstract truths in a cold, and formal, and heartless manner—Oh, what a loss of opportunity! what a mocking of human misery! what a dereliction of duty! what a prostitution of office! what a fearful responsibility! Let us, my reverend brethren, pray for the heart of a shepherd, for "bowels of compassion." Let us take the sufferer by the hand, and conduct him to the Savior. Let us lead him to the wells of salvation. Let us pour the healing balm into his bleeding heart, and assure him that there is One who sympathizes with his sorrows, and who "is able to save to the uttermost all that comes unto God by him." Forgive my earnestness, and permit me to say that Christ is the only subject which meets the wants and wretchedness of man; Christ, in his person and offices; Christ, in his doctrines and atonements; Christ, in his spirit and in his government; in his love, his condescension, his mercy, his salvation; as the guide and support and comfort of the people, as their Redeemer, their Friend, their Advocate, their Forerunner, their Representative, and Fountain of all blessedness, both in time and eternity!—Jerram.

TIME IS SHORT.

As the season changes, we cannot but note the rapid flight of time. The winter, spring and summer, have come and gone, and lo the autumn is again upon us. Our days, and months, and years, will all soon pass away to return no more for ever. It is a solemn and startling reflection. It becomes every one of us to be "up and doing." The day is far spent, and the night is at hand. "The night when no man can work." Surely there is "no room for mirth or trifling here." If life is short, and is so rapidly hastening to its close, it matters not how much or how little of this world's goods we may have. In a little while, of all "our purple and white linen," we shall need a "winding sheet." Of all our landed estates, we shall be able to use only as many feet as may be required for our "rest in the grave." Is it wise for us, in view of this, to think much of our worldly comfort and amolument?

The time is at hand when the censure or the praise of men, will be alike valueless. The interest some now have in "show and sham," will fade away, and confronted by the stern realities of eternity, they will be amazed that they ever were so much, and so sadly duped. The devotee of fashion will "mourn at the last," when he reaches the point at which "life's dull vanities are vain no more." The misguided miser, as his heaps of "gilded dust" are driven away by the whirlwind of destruction, will then awake, to learn how utterly poor and miserable he became, to "gain the world and lose his soul." The idle loungers along "life's weary way," will in that crisis, find out their folly and their mistake, but too late to remedy them. Now is the time for doing what we can for God and humanity. Whatever our hands find to do, should be done with our might. "There is no work, nor knowledge, nor device, nor wisdom in the grave," whither we are all hastening. What of differences and misunderstandings or hinderances may be in the way, we had better all at once adjust them, and go earnestly to work at whatever we can do in the vineyard. Let all remember time is short.—Messiah's Herald.

Have you any smart infidels in your neighborhood? Do they sneer at and ridicule your views of the Bible? If you have we have a little work here that will aid you in routing them completely, and if you have none near you now you can scarcely stir many miles without meeting one, and if you are posted in their theories you have already won half of the battle. Sister Read's little book, "Creation vs. Evolution" is the work we refer to, and all should possess a copy. Price 25c.

Our lamented Brother Magruder's "Reply to Ingersoll" is another book that should be more largely circulated. It is just what its name indicates—a Reply to Mr. Ingersoll—a reply that Mr. Ingersoll or any other infidel will not even try to answer, so it stands, for its foundation is laid in God's holy word. Price 50c.

The Gift of Life Eternal through Jesus Christ is the great subject for us. Eternal Life a Free Gift. Brother J. H. Pettengill has written a book on this subject, and all who read it say the work is well done. We can send you a copy for $1.00.

We write and talk much of the Kingdom and its Restoration. Brother Silas Henn has written a book on this subject that will aid us very much in our study of the Kingdom and the wonders of the Restoration. One dollar will place it on your table.

There have been different ages and dispensations in the past—we live now—there is an Age to Come, and Bro. Westfall has told us in his work on this subject, the result of his life-time's search as to the nature and the proximity of the Age coming hereafter. This is a large book of over 500 pages. Price $3 00.

Space will not admit of mention of half what our shelves contain. The Emphatic Diaglott, by B. Wilson; Christ's Kingdom, Where is it and What is it? by Jos. Lasier; A Translation of Matthew's Gospel, by Chas. Gardner; that grand work, A Letter to a Friend, by Mrs. Woodruff; Which is Right? or Is Christ's Throne in Heaven or on the Earth? by Thos. Wilson; When Shall These Things Be? by H. Bowman; A Letter to a Baptist Minister, by Daniel Howard; the Doctrine of Baptism, besides a host of those little silent leaflets that work all the time. When you are resting, being wearied, they keep on. Who will help circulate these books? They are all good. There may be an isolated expression that some might object to, but the teaching is the same as endorsed by all our best writers and thinkers. We are ready to fill your orders. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 350 pages. NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS.

The book is truthful, reverent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Rainbow.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Doubtless it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Sydney Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry.....The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a worldly, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

THE COMING AGE,

—ITS—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. Weethee.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, pick, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the will of the Uncomprehensible Will. Wherever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

The Jews accepted the Abrahamic covenant, and to a large extent understood it; but they did not understand, or through prejudice could not understand, that the letter of the covenant could not give life; that it was necessary for the promised seed to appear, and by the shedding of his blood confirm the covenant, and by his resurrection become a quickening life-giving Spirit. Abraham himself, as well as his descendants, died, and therefore did not obtain the inheritance; and those who become children of Abraham by faith, also die not having received the inheritance; for, excepting those who are alive when the Lord comes, it is part of the Divine plan that all who receive the inheritance must first pass through death and be resurrected by the power of the life-giving Spirit; for flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. "Knowing," says Paul, "that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also with Jesus, and shall present us with you," 2 Cor. iv. 14. Only thus will the Abrahamic covenant be fulfilled.

It would be found upon special reference to the teaching of Jesus, that in the early stages of his ministry, he made no reference to his death; it was in this period that the kingdom was preached to the Jews; and it was when they rejected his claims, and began to conspire against him to take his life, and his teaching among them was soon to end, that he spoke plainly of his death. When it had become a fact that the nation, in the exercise of its free agency, received him not, then had come the time to make further revelation of the divine purpose, founded on the ground of his prescience of its voluntary unbelief and rejection of the Anointed.

It was foreseen by God that the nation would persist in unbelief and hardness of heart; it was foreseen that although the kingdom would be preached to them as nigh at hand, and offered to them if they would repent, they would not accept of the Son of man to reign over them. And this was foreseen without placing any restriction upon the exercise of their moral freedom. And God's design in reference to his own action in the future ages was formed by his foreknowledge of their free action in reference to the Messiah. The choice of disobedience hindered the bestowal of a wonderful gift. To infer that God planned the defection and rebellion of the Jews, as a reason for showing mercy to the Gentiles, is to charge God unjustly. Christ placed their rejection of him, not on any predetermined purpose, but on their own free choice. "Ye will not come to me, that ye may have life," John v. 40. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto thee! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate," Matt. xxiii. 37, 38.

The Jewish nation is still the elect nation. God has not changed his purpose, or violated his covenant, or withdrawn the election on account of their unbelief. "As touching the election," says Paul, "they are beloved for the Father's sake. For the gifts and the calling of God are without repentance," Rom. xi. 28, 29. The result of their unbelief is not a change of the Divine plan in reference to their ultimate exaltation and supremacy as a nation, but a postponement of the kingdom and the calling of the Gentiles. Though many of the branches on the stock of Israel, on the good olive tree, have been broken off by unbelief, yet all who give up their unbelief shall be grafted in again; and all of every nation, during this dispensation, who believe in the Son of God, though by nature belonging to a wild olive tree, shall be grafted into the same olive tree; so that the natural descendants of Abraham and those who are his adopted sons belong to the one root, which is holy. They are now on an equal footing in reference to the covenant made with Abraham, and the numerous Scripture promises, and the future glorious inheritance. As Geo. N. H. Peters says, "The present elect, to whom the kingdom will be given, is the continuation of the previous election, chiefly in another engrafted people." This we are persuaded is the teaching of Scripture, seen clearly when one part is carefully compared with another, and the different parts are taken as a whole; but it has been the custom of many otherwise able expositors to overlook the fact that the kingdom is promised to Israel, and that their present scattering during the gathering and adoption of believing Gentiles, does not nullify the promise. Jehovah's election of Israel in the past, and the election of Gentiles which is now going on, is grounded on the Abrahamic covenant. The kingdom, in a sense, will belong to Israel, as a nation, when they are again settled in their own land; but the believing and faithful ones of the past, and the present, and the future, up to the Lord's coming, whether Jews or Gentiles, will be the rulers of that kingdom with the Christ, the Supreme Head. And they will be immortal as their Head. They will exercise a divine and heavenly rule over an earthly people, yea, over all the nations of the earth.

The realization of the promise made to Abraham depended upon the Christ; he was the rightful heir to the throne of David, and the word had gone forth that until he came the kingdom would never be set up: hence there was good ground for the first proclamation of the kingdom to Abraham's and David's descendants. The offer was made to them on the condition that they would repent. When that offer was made by John the Baptist, who was the forerunner of the Christ, and shortly afterwards by the Christ himself and his disciples, the kingdom was indeed nigh to them. And before the offer was made to the Gentiles, it was required by the Abrahamic covenant that it should first be tendered to the Jewish nation; still without their repentance as a nation, a delay of the restoration must inevitably take place. And by the lowly condition in which the King himself appeared, their sincerity was tested; the genuineness of their motives for desiring the restoration was made manifest.

Although the reformers had been largely influenced by the Alexandrian school, and Popish views, they nevertheless saw, in its main features, the truth regarding the covenant made with Abraham, that it was renewed by Christ, and ratified by his death; that believers are now under that covenant, and that it insures to them possession of the inheritance. This covenant and Christianity are inseparably connected.

SILAS HENN.

PORT SAID, Aug. 26, 1886.

Dear Friend:

You asked the meaning of the Scripture words, propitiation, propitiate, and those from the same root. With a Greek Concordance of the New Testament before me, let us study out their sense through usage. We count ten occurrences of seven different although related words.

In Matt. xvi. 22, Peter, after hearing our Savior's prophecy of his sufferings "began to rebuke him he propitious to you." A common expression would be, "Mercy on you," and so the Revised New Testament has in the margin, "God (supplied) have mercy on thee." In Heb. viii. 12, it occurs again, "Because I will be propitious to their injustices." Revised Version, "I will be merciful to their iniquities."

In Luke xviii. 13, the publican praying in the temple beats on his breast, saying, "Oh God, begin to be propitious yourself to me the sinner. The margin of the Revised is, "Be propitiated to me the sinner." The form of the verb here is that of an inceptive and middle voice. So he, in great humility, asks that God would at least begin to be propitiated. He could have used other forms not inceptive. Be propitiated. The middle voice refers back to God, so it must "be propitiated" or "propitiate yourself." It would be the height of presumption to say "propitiate me." Heb. ii. 10, Into the beginning to propitiate himself to the sins of the people. In Rom. iii. 25, "Whom God set forth (or purposed) a propitiatory through faith in the blood of him."

Again in Heb. ix. 5, "Above, however, it (the ark) Cherubim of glory causing to shadow-down upon the propitiatory." The verb here, to shadow-down, is a causative, and some would say, a frequentative, in which case it should be "causing frequently to shadow-down upon." This propitiatory is supposed to be the cover of the ark or mercy seat, that in Romans the spiritual one of which this was a type.

In Rom. xii. 8, "The one having mercy in propitiousness." Of course not a form of mercy which leaves the injury unforgotten, but a mercy which completely frees him from your displeasure. You are propitiated. 2 Cor. ix. 7, "For a propitious giver God loves." Often ostensible gifts alienate afterwards or are negative towards making up friends. A giver who really propitiates the one benefitted and who is himself fully propitiated is loved by God.

Now the last occurrences. 1 John ii. 2, "And he a propitiation is about our sins; not about ours, however, alone, but also about the whole world." Instead of "about" we might use "respecting" or "concerning."

1 John iv. 10, "And sends forth the Son of him a propitiation about our sins." If these propitiations are not made use of by us to really infuse a power to keep the commandments, we have no share in them.

JERUSALEM, Sept. 22, '86.

Do you know of any experienced borers of artesian wells who have the spirit of philanthropy and enterprise equal to bringing them to Jerusalem. Here is a great city, at present dependent on rain water caught in cisterns during the only two rain falls of the year, December.

It is well that good cisterns abound, as building stone almost covers the land and the people know how to utilize it in walling up strong cisterns. To bring water in goat skin sacks from a fountain below Bethany on the road to Jericho on their heads up to the city, as I have seen Arab women do, is a labor too great to be witnessed with indifference. On the Jaffa road donkey loads of spring water can be seen also coming to the city. Water is in the soil, for these fountains a little way off prove it and I have seen it in deep excavations. Now for the artesian wells to furnish it in abundance. Cisterns accumulate filth and the health of the people suffers. The man who will give this city pure water will be a benefactor indeed. The city is rejuvinating fast. An incredible number of new houses are going up in the suburb on the Jaffa road and to its right and left. These houses are all of good stone, many very substantial and expensive. It is indeed astonishing what a change is going on. At this rate the estimate of a population of 40,000 will have to be doubled and quadrupled soon. Machines for excavating great stones would be a desideratum. Who will bring them and become practical workers of them?

On the 15th inst., a man and his wife started for Kerak down in Moab, east of the Dead Sea. They are English people who at one time lived in America. Their object is to do all the good they can among the Arabs of that city and surrounding region. It has generally been considered pretty wild in that region, but it is said to be growing better. A Greek monk or two reside there and have a general oversight of the Arabic speaking adherents of the Greek church; but these Greeks spending their lives here and being amenable to Turkish law are unmolested by Bedouins and other Arabs who generally plunder where they can. This friend of mine was robbed and stript completely some months ago when he tried to enter Kerak the first time. Since then he got in safely and saw the chief who gave him permission to come and live. After every manner of delay he and his wife found men to take them on a camel, their baggage on another, and promised to carry them to Madebah, and from there secure them other animals and escort to destination. I decided to be watchmen upon the National walls and to warn the thoughtless multitude of approaching perils. Our people have observed with indifference the naked telegraphic statement that the respectable Pontiff who now fills the Papal throne, had restored the order of Jesuits to all the faculties, prerogatives, and powers which they had grasped, before their suppression by Clement XIV. I have obtained a copy of the Papal brief, and I venture to say that while it is a document of the greatest import to Europe, it is of supreme significance to us in America. In a word, it removes from this formidable society all the disabilities with which the rival orders supposed them to be clogged, by the fact that the act of Restoration did not expressly relieve them of some of the sweeping maledictions of Clement the Fourteenth.

At least the unrevoked features of those decrees have been regarded by the Liberal Romanists as invested with new force and permanence; the blunder of Jesuits in getting Pius the Ninth to pronounce all Papal decrees infallible and irrevocable having revived the Clementine anathemas in all their force. They have thus armed their enemies with a new argument against them. Self-stultifying though it be, they have therefore made the present Pope issue another infallible decree, utterly annulling all that Clement XIV. did in the wise exercise of his infallibility. I propose to publish the three bulls (or brevee) to enable all intelligent men to compare them and to understand the actual position of the Society of Jesuits as respects this country. For, be it remembered, the society has, first and last, been banished from every papal kingdom in Europe as insufferably aggressive towards all governments and constitutions. Pius IX. himself was forced to banish them from Rome in the early years when he assumed an attitude favorable to Italian progress and freedom. Even now no European State except England and a few petty Protestant governments gives them any quarter. Despots can work with them and by them, yet even Romanized countries have invented all sorts of securities against them. Our innocent republic sets wide its doors and gives free right of invasion to these burglars of the universe. The society intends to make this rich and unsuspecting nation the field of its largest and most triumphant operations. We put into their hands opportunities and powers nowhere else offered. We arm invaders with a vote as soon as they land, and hordes of ignorant immigrants will soon give them the command of wealth and power in all our large towns and cities. The Jesuits will be the masters of these ignorant voters. Cardinals, whose red liveries announce their readiness to die for the Papacy, are placed in conspicuous places as a mere mask. No matter who is cardinal, bishop, or priest, the Jesuits are supreme. Now comes the point. Under the guise of an institution of learning a Jesuit college is about to be established in Washington. It will be the seat of intrigue with our politics and politicians. There our elections will be managed and results secured for the Court of Rome. Most quietly at first, with the utmost audacity very soon, this society will practically neutralize our Constitution, or what is more likely, will bring on a social war of religion. It may be lawful to organize adopted citizens into foreign regiments; that is no business of mine. But, the organization of religious regiments at this crisis is most suggestive, and I ask my countrymen, as part of my duty as a loyal citizen, to inquire into the organizations of "Uniformed Catholic Knights," and to decide whether their armed "battalions," with "mounted field and staff officers" are a military force consistent with our Constitution. I protest against all military organizations on a religious base, whether Romish or Protestant. They are a menace to freedom and to good neighborhood.

You must not consider me an alarmist. On the contrary, I never before saw such elements of hope as regards this red cloud of Romish aggression. Our simple people gaze upon it as amusing and really admire its effect upon the blue horizon. No man schooled by experience, the history of nations and the history of the Jesuits, can maintain this stolid indifference. At this moment the Jesuits have humbled Germany and driven Bismark "to Canossa." In our neighboring State, the Dominion of Canada, the eastern half, including Montreal and Quebec, lies prostrate under them. They control elections, overawe magistrates, excite the populace, and have well-nigh taken possession of the courts of Justice. There are parts of our own land where this is almost the case already. On a larger scale our turn is coming. But here is the first element of hope; while Protestants are stupidly secure, many of our American Romanists are alarmed. Remember, all Romanists who are not themselves Jesuits or rabid ultramontanists, abhor the society. Clement was forced to suppress and abolish it at the outcry of all the Romish nations. Now I have always argued that the Liberal Romanists may be good citizens. I have no fear of such ecclesiastics, as were the venerable Carroll and Chevorus. Theologically, I differ with them. As citizens I would maintain their rights as eagerly as I defend my own. Now there are thousands of Americans like the late Chief-Justice Taney (whose family all belonged to my church in Baltimore), who are patriots at heart. They were born in the Roman communion and I are loth to leave it; but they are ecclesiastics; they believe what suits them and despise the rest. They do not mean to "go to Canossa," and we may rely on them to make war on the Jesuit invasion. Already several of their Liberal bishops are struggling to keep the Jesuits out of Washington. They are wise and prudent and wish to place there the intelligent and highly respectable French "Sulpicians." I hope they will not succeed. It will be a momentary blind and will dust the eyes of the lookers-on; but as was said to me by a zealous Romanist: "It will belong to the Jesuits all the same, and as soon as it is safe they will assume it openly." Yes, but that depends. Our countrymen may wake up, though I rely more on Liberal Romanists than on stupid, indifferent Protestants to protect us from this great outrage. I have done my duty. The rising generation must meet this as the burning issue of their day; they may meet it as "sheep for the slaughter" but I think they will be more likely to confront it like Huguenots.

BISHOP COXE AND THE JESUITS.

At the late annual Council of the Diocese of Western New York, Bishop Coxe thus referred in his address to the Papal brief restoring the Jesuits.

My brethren, laity as well as clergy: I have never confined your thoughts to local objects merely, on these occasions of annual assembling. We are members of the Catholic and Apostolic church, and as such have the deepest interest in its world-wide concerns. Let me now direct your attention to a matter demanding the common concern of all Americans, but to which nobody will point the public mind if we do not. It is part of our mission to be watchmen upon the National walls and to warn the thoughtless multitude of approaching perils. Our people have observed with indifference the naked telegraphic statement that the respectable Pontiff who now fills the Papal throne, had restored the order of Jesuits to all the faculties, prerogatives, and powers which they had grasped, before their suppression by Clement XIV. I have obtained a copy of the Papal brief, and I venture to say that while it is a document of the greatest import to Europe, it is of supreme significance to us in America. 2. Would that some one might put me back for a month of former days during which God watched to keep me;

3. As it was when his lamp was over my head, when I went my way in darkness by the light thereof.

4. When I was heavily burdened in my ways, when God was making a visitation of my household.

5. When I was a busy growth of wood, and my children were about me.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXV. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 24, 1886. NO. 44.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months the same rate.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortalized saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE CRISIS.

"The New Hej'ra" was the title of the following remarkable article which appeared lately in the St. James Gazette. We reproduce it entire. The end of Esau, which is Edom, is coming quick.

The decree of the Sultan for the withdrawal of the whole Mussulman population from Bulgaria and East Roumelia, and their deportation to Asia, is a new phase in Turkish politics. It is a measure which has been advocated by many of the more clear-sighted among the Turks since the Berlin Congress in 1878. What tended more than any other act of that assembly to open the eyes of the Turkish plenipotentiaries to the fact that there was no room left for the Turk in Europe, was the separation of Herzegovinia from the empire, and the placing it under the administration of Austria-Hungary. Both Mehemet Ali and Karathodory, the Turkish plenipotentiaries, bitterly reproached the Powers for their action in this matter, and declared their conviction that it was the deliberate intention of Europe to break up the empire in Europe and drive the Turks back into Asia. The events of the last few months seem to justify their pre-visions. But, to any one who observed closely the relations that existed between the Mussulmans and the Christians in the territories over which the Sultan had ceased to exercise direct authority, it was evident that the incompatibility between the two rendered it impossible for the Mussulmans to remain long among their former inferiors. And this can be well understood by those acquainted with the pride of race and religion of the Turk. The hereditary superior, by virtue of his faith and right of conquest, of the Christian, any other position was to him intolerable. Political equality he neither cared for nor understood. It was quite natural, therefore, that even without official encouragement the exodus of the Mussulmans from the ceded territories should have gone on steadily. In 1880 large numbers of refugee Moukhadjirs migrated into Macedonia from Bosnia, Servia, and Bulgaria, and had lands assigned to them, or went back to Asia. This policy was encouraged in high quarters at Constantinople, and, among others, Mukhtar Pasha openly advocated the gradual evacuation of European Turkey and the abandonment of it to its Christian inhabitants. A well-known Pasha expressed on one occasion the opinion that the sooner his countrymen left Europe the better, for it was evident they would not be allowed by the other Powers to govern the races much longer.

This was understood, and admitted by the Turks more generally than is commonly supposed. This policy has a military as well as a political aspect. The loss of population in Asia, owing to the mortality in the army during the war of 1877–78, was very serious, and the reinforcement which the migration from Europe will bring is an important consideration at the present moment; and we may be sure that possible future eventualities have had their share in dictating the action of the Sultan in ordering a general exodus from Europe of all his Mussulman subjects. At the time of the occupation of Thessaly by the Greeks in 1881 every inducement was offered by the Greek Government to the Mussulmans in the ceded territory to remain, and at first there was a great disposition on their part to do so. But under strong pressure from Constantinople, much of it exercised under instructions from Osman Pasha, the movement towards Asia set in; and now, only five years after the cession of Greece, most of the Mussulman inhabitants have left, their lands and villages passing into Greek hands for a mere fraction of their real value. The old "Koalars," as they were called—presumably from Konieh in Asia—were a sturdy vigorous race, honest, hospitable, and brave; but the differences of religion and race, coupled with the reversal of the political and social relations, were too strong, and they allowed their homes to revert to the descendants of the ancient possessors of the country. The same feeling was displayed by many Mussulman Greeks of Epirus in 1878, when there was a prospect of their country passing under Greek rule. Their purpose, however, was not to go to Asia, but to Cyprus, in order to be under the British flag. But, in whatever light it is viewed, whether from a political or military standpoint, the official commencement of the final retreat from Europe has a more than momentary interest. It is just 630 years since the Turks under Orkhan first set foot in Europe at Gallipoli. In 1683 the ebb of the Ottoman tide, which threatened at one time to overflow the West, set in before the walls of Vienna, and has continued steadily ever since. Those descendants of the old invaders still remaining in Europe are in the position of the rear guard of a retiring army.

RENEW TODAY.

OUR contributors must exercise a great deal of patience. We are not yet in good working order and shall not be for some weeks to come, owing to the uncertainty of our continuance with the paper this year.

WE will give some suggestions about the financial support of the paper and what we shall try to do for it, as Editor, in future numbers. We have better facilities for making the paper interesting in its peculiar sphere than we ever had before.

BROTHER J. Cameron, of Edinburgh, Scotland, writes:—"I have pleasure in sending you per Book Post, articles X and XI of the 'Kingdom and the Parables,' in continuation of 'The Gospel of the Kingdom.' I trust they will reach you safely and prove useful. I do hope that, notwithstanding your advanced age, you will be enabled to continue at your post so worthily filled. Remember 'as your day is so will your strength be' and that 'the aged Ray is always bright.'" For these kind words of encouragement and appreciation we feel to sincerely thank our able correspondent. In the present issue we give No. X, and next week will give No. XI. We interest our readers to give these articles, as well as those written by Bro. Silas Hann, of Dudley, Eng., a careful perusal. They are written with singular ability, and are very timely.

TO OUR PATRONS.

To remove all misgivings as to the future success of our loved paper, THE RESTITUTION, we would say that a contract has been made to have it no published for this current year as to have all claims now existing against the Association cancelled, and, at the same time debar any individual member of the Board from contracting any indebtedness whatever for which the Association, as a body, are to be held responsible.

Of the competing bids, that of the present Publisher was the lowest, and disinterested parties allow that his stipulations are low enough for the work he has contracted to perform and the liability he personally assumes. As to the Editor, friends are making up his past dues, in whole or in part, by subscription, and thus enabling him to continue his services. This is being done without any solicitation by him. For the year, upon which we now enter, he has contracted to serve for the meagre compensation of $20 per month. When our brethren consider the expenses attendant upon living in town, and, also, that this is not one half the amount usually paid to an ordinary teacher in a common district school, he thinks they will not complain that the Editor is making money very fast. Nothing but the love he has for the cause, and an ardent desire to aid his brethren and promulgate truth, has prompted him to continue awhile longer with the paper as its Editor.

The "Pilgrim's Bathing-Place."

Perhaps the most interesting spot on the Jordan at the present time is that opposite Jericho, and called the "pilgrim's bathing-place." Thither resort every year large companies of pilgrims, to bathe in the river made sacred by the baptism of our Lord. In describing this ceremony, a recent work on Palestine says:—

"The mouth of the Jordan is seldom visited except by European travelers; the crowd of pilgrims visit the river higher up, near what is called Hele ford, though each sect of Christians has a special spot for the completion of the pilgrimage.....The Greek pilgrims bathe at a spot where there is a narrow clearing down to the water's edge; the Latin sacred place is higher up, near the ruins of an old convent. The ceremony is most interesting and picturesque from the start from Jerusalem to the return. In former times the crowd of pilgrims was said to number hundreds of thousands, and even now they amount to several thousands. The day fixed is Easter Monday, and the Turkish Government has for many ages guaranteed the safe conduct of the convoy. It starts from the neighborhood of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre (at Jerusalem), in front of which the pilgrims generally assemble, preceded by a white flag and noisy instruments: the rear-guard being composed of Turkish troops with the green flag of the Prophet. A merry, joyous crowd they seem, the roar of voices often drowning the incessant [illegible] the tortoms in the front [illegible]. Few of them are on foot except the Russian peasants. Every kind of quadruped, camel, horse, mule, and ass, have been impressed for the occasion, and the hapless camels flounder down the steep descent to Jericho, with huge baskets of women and children on either side. The Bedouin of the neighborhood hangs about the desert cliffs and hills ready to cut off any incautious straggler, and to send him to rejoin his company prematurely equipped for the bath.....Arrived long before sunset at Er Riha, the modern Jericho, but really near the ancient Gilgal, the motley crowd bivouacs for the night.

A stroll among the tented and the untented groups will afford one of the most varied and picturesque scenes which even in that land of the picturesque the traveler can encounter. Every costume, from the sheepskin-clad and odoriferous Russian to the bright dresses of the Bulgarians, the quaint robes of the Georgians, the brilliant colors of the Greek, and the solid richness of the Armenian, is collected from all Eastern Europe and Western Asia. But soon all is hushed, and the camp fires are smouldering embers, and the long, straggling camp, stretching some three miles across the plain, is buried in sleep, recalling the camp of Israel first pitched at Gilgal, this very spot. Long before sunrise, about three o'clock, there is a sudden roll of kettle-drums, and lights are struck all over the plain. There is none of the merriment of the preceding day, but by torchlight, in solemn silence, with the paschal moon hanging forward out of the deep black sky, and dimming the glare of the torches, the mixed multitude presses on to the bank of the sacred river. Just after daybreak the head of the procession reaches the open space on the river's bank, and before the sun has well overtopped the hills of Moab, the first comers are plunging in the whirling eddies of the turbid stream. Most of those who have come in families bathe in a long, white garment, which after this Jordan baptism is carefully preserved as the winding-sheet of its owner. I have noticed devout families joining hand-in-hand in a circle in the water, the women having their babies slung round their neck, reciting the creed, ducking at each sentence, while they hang on to their ever-changing babies. One remarkable feature is the number of little children and infants; for the age of the pilgrim matters not, and the Jordan baptism needs never to be repeated. Primitive and rude the scene may be called, but there is no indecorum or irreverence, and very little superstition. Who that has stood by the brink of that river could have turned back without having washed in the Jordan? Who is so utterly devoid of sentiment as not to sympathize with that pilgrim multitude? and who can look on the Eastern baptism without feeling that he has reproduced before his own eyes the scenes and the surroundings that accompanied the preaching and the baptism on this river bank of the great forerunner, John the Baptist?

"The ceremony is not a long one. After it is over, every one cuts a stick or bough to preserve in memory of the visit (a palmer's staff); and most come provided with a bottle, which is filled from the sacred stream. Silently the crowds remount and gradually depart; the last Turkish fez has closed the rear-guard two hours before noon. The camp of the previous night is reoccupied, and the pilgrims rest and sleep till sunset, when they eat their evening meal. At the dead of night they set out, roused by the kettle-drum, and in silence resume their march back to Jerusalem. The last act of the great pilgrimage has been completed, and every one of the caravan is now a true 'palmer.'"

The Midnight Cry.

"And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." Many are under the terrible delusion that before the Lord Jesus will come again, the millennium will have been ushered in by the nations all being converted to the Christian faith. But the Bible all the way through is against this theory—Jesus says. "But as the days of Noah were, so shall the coming of the Son of man be." How then was it in the days of Noah? God tells us plainly: "The earth also was corrupt before God and the earth was filled with violence, and God looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth." Jesus also says, "That in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, and knew not until the flood came and took them away."

But in the condition of things in the world now such as to warrant the belief that the coming of the Lord draweth near? I think so. Never before has the world been so filled with violence. Look at the insurrections, riots, strikes and uprisings that today are convulsing the earth in every quarter; and the murders, suicides, robberies, lynchings and outrages that are daily occurring. The corruption of these times is simply awful to behold. Men everywhere are corrupting God's way upon the earth. The world is filled with a superficial gospel, which is not the gospel of Jesus of Nazareth. From nearly every pulpit in the land men are taught that it is not needful for them to be sanctified, as God in his word says we must be to inherit eternal life. This spurious gospel teaches men that they can be proud, worldly-minded, sensual, covetous, passionate, hateful and unholy, and yet be in the way of heaven, which is just as the apostle says, It shall be in the last days. He says in 2 Tim. iii, "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of Godliness, but denying the power thereof."

Oh! what a picture of the corruption of the last day, and I am sure we are living right in the midst of it. Look at the selfishness, pride, sensuality, covetousness, unfaithfulness to solemn trusts, the intriguing and deception, the disobedience to parents, the willfulness, the high-mindedness. See how those that will be good are despised and persecuted, and set at naught even by those who profess to be Christians, and behold the hopes that have a nice pretty form of Godliness, but who deny the soul cleansing and sin destroying power of real salvation. See how the people are eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage—living just to have a good time, and to enjoy all this world they can without any thought about death and the awful judgment, they must on in their wild chase after pleasure, and multitudes will not know until death suddenly brings them to a stop, and they are driven away in their wickedness.

Oh! comrades, these things do but show us that the day of the Lord is at hand—that the end of all things is near. Oh, let us heed the admonition of the Lord Jesus, "Watch and pray," that we may be counted worthy to escape the day of tribulation which is to come upon the earth, and be able to stand before the Son of man without fear in the judgment.—J. S. Richardson, in War Cry.

JEWS IN ROME.

In the Middle Ages the Jewesses went about among the ladies of noble Roman families telling fortunes, and selling love philters, and were regarded as witches. Now they parry their old laces, mended silks, and torn embroideries to Campo dei Fiori every Wednesday, and all day long, through summer heat and winter cold, stand near their benches trying to sell for three or four times what they paid. Elegant and high-born ladies discuss with them the price of their merchandise, and offer without blushing one-third of what they ask. Not long ago I had occasion to find two carpet sewers, Perla and Ragina, in the Ghetto, and shall never forget the misery of the street of the Azzimelle, where they live, now closed at one end, so that whatever air or light passed before is now excluded. About twenty women were seated or standing there together, some with sewing machines in the open street, and a throng of children or half-grown girls followed us with importunate chatter and extended hands, asking for soldini. Oh, Judah! how are the mighty fallen! Is it not time to end this degradation and restore the punished and afflicted people to dignity and peace? The population of the Ghetto is about five thousand, and the richer Jews live in all parts of the city, often filling most honorable and lucrative offices. These latter aid their poor brethren, and the Israelite Orphan Asylum and Hospital are flourishing institutions. There are several missions among the Jews, but few, if any, converts have as yet been made, although the meetings are attended. The Reverend Mr. Ben Oliel, a converted Jew, is the missionary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews; Mrs. Bartoleni has a sewing school for girls, and Dr. Young supports and attends to a Medical mission.

See the Ghetto, although it was long their prison, is not the only part of Rome which retains memories of the past history of the Jews. The Arch of Titus, erected in memory of their great defeat, was abhorred by them, and no Jew would voluntarily pass under it. There are sculptured the ark, the table of the show bread, and the golden candlestick, borne on the shoulders of captives. These precious spoils were long kept in the Temple of Peace, erected on the other side of the Forum by the Emperor Vespasian, and the candlestick was finally dropped into the Tiber, during the battle of Maxentius, from the Milvian Bridge, now Ponte Molle. The tables of the law were kept in the palace of the Cæsars, on the Palatine. How strange if they should be found when further excavations shall be made on the Palatine. The original tables of the law, however, are supposed to have been carried away or secreted by Jeremiah, after Judah was taken in captivity to Babylon. Titus brought one hundred thousand Jews captive to Italy, twelve thousand of whom were constrained to build the Colosseum. That wonderful ruin is therefore another monument of their suffering. That part of Trastevere opposite to the Ghetto was occupied by the Jews for centuries, and there is the house, at No. 2 Via dei Stranguri, where Saint Paul is supposed to have lived and preached for two years. In the Mamertine prison Simon-bar-Giora, the leader of the defence of Jerusalem, was imprisoned, and was strangled as Titus and Vespasian made their triumphal ascent to the temple of Jove, on the Capitoline Hill.

At the Portico of Octavia, then a magnificent edifice in the quarter inhabited by the Jews, afterwards known as the Ghetto, Vespasian and Titus celebrated their triumph. Perhaps they selected that place in order to humiliate still more the vanquished people. The apostate Josephus describes the glories of the triumph: the abundance of gold and gems, the silks and gorgeous draperies, the sacred vessels, the silk dresses of the soldiers who had laid aside their arms, the sad faces of noble captives who graced the triumph, the ivory chairs for the emperor and Titus, the long procession and passage through the Triumphal Gate, and the Circenses all night afterwards. Yet Titus even then disdained his triumph and refused the title of Judaicus which was offered him. The Fountain of Egeria was at one time the only place where Jews were permitted to live, and they were reduced to great misery, often wandering about with their only possessions, a basket and a bundle of straw, the basket to contain food and the straw for a pillow. The Romans to enrage them sacrificed a pig in the Temple of Bacchus near the Fountain of Egeria. During the long Papal era, the Jews were treated kindly or severely, according to the temper of the reigning Pontiff. Eugene IV. and Paul IV. persecuted them because their fathers crucified Christ, while Sextus V. and Urban VIII. favored them because they were "the race from which Christ came." But many of their number penetrated as physicians into the Vatican, even with their yellow scarfs or turbans to distinguish them from Christians, and the grandson of a baptized Jew became Anti-Pope. Monte Giordano, that slight elevation of the streets near the bridge of St. Angelo, was the scene of their annual humiliation, when the most honorable among them waited with their tribute and the sacred books to offer to the Pontiff as he passed in state. The Vicar of Christ not unfrequently while accepting their homage replied to the humble address with reproof and scorn.

The Corso was for centuries the scene of their suffering and humiliation, where they ran half naked with the horses during the Carnival for the amusement of the Roman populace. They were derided and treated rather worse than the beasts who were their companions in the race. When the youths were finally disappointed from this cruel service, and an annual tribute exempted instead, the honorable elders then took up the burden of shame, and annually carried their tribute to the Campidoglio, where the Senator placed his foot upon their necks.

Who can count how many Jews were victims of the Inquisition and languished in the prisons of Monte Vecchio or the Palace near the Vatican? We know they were always true to their faith and patient in suffering. How many have stood courageously before the white-robed Dominican Friars who held the Inquisition in the Convent of the Minerva? In the adjoining church sits the statue of their great persecutor, Paul IV., fierce and terrible even in marble, and wrapped in the constant shadows of that dark corner.

In short, where have the Jews not suffered in Rome? This has been their house of bondage, and the iron heel of the fourth kingdom has crushed them to the earth. At last a brighter day has come. A just and generous government has freed them from all disabilities, and knows no difference between them and other citizens. Their bonds are loosed, and it depends only upon themselves to be free. Oh! that the Truth may make them free indeed! Madame Safia Bompiani, in New York Observer

"A SKELETON IN EVERY HOUSE."

The wise man declares that "the heart knoweth its own bitterness," and many an envious and discontented mortal would have a strange surprise, could they know the secret sorrows and troubles of those whose places and possessions they covet.

A story copied from Chambers' Journal, thus gives the origin of the proverb "a skeleton in every house."

A widow of Rimini, the Countess Corsini, had but one remaining son to give her an interest in life. He was remarkable for the elegance of his person, as well as for every amiable and graceful quality. When grown, this young gentleman was sent to pursue his studies at the University of Bologna, where he became one of the most distinguished scholars, and gained the affection of all who knew him by his singularly noble character. Just as he was completing his studies, and was about to return to Naples, he was seized with a dangerous illness, which notwithstanding the efforts of the best physician in Bologna, brought him in three days to the brink of the grave. Seeing he could not survive, his only care, so far as the world was concerned, was for his mother, and it was his most anxious wish that some means should be taken to prevent her being entirely overcome by the tidings of his death.

He finally resorted to this expedient: he wrote to his mother informing her of his illness, but not of its threatening character, and requesting that she would send him a shirt made by the happiest lady in all Naples, or she who appeared most free from the cares and sorrows of this world, for he had taken a fancy that by wearing such an article he should be speedily cured.

The countess thought her son's request rather singular, but being loth to refuse him, immediately set about her inquiry for the happiest lady in Naples. Her efforts were tedious and difficult; everybody she could think of, or who was pointed out to her, was found, on searching nearer, to have her own share of troubles. She was at length introduced to one, who not only appeared to have all the materials of worldly bliss, but bore every external mark of being cheerful, and contented in her situation. To this fortunate lady the countess preferred her request, making the circumstances of her case an excuse for so strange an application.

"My dear Countess," said the lady, "spare all apology, for if I were really qualified for the task, I would gladly undertake it. But if you will follow me to another room, I will prove to you that I am the most miserable woman in Naples."

So saying, she led the countess to a remote chamber, where there was nothing apparently but a curtain hung from the ceiling to the floor. This being drawn aside, she disclosed to the horror of her visitor, a skeleton suspended from a beam. "Oh, dreadful!" the countess exclaimed.

The lady regarded her mournfully, and said, after a moment's silence, "This is a youth who loved me before my marriage, and with whom I was obliged to part when my relations compelled me to marry my present husband. Afterwards we renewed our acquaintance, and my husband, in his impatience, at finding him in my presence one day, drew his sword, and run him through the heart. He afterwards caused his skeleton to be suspended here, and every night and morning, since then, has compelled me to come and view these remains. To the world I may bear a cheerful aspect, and seem possessed of all the comforts of life, but you may judge if I can really be entitled to the reputation you have given me, or am qualified to execute your son's commission."

The Countess Corsini readily acknowledged that her situation was most miserable, and retired to her own house. "Alas!" she said to herself, "no one is exempt from the distresses and sorrows of life; there is a skeleton in every house."

When she reached home, she found a letter informing her of the death of her son. This terrible news would have overturned her reason, and broken her heart, had not the foresight of her son prepared her to feel that others had sorrows as great as her own, and in alleviating them her own were lightened.

The Bible.

The question of the inspiration of the word of God, and of what constitutes the word of God, is not left to be determined by German critics. The book stood just as it is before they came into the world. It will stand just as it is after they, like sheep, are laid in their graves. Our common people, with their English Bibles in their hands, will settle for themselves these issues which critics offer to settle for them. They will do it, though, on very different lines of investigation and on different kinds of evidence. The critics will endeavor to penetrate the mind of God by means of grammars and dictionaries. Common Christians will do it by means of the Holy Spirit searching the deep things of God—things too deep for an unsanctified nature to fathom, even though it be master of all the Hebrew that ever was written. "We have the mind of Christ." They have received "the spirit of the world." We have received "the spirit which is of God" that we might know the things that are freely given us of God.

In all this there is nothing at variance with the common laws which preside over the discovery of truth. In a common letter from one friend to another, there is a certain intangible something which is not discoverable from the mere text of the letter. A grammarian, but a stranger to the writer, may take that letter and parse it from beginning to end, and conclude that he knows the exact force of all. And yet he may be mistaken. He may know the grammatical construction of different sentences, and yet know but a small part of the truth intended to be conveyed by the sentences. An intimate friend of the writer, "who knows him," will follow right after and discover facts about the mind, and spirit, the feelings and the purposes of that writer which had eluded the grammarians entirely.

And so in Bible matters. The "mind of Christ" is not ascertained simply by parsing. But then, in order to know the mind of Christ, Christians must be deeply and profoundly taught in the word of God. Our common people must be profoundly taught in the English Bible. They can learn to handle that—can fight with it and can conquer with it. They can even confound the higher criticism with it.—Wm. Ashmore, D. D.

Notes By the Way.

On the fifth of November, in company with Brother J. M. Horton, I set out for Chase County, Kansas, where Brother Henry Bailey lives. About five o'clock p. m. we reached the station where Brother and Sister Bailey were waiting to convey us to their own quiet home, where we were made to feel at home with their kind and very quiet family. They both are deeply interested in the good cause, and they are trying to throw their influence by word and work all on the Lord's side, so much so that their family is growing up in the right way, to honor to their parents. If all that name the name of Christ would be more careful to observe the first and great commandment, Matt. xxii. 37, there would be less cause for stumbling unbelief among outsiders.

It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, and it will be fearful and bitter in the extreme for those whose hearts are full of hypocrisy, to meet their just doom at the last in the lake of fire, "the second death." We held four meetings in their neighborhood, one at their house. There was some interest manifested, and we hope some good was done. We tried in our weak way to set before them first the reasons why we should search the Scriptures, and then in the next place the way men and women are to be ingrafted into the true vine, and the importance and propriety of remaining there all the time as branches of the same. Next our subject was the coming of our Lord and Master, and lastly the signs of our times, closing with an admonition to all to watch and be ready.

Editor Restitution:

Since I wrote to you last I have lost my husband. After many years of suffering he died on the second of May. Brother Lyon gave you a report of his death, which you kindly published in THE RESTITUTION, for which please accept my thanks. And I am left alone, but not alone, for the God of Abraham whom we have tried to serve for twenty-seven years, has not left nor forsaken us, for he is my stay and support, and to him will I trust and not fear, for the few short days before my time comes, when I with all the loved and lost ones must sleep for a short time, until the Master comes to wake his sleeping saints, when I shall meet all those that have labored and have suffered for their Master's sake, where sorrow and trouble can never come.

For twenty-seven years with my husband we tried to walk that narrow path together. On the third Sunday in April, 1869, we first formed a society in this house and broke bread together, and on the third Sunday in April, 1886, we broke bread the last time in the same room. He lingered on until the first of May, when his suffering ended. He is now where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. His suffering was great, his reason often failing him in things of this life, but if any one assailed the truth, or brought an error before him, he would brighten up and fight for his Master's cause even to the last. He died in full assurance of faith of a resurrection unto eternal life, when he hoped to see his beloved Master's face and meet his brethren and sisters that are now sleeping in their tombs until that happy day shall dawn. Till then

Sleep on brother, sleep in Jesus,
Until resurrection's day,
When we shall meet and reign with him
In everlasting joy.

I do hope that happy time will soon come when all the redeemed shall be called home. All things around us tell us plainly that the time is near. Our Heavenly Father has left for his children waymarks whereby they may know by these signs that this age is nearly ended, when he will soon come and bring that age of everlasting righteousness and peace. Until then may we ever be found in that narrow path that leadeth unto eternal life is the sincere prayer of your humble sister in Christ.

Youth's Column.

The Obstacle Always Ahead.

There's always a rise to cross,
Always an effort to make,
If there's anything good to win,
Any rich prize to take.
Yonder's the fruit we crave;
Yonder the charming scene;
But deep and wide, with a troubled tide,
Is the river that lies between.

For, rougher the way that we take,
The slower the heart and the nerve;
The stones to our path we break,
For never from out Impleasure we rise
For the glory we hope to win
Our labors we count no loss;
'Tis to pause and murmur because
Of the river we have to cross.

The Light of a Smile.

When things don't go to suit you
And the world seems upside down,
Don't spend your time in fretting,
But drive away that frown;
Since life is all perplexing,
'Tis much the wisest plan
To bear all trials bravely
And smile whene'er you can.

Why should you dread the morrow,
And thus despoil today?
For when you borrow trouble
You always have to pay.
It is a good old maxim,
Which should be often preached—
Don't cross the bridge before you
Until the bridge is reached.

You might be spared much sighing
If you would keep in mind
The thought that good and evil
Are always here combined.
There must be something wanting,
And though you roll in wealth
You may miss from your casket
That precious jewel—health.

And though you're strong and sturdy
You may have an empty purse
(And earth has many trials
Which I consider worse);
But whether joy or sorrow
Fill up your mortal span,
'Twill make your pathway brighter
To smile whene'er you can.

The Ever-Watching Eye.

A young man of upright character, in the service of a great corporation, found himself—as was every other of the employes,—shadowed by a detective, after a robbery from the office of the company. Wherever he went he was watched, although quietly, and at a distance. He would hurry along the crowded street in the hope of getting out from under that eye; but when he looked back or across the way, he would find he had not escaped it. When he looked out from the window of his darkened room before retiring, he would catch a glimpse, by the street lamp, of the man who never deserted him.

The consciousness of this unfailing companionship became a torture. He went to the superintendent of the company, and told him that while he was innocent of any wrong-doing, and was willing to be put to any fair test, he could not stand being always watched in this way. It was more than human nature could bear.

No one of us is ever alone. There is an eye always on us. See Psalm cxxxix. 7–12. Is it the eye of an enemy, or of a friend? Are we under the constant watch of one whom we love and trust, or of one whom we have offended, and from whose presence we have reason to shrink?—S. S. Times.

He Propagating Itself.

A man lives a godless life, a life of licentiousness and debauchery, finds his delight for years in the seduction of innocence in dragging the souls of others into the mire in which he wallows. He afterward repents. Where are the victims? One is dead. Another has so learned his accursed lesson that she devotes herself to the work he desires to quit, and has led, and is leading other victims wrong. Can his repentance save the dead, the soul slain by his hand, and now gone to await the final account? Can it recover the other, which is, at second hand, sacrificing new victims to his sin? He may devote his life to the work of recovering what he has ruined, but he has ruined souls, and for those his life, were it tenfold more valuable, is no offering. Nay, the tears of the murderer even cannot give life to the murdered. The repentance of the tormentor should save the soul that he slew, and rent, stained and lost, to its doom. It is one of the shallownesses of our modern religionism that it is losing the vision of the horrible meaning of sin; and because it has lost the vision of God's white righteousness which reveals that meaning, men are content with half-repentance in consequence. They feed themselves with false hopes, and make poor shammy work of Christian living after a life which has led other souls to destruction. We do not preach a doctrine of despair, but we shall always warn against comforting ourselves with amiable theories, which merely look amiable. This awful burden rests on many a soul; that it has tempted many other souls to sin, and to consequent ruin. Those so tempted and so fallen have again tempted others. The evil goes on working; how far and how wide, the sinner does not know. Only the day of judgment will unfold the awful tale,—only the retributions of eternity will settle the dark account.

Let men take heed to their ways, lest the sinful pleasures of a fleeting hour load them with guilt that no man can measure, and sink them in perdition's lowest depths.

Religious Impressions.

The simplest lessons are often the most impressive and abiding. Many years ago a child was leaving the junior department of a city school for a new home in the country. As he left, his old teacher put her hand upon his head, and in a single simple sentence commended him to God and to good. Years passed, and the child grew up, and read books—English, French, German, Greek—on ethics, and listened to lectures on the same subject, by famous professors in a venerable university. But no word which he read in the pages of ancient philosophers, or listened to from the lips of living teachers, ever proved to him a beacon-light, like the simple words of his old school mistress. In the time of temptation, the horrid discussions of the philosophers were forgotten, or were remembered only to cause bewilderment as to the basis of right duty; but the lesson of childhood shone then most clearly in the secret chamber of the soul, and neither time nor doubt had power to dim its radiance. That, nothing could obscure. that, nothing can obscure. Here is the power which God has given to those who train the little ones. Perhaps neither mother nor teacher can lead the child into the knowledge of the world's deeper wisdom; but a few simple, earnest words for God and good, for either, may do far more—they may enter into the very being of the child, to be a strength in weakness, a refuge in temptation, and a cherished memory in the long, hard conflict of earthly life. This is not the wisdom which is taught by the speculative thinkers; but it is the best and most enduring wisdom, nevertheless.

"THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM," No. 10.

THE KINGDOM AND THE PARABLES.

Having in preceding papers examined a number of passages which are supposed to teach the popular doctrine concerning the kingdom of God, namely, that it has nothing of an Israelitish element in it, but is constituted of all persons whether Jews or Gentiles, who become the true disciples of Christ, in short that the church is the kingdom, I propose now to devote a few conducing articles to some of the parables of our Lord, keeping the same object in view.

I need hardly say that certain parables spoken by our Lord are supposed to favor the idea that "the kingdom of God," really signifies "the church" or the state of matters which obtain among the disciples of Christ during what is known as "the present dispensation." It is remarkable that even advanced millenarians are found maintaining this position. To set this matter fairly before the reader I shall quote a few of the utterances given forth by some of these writers on this point.

The late B. W. Newton, in his "Aids to Prophetic Inquiry, third series," in a chapter on the parables contained in Matt. xiii., says, "There are parts of the New Testament which very distinctly supply the prophetic history of Christianity during the present period." "This instruction is generally conveyed in prophetic parables; of which the Marriage Supper—the wise and the foolish Virgins—the servants trading with the Talents, the sheep and the goats, are examples; all these parables refer to the Professing Church. But the 13th chapter of Matthew affords the most important example. The object of our Lord in this chapter is, as he himself says, to teach us respecting the 'Mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven'.... respecting the introduction of Christianity by the foolishness of preaching,' and respecting its subsequent corruptions.... The kingdom of heaven is to exist in the earth at two very different periods: first, while the world remains under the power of Satan as it now is; secondly, when it shall be sustained by the manifested and glorious power of Christ, after Satan has been bound. These are conditions circumstantially very different; but the essential points of similarity are paramount to any of the circumstantial differences; and therefore those who profess the name of Christ now and those who will bear that name in the Millennium, are alike regarded as subjects of the same kingdom. They have the same King—the same Legislator—the same Priest—the same Redemption. They differ only in circumstantial relations. The kingdom of heaven is also called the kingdom of Christ, because he is its Head. Thus, Christendom, i. e., Christ's kingdom, is an equivalent expression to kingdom of heaven as used in this chapter of Matthew." Thus far Mr. Newton.

In a little work on the gospel the late W. Godson (Liverpool) says, "I believe that the past and present imperfect state of things connected with the Christian dispensation, is properly designated the kingdom of God, because the Savior speaking of this state of things designates it the kingdom of heaven, see Matt. xiii. Here the Savior evidently describes the Christian institution from its commencement to its close. First. Showing in the parable of the Sower the way in which the kingdom of heaven is peopled. Second. Foretelling the existence of the kingdom of heaven in the midst of a corrupt world, in the parable of the Tares. Third. Pointing out its small beginning as a grain of Mustard seed, and its extensive growth. Fourth. Predicting its corruption in the parable of the leaven, a substance that throughout the Scriptures represents evil, and which was to be introduced amongst the good seed amongst his people, and work until the whole became leavened. Paul says the mystery of iniquity worked in his day, and the awful extent to which the kingdom has been corrupted in our day, is only perceived by those who faithfully compare it with God's word. Fifth. The Savior reveals to the sacrifice some will make to enjoy the inestimable blessings of the gospel in the parable of the Hid Treasure, and of the man seeking Goodly Pearls. Sixth. He likens the kingdom of heaven to a net gathering all kinds of fishes, good and bad; evidently pointing out the mixed nature of the subjects of this kingdom; but they are to be separated at the close of the present dispensation. In harmony with this interpretation of the chapter, Jesus says (verse 41), in explaining the parable of the tares, 'the Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them who do iniquity.... Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father!' The present is the kingdom in its probationary form, an institution for subjugating men to God, a state of trial to prepare subjects for the future glorious manifestation of the kingdom. The one the kingdom and patience of Jesus; the other the kingdom in its glorified state, where God's people shall be rewarded for all their past sufferings. But those converted to God are as truly under the Divine government now, and consequently in God's kingdom as they will be in the future; the difference is that God now reigns over them in a state of trial and suffering, but then in glorified circumstances." So far Mr. Godson.

These quotations may serve to give us some idea of the sense in which certain of the parables of our Lord are understood by many who have arrived at comparatively sound views as to the national element of the kingdom as it shall exist in the future. They have not got rid of the popish idea of the church being the kingdom.

Thus, Mr. Newton is by far too assertive and scarcely at all demonstrative. Where is his proof of the assertion that "those who profess the name of Christianity, are subjects of Christ's kingdom?" Those are never so designated in the Scriptures, but are repeatedly termed "heirs." "Heirs of the kingdom," "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." And his assertion that "Christendom, i.e. Christ's kingdom is an equivalent expression to kingdom of heaven," is equally destitute of foundation; for the term "Christendom" is just a human term invented in the dark ages to express the popish idea of Christ reigning through his vicar the successor of the Apostle Peter seated at Rome the then mistress of the world.

Mr. Godson's statement that "The present is the kingdom in its gathering form, an institution for subjugating men to God, a state of trial to prepare subjects for the future glorious manifestation of the kingdom," is open to the same remark. Why does he say that it is "subjects" that are being prepared and not "heirs?" And if subjects are only now preparing, how can the kingdom at present have any real existence?

Coming a little closer to Matt. xiii. I would have the reader to notice a distinction which is apt to be overlooked. There are six parables in this chapter each of which is introduced with the statement, "The kingdom of heaven is like," so and so, the wheat and tares, mustard seed growing to be a tree, leaven in meal, treasure hid in a field, merchant seeking goodly pearls, and a net cast into the sea. These are preceded by the parable of the sower, which, while the seed represents "the word of the kingdom," differs from all the others inasmuch as it is not introduced with the statement, "The kingdom of heaven is like" so and so.

Regardless of this important distinction Mr. Newton, speaking of the parable of the sower, says, "It refers to the mode in which our dispensation was introduced. The agency by which the Apostle expected 'the kingdom of heaven' to be introduced was glorious power; but instead of this it was lowly testimony. The result was not universality of success, it was almost universal failure. This first parable, therefore, fixes a character upon the whole period, of which it commences the history.... It could not be that dispensation in which the Messiah of Israel shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God".... Strange that the saints of God should ever have confounded between periods so dissimilar. It could only have been because our eye had ceased to be single; because we had sought to reign as kings when we should rather have desired to be as the offscouring of all things."

Mr. Newton here speaks of the confounding of periods as a strange thing to be done by the saints of God, including himself among those who had done so. But he apparently did not see that he was still continuing to confound the two periods in a very important respect, inasmuch as he applies the same designation to both, namely, "the kingdom of God." If he, a believer in the coming kingdom, could fall into this error, what wonder that the world, and many professing Christians, should be in darkness on the subject. But the fact is that the parable of the sower was introduced into a parable was intended to teach some particular truth. This has been carried to so great a length by some commentators that in "the parable of the good Samaritan the two pence given to the inn-keeper are supposed to represent the two ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper! But a glance at some of the parables and a comparison with plain statements of Scripture, is sufficient to show that this is not the case; but that each parable was designed to illustrate some point in particular, and that the various accessories of persons (dead or alive) places (ruins, etc., and the actions ascribed to the actors represented, are but the filling up of the picture.

Take, for example, the parable of the ten virgins, and it will be found that the one point illustrated and enforced is "always ready." The number of the virgins has no relation to the number of the saved or lost, or having preference in any other way. Neither can it be said that the season of "midnight" mentioned in the parable has any particular truth to teach. The particular feature having a lesson in it is a reserve stock of oil, and, it may be added, the impossibility of a supply from a neighbor, and the consequent difficulty, from want of time, of obtaining a supply from a regular source. Again, in the parable of the vineyard let not husbandmen, evidently intended to illustrate the punishment of the Jewish nation for its rejection of the Messiah, we have a representation in the filling up of the picture, that the husbandmen were fully aware that it was the Son of their landlord whom they resolved to put to death. But as a matter of actual fact this was not the case. We have proof of this in the prayer of our Lord while on the cross for those who put him to death, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." And the Apostle Peter makes a pointed reference to this in his address to the very Jerusalem Jews at the beautiful gate of the temple, "I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers." And again, the Apostle Paul, in his first letter to the Corinthians, says, speaking of the wisdom of God in a mystery, "Which none of the princes (or rulers, R. V.) of this world knew; for had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."

I submit that what I have just mentioned, shows that extreme caution is necessary in drawing conclusions from parables beyond the particular point or points they were evidently intended to illustrate; and above all, in making a parable the basis of any doctrine that is not expressly indicated by the purpose for which it is spoken, or that is not clearly taught in the plainer portions of the Word.

The parable of the wheat and tares (Matt. xiii.), in next article.

Letter Drawer.

This letter from a brother in Laredo, Texas, explains itself. Will some Brother or Sister who has the cause of Christ at heart and means to spare, send us of their bounty, that this family may still have THE RESTITUTION.

Editor Restitution:

We are sorry to let you know that we are not able to pay for the paper any longer, as we are living in one of the worst dead-beat counties in the State. We have a farm of twenty acres and planted most of it twice, first in oats, corn and cotton, then in millet, sorghum and turnips, but raised nothing at all. In our garden we have raised about five dollars worth of vegetables. Most of our neighbors have not done so well, and a few have done better. We have just enough horses and cattle for our use, but no surplus. Our stock is all in poor condition for wintering. Grass is very scarce and stock will decline as soon as we have frost. This county has received but little aid from abroad. It has no railroad connection with other sections. We have been taking THE RESTITUTION 2½ years, ever since we were baptized. If can will discontinue the paper we will renew when we can. Myself and wife are the only believers in the Abrahamic faith within one hundred miles, that we know of. For several years we have had no preaching except from THE RESTITUTION.

Yours in the faith,

Sister E. B. Parker, of Mancelona, Mich., sends us two new subscribers, and then says:

"I felt deeply affected in reading your farewell address, and do not feel capable of expressing my kind regards for you. I have found so much blessed comfort in your good paper; it has been both food and drink for me. I, like yourself, am drawing near the sunset of this life. I am seventy-four past and am waiting for the summons of our dear Lord and Savior. Oh how joyful and blessed will the meeting be in the kingdom where we shall meet all our friends to part no more. God comfort you and all our dear brothers and sisters in the Lord."

Brother N. J. Morgan, of Winchester, Va., says in a letter dated Nov. 12, 1886:

"It is so hard to get some of our people to see the importance of supporting a paper. They are like the man that turned his back to the sun and made his boast that he had no need of it, that he could see without it, &c, notwithstanding the hole to see the truth that they have received from a paper, often asking if you had read such and such an article? Was not it grand? Yet when you begin to talk about contributing to that same paper, some other subject is at once sprung. And so it goes on, and the poor, hard-working Editor, like the poor, travelling preacher, although (like the Savior of mankind) once rich but now poor, that we, through their poverty might be made rich. Brethren, God's ways are equal, man's ways are unequal. So let us no longer sow to the flesh and thereby reap corruption, but let us all sow to the Spirit by each one doing our equal part in the Lord's vineyard, that when the harvest or reaping time comes, we may all have an equal share of the fruits from the tree of life on the banks of the beautiful river in the Paradise of God."

CAIRO, Neb.

Editor Restitution:

Since my return home from the State Conference of Nebraska, I have been very busy in attending to my temporal wants during the week days, and preaching every Sunday from one to two sermons. We have neglected to make our report owing to the brethren not knowing just what amount they would pay to the support of the annual conference. Owing to the drought in this part of Nebraska our crops are very light, not enough to do us. Therefore the brethren are afraid to make a promise of any certain amount, but they say they will do all they can. Although we are poor in this world's goods, we are rich in the one faith and heirs of the kingdom we hope. Your brother in the faith,

F. M. CLINTON.

Sister Lydia Chaplin, writing from Millerton, Kan., after enclosing her renewal says:

"We cannot afford to do without our silent teacher. It is encouraging to read the kind letters from the dear ones of the Household of Faith, so full of instruction. Some speaks of trial. Yes we all have trial, we are too be a tried people, and our Master will not give us a trial that we are not able to bare. The trouble is we are to apt to complain when trials come. We are not patient enough. We should be willing to say, let the trials come, I am submissive if I suffer for Jesus sake. And to those dear young converts at Pierceton, Ind., and Nora, be faithful. When trial and temptation come, as come they will, tell it to Jesus, ask his aid and he will help you in every time of need. You are young, but you will never regret taking Christ as your guide. When our Savior comes may he find us ready is my prayer."

MARRIED.

RAILTON—BOUK.—Mr. James A. Railton and Miss Mary C. Bouk, both of Fonthill, Ont., were married by Elder R. V. Lyon at his residence in Clarksville, near Suspension Bridge, N. Y., Nov. 9, 1886. "May the goodness of Israel's God rest upon them during their mortal pilgrimage, and at the rending of Jesus our Life Giver, be found worthy, full a resurrection out from among the dead ones to inherit the earth in its restored state.

Brother Wiley Jones' work "The Gospel of the Kingdom." Leather binding, former price $1.50; now 75c. Cloth gilt, former price, $1.00; now 75c. Friends, you who are at work in the Master's vineyard, think of this chance offered you from week to week to get the book that gives the foundation of our hope in the clearest manner possible, for so little money. It is not right for these books to remain long on our shelves. There is work for them all over the land. "Key Words" is another work by the same author, former price 25c.; now 15c.; and "Theanalopsis," former price 10c.; now 5c.

Have you any smart infidels in your neighborhood? Do they sneer at and ridicule your views of the Bible? If you have we have a little work here that will aid you in routing them completely, and if you have none near you now you can scarcely stir many miles without meeting one, and if you are posted in their theories you have already won half of the battle. Sister Reed's little book, "Creation vs. Evolution" is the work we refer to, and all should possess a copy. Price 25c.

Our lamented Brother Magruder's "Reply to Ingersoll" is another book that should be more largely circulated. It is just what its name indicates—a Reply to Mr. Ingersoll—a reply that Mr. Ingersoll or any other infidel will not even try to answer, so it stands, for its foundation is laid in God's holy word. Price 50c.

The Gift of Life Eternal through Jesus Christ is the great subject for us. Eternal Life a Free Gift. Brother J. H. Pettengill has written a book on this subject, and all who read it say the work is well done. We can send you a copy for $1.00.

We write and talk much of the Kingdom and its Restoration. Brother Silas Hemp has written a book on this subject that will aid us very much in our study of the Kingdom and the wonders of the Restoration. One dollar will place it on your table.

There have been different ages and dispensations in the past—we live now—there is an Age to Come, and Bro. Westlake has told us in his work on this subject, the result of his lifetime's search as to the nature and the proximity of the age coming hereafter. This is a large book of over 500 pages. Price $3.00.

Space will not admit of mention of half what our shelves contain. The Emphatic Diaglott, by B. Wilson; Christ's Kingdom, Where Is It and What is It? by Jos. Lasier; A Translation of Matthew's Gospel, by Chas. Gardner; that grand work, A Letter to a Friend, by Mrs. Woodruff; Which is Right? or Is Christ's Throne in Heaven or on the Earth? by Thos. Wilson; What Shall These Things Be? by H. Bowman; A Letter to a Baptist Minister, by Daniel Howard; the Doctrine of Baptism, besides a host of those little silent leaflets that work all the time. When you are resting, being wearied, they keep on. Who will help circulate these books? They are all good. There may be an isolated expression that some might object to, but the teaching in the main is endorsed by all our best writers and thinkers. We are ready to fill your orders. ## "PERFECT THROUGH SUFFERING."

Is there no other way, O God!
Except through sorrow, pain and loss,
To stamp Christ's likeness on my soul—
No other way except the cross?

Through eyes grown dim with falling tears,
To rule some other path I seek;
"The cross is heavy, Lord," I pray,
"So heavy, and I am so weak."

"I cannot drink this bitter cup,"
I plead with passionate protest;
"Lord, let it pass—thy hand lies hard Upon me—I am sore distressed."

And then a voice stills all my soul,
As stilled the waves on Galilee;
"Can'st thou not be as the furnace heat,
If 'mid the flames I walk with thee?"

"I bore the cross, I know its weight,
I drank the cup I hold for thee:
Can'st thou not follow where I lead?
I'll give thee strength—lean thou on me."

And then, with sudden shame, I fall
Low at his blessed, pierced feet.
"Lord, teach me how to follow thee.
And make me for thy service meet."

"I am not worthy e'en to lift
Thy hallowed cross—thy pain to share;
Perfect through suffering, if thou will,
So I at last thine image bear."

The following letters were received and read at the Quarterly Conference held at Plymouth, Ind., Nov. 13, 1886.

Dear Brethren and Sisters Assembled at Plymouth:

When you last heard from me I was at Winchester, Va., where I hoped and expected my home would be till I fell asleep, or the Master came to gather his believing ones home; but that hope was not realized, for you will notice my address today is Dover, Del. I felt very sorry to leave Winchester, for I had formed a strong attachment for my brethren and sisters there during my short stay among them, and also liked the climate much better than here, though this is a beautiful country and very fruitful. The great trouble is, it is malarious. I had commenced a letter to THE RESTITUTION in August, but was stricken down with malarial fever, which brought me almost to death's door, but by the blessing of God upon the medical treatment of a beloved brother, Dr. W. R. Way, I enjoy again my usual health.

My husband thinks he can succeed better here in earning a livelihood than in West Virginia. But, dear friends, it matters but little where we are in this pilgrim state if we are the Lord's and striving to honor him in all our ways. He can preserve us from evil, from disease, and death, (if his will be so), till he comes to claim his own.

This mortal life is fast ebbing away with many of us. Our heads are whitened, and our strength is not firm as when in the vigor of man and womanhood. But oh, how good the Lord has been to preserve us so many years amid the ravages of disease and death, and has given us a "goodly heritage" in this land of plenty. We do not properly estimate our blessings or thank the Lord as we should for them. Oh, for his incorruptible spirit to quicken us to renewed diligence in his service, and help us to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset, that we may run (the remainder of) the race set before us with patience, looking unto Jesus."

How I would like to be with you at your conference. That privilege is denied me, but I will be thankful that I was once permitted to meet Brother Chaplin and many others, whom I have not forgotten, and whom I expect to meet in the kingdom when the dear Master comes. May your conference prove a foretaste of that final meeting, and you all be wonderfully blessed and strengthened by it, to fill up the remainder of your lives with usefulness in the Master's cause, is the prayer of your Brother and Sister

D. and A. HOWARD.

To the Church of God in Christ, in Conference Assembled at Plymouth, Indiana:

We as fellow pilgrims are waiting for the kingdom of God. As the time draws near for your yearly assembling, our hearts are deeply stirred with intense yearning to be with you. After many years of sweet communion together, we feel that only those deprived of such privileges can truly appreciate them. Our minds go back in fond remembrance to the many times we have left those meetings saddened only by the parting, always feeling greatly strengthened for the conflict after listening to the many words of holy trust and onward cheer, inciting each other to love and noble deeds.

We are here associated with a little band of like faith, taken out of earth's millions by the good news of the kingdom of God, who are willing to sacrifice the present for the coming glory, living in unity of the Spirit and in the bonds of peace, endeavoring to let our feeble light shine, feeling that the world's great conflict and the saints' final deliverance is near at hand.

While deprived of such feasts as you are enjoying, yet we are with you in spirit, and we pray God that in your coming together, self may be dead, and Christ truly alive in each one of you, that the cause may be benefitted and each individual better prepared to overcome through him who has loved us, and that we together with you may be gathered in the general assembly where poverty, sickness or death will part us never more. Your brother and sister,

D. T. and P. R. HALSTEAD.

To the Church of God at Plymouth:

Also all of like precious faith who may be gathered together with you in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior. We wish grace, mercy and peace to be with you all. Also be ready for the coming of our Master. Each one examine him or herself and know that your names are written in heaven, know that you are entitled to eternal life. Think of the new earth, think of the Paradise of God, think of the Tree of Life, of the River of Life; think of the Beautiful City, and of the countless host of redeemed ones from every nation, tongue and people. Then think of the Son of the Living God smilingly in their midst. Brothers and sisters, this is what we are thinking about just now. And also think of being there too, and of meeting you all there never to part again. It may be very soon, let us be ready, clothed with righteousness. We who look for the coming of the Just One should keep ourselves ready. May God bless and protect you all at all times, is the prayer of your brother and sister in Christ,

WALTER L. and MARTHA KILE.

Dear Brethren:

May the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, in whom we move, live and have our being, be pleased not only with you, but all looking and waiting for the coming again of the Lord Jesus. I feel very thankful for what he has done for me, and always feel blessed while praying. May God's blessings rest upon our dear Brother Chaplin. May he live yet many days to see the fruit of his labor as minister of the blessed gospel and as Editor of THE RESTITUTION. I send greetings to you all. May we all grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and forever, amen. God bless you all, my heart and prayer is with you. Join in prayer for me. Your brother in Jesus.

The following letter, though of a private nature, was by request read at the conference.

Dear Brother and Sister Underwood:

I would be glad to come to conference but think I cannot on account of our building a church. The men have to have their dinner and come to my house for it. It is close to my house. I feel a great interest in it, but my greatest interest is in the blessed Savior's coming. Oh, how glad, how glad I would be to have our old earth righted up and we enjoy perfect peace. I send my love to Brother Thompson and family, Brother Chaplin and wife, Brother Hersh and Julia. And now to all the rest of the dear brothers and sisters, one word to all, O live near to God, looking for that blessed hope which will soon be revealed. Oh, pray much, and pray for me. This from your sister in full hope of eternal life.

Yours truly,

MARGARET WOODWARD.

To the Church of God at Plymouth:

Children of Abraham, brothers and sisters, co-heirs of the kingdom with Jesus Christ, Son of David, according to promise, to raise us up, poor, weak mortals, far above all things created; moreover, also the only begotten Son of God, the everlasting Father, the Creator of all things, whose days have no beginning, whose hours are not numbered, his times pass into eternity with a change, one and all, greeting.

I feel exceeding sorrowful that I cannot meet you at your annual business assembling, and behold face to face those dear ones who are doing so much for the cause. But as this hope is temporal, I must bid it adieu cheerfully for I possess one other hope which is unseen and eternal, for which no doubt, all the precious ones will say, amen. I very much regret that our dear Editor must retire, yet I believe in justice to himself and respect to his years, it is becoming in him to do so, and was I appointed to chose his successor, I feel that I should shrink from making choice from among so much zeal and intelligence, lest in doing so I should overlook the claims of others equally meritorious. I can but hope the Lord will guide you in your choice; I also hope and pray that we as a body of called out people may be able to support the paper with a more needful pecuniary aid than we have done in the past. As this is no time to dwell upon trials and tribulations I will close by asking to be remembered always in the prayers of the faithful.

AARON OLMSTEAD.

P. S. Brother Olmstead's letter came too late to be presented at the proper time.

This letter did not reach us till Saturday, Nov. 20th, after the conference closed.

ASHLYVILLE, N. C., Nov. 10, '86.

To the Conference Assembled in Chapel Hall, at Plymouth, Indiana. Dear Brethren and Sisters in the Faith of the Gospel:

We greet you all this morning by letter and in spirit, wishing for you a blessed meeting and a time for gathering of spiritual strength which may long be recalled as a season most precious. Let each one make the most of the occasion. Unused opportunities are apt to be remembered with sorrow. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." "He that confesseth me before men, him will I confess before my Father and all his holy angels."

We are pleasantly situated in many respects, and among a people who are more generally given to religious thought and sentiment than we have been accustomed to seeing; but of like precious faith we have found none save Sister Elsie Merwin, of St. Joseph, Mich. We have attended Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist and Disciple churches, and have heard many good things and edifying as pertains to Christian living, and with it all an admixture of the gross errors which most of us have unlearned. With the strong religious sentiment obtaining here it is probable the simple, real truths of the gospel would find lodgment in willing and honest hearts if their minds could be enlightened by a preacher. May God open the way. We hold fast our hope of eternal life at the coming of our Redeemer and exhort you each to never give up the race, but contend the more earnestly as you near the goal. We hope to meet again in this life; if not, "are we not all in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" Let us work for that and wait. Sister and Brother Taber desire to be remembered. Yours in Christ.

AMOS P. and JULIA T. HARRIS.

Report of Annual Assembly.

The Annual Assembly of the Church of God convened at the House of the Brethren, in Winchester, Va., as announced in THE RESTITUTION, and was truly, (all things considered according to the prayers of many dear ones who wrote from different states to the Assembly), a demonstration for the furtherance of the gospel of the blessed God. Friday night the usual introductory discourse was delivered from the first chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. Saturday was spent in Social Meeting and reading letters from churches and individuals of like precious faith, in ten different states and Baltimore City, Md., much to the edification of the Assembly, and all the more was our hearts gladdened on hearing the warm sympathy expressed by the authors of the letters, for the prosperity of the glorious cause in which we are engaged. Preaching at night, with good attendance. On Sunday the usual services before and afternoon, with good attendance. At night after preaching, we had a feast of fat things in participating in the rich memorials of a Savior's love, with the dear ones, assembled to let their light so shine before men as to constrain others to walk in the way the fathers' trod. By this time two sisters had taken on the saving name, in baptism, who while singing one of the sweet songs of Zion at the close of the services, so, while the dear brethren and sisters were giving each other the right hand of fellowship, were welcomed into the heavenly relationship as citizens of the Household of Faith. May they ever be mindful of their covenant and hold fast the beginning of the confidence of rejoicing firm unto the end, that they with all the ransomed ones receive a crown of glory, that fadeth not away. The meeting was protracted by the writer (after the preaching brethren had left), until Wednesday night, with quite an interesting time. And such was the spirit that characterized the meeting throughout, that as expressed by the tried and true ones of this part of the habitable that they felt drawn nearer to each other than ever before, and that they felt a greater need of adhering strictly to the discipline of the gospel, so as not give place to (in the language of the apostle Paul) for an hour to perverters of the gospel that the gospel of God may continue with us until the coming of the Just One.

On account of a severe spell of sickness by the writer the above report has been deferred, but his heart is full of gratitude to Almighty God, that he is still permitted to cheer the hearts of the faithful by telling them how good the Lord is to us in permitting us to still have such a good time in the all saving name of his Son.

N. J. MORGAN.

ZOLLARS.—August 26, 1886, Elizabeth Zollars, wife of Jacob Zollars and mother to the writer, aged sixty-eight years, nine months and twenty-seven days.

She leaves an aged companion with whom she has shared the joys and sorrows incident to this life for forty-nine years, to travel the remainder of life's journey alone, and four sons and three daughters to mourn the loss of a kind mother. Our mother had been in declining health for several years with female weakness and nervous debility, and during the last year of her life had become to be quite an invalid. Although we could see that age had frosted her glossy hair to all very white and disease, like the chilly blast upon the autumn leaf, had faded the once fair cheek, yet to our fondness we still thought she would be spared to us a little longer.

We watched her failing year by year,
As they went slowly by,
But cast far from us every fear
That she must ever die,
And when at last the death stroke came,
Unwilt, to ours, no turn,
The hearts that held her here so fast
Were almost broken too.

And for the ones still left to us,
Our father, aged and lone,
Who hears perhaps by night and day,
The old, familiar tone,
We'll gather closer round him now
To guard from every ill,
As near the darksome river side
He waits a higher will.

Our mother no doubt would have lived longer had she not two days before her death accidentally met with a fatal injury while attempting to walk from her chair to her bed.

August 28th she was followed by a large number of relatives and friends to Spring Hill Cemetery where she was laid away to rest till she hears the voice of the Life Giver bidding her to arise and come forth. Oh, ye wheels of time roll speedily on and bring about that joyful day!

A funeral discourse was preached October 10th by Elder Bailey, of the Christian church, predicated upon the fourteenth chapter of Job and also upon the words of our Savior, "I am the resurrection and the life." She had been a member of the Christian church for about thirty-two years. A few weeks before her death, as she lay in her bed, I was reading to her in the good book and conversing upon the truths it contained, when she remarked that she believed every word in the Bible, and that she had been thinking a great deal of late about the state of the dead, and she had come to the conclusion that the dead do not know anything until the resurrection.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jay" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jay6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1886. "Feb" Febroary, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1887, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

THE COMING AGE,

—1878—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. Westhey.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar totems, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious researches covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the will of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 400 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

Or, A Scriptural View of the Second Coming of Christ, with the Wonderful Signs that will Precede It, and the still more Wonderful Things that will Follow It.

—By Silas Henn.—

NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS:

The book is truthful, reverent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Reign.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Certainly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Sydney Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before venturing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry.....The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and to restore to its place in the ecclesiasticism of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a worldly, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

"THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM." No. 11.

THE KINGDOM AND THE PARABLES.

The parable of the wheat and the tares, contained in Matt. xiii. 25–30, with our Lord's explanation of it in verses 37–43, is held by many to be given in illustration of the simultaneous existence of the good and the bad in the church during the present dispensation. The result is that, because Jesus said, "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man who sowed good seed in his field," etc., the necessary conclusion is, that the kingdom and church are identical.

But where, either in the parable or the explanation is the evidence to be found to prove that the existence of the good and the bad in the church is the point taught by our Lord? This parable is fortunately accompanied with a formal explanation, in which the word church is not only absent, but a term the very opposite is employed. On the point in question instead of the explanation being, "the field is the CHURCH," as the popular view would require, it is "the field is the WORLD." This, at the very outset, ought to be conclusive against the popular theory, even supposing no other cause readily to hand.

Again, if the church were the thing intended by our Lord, how does the teaching of both parable and explanation that the wicked are to remain undisturbed in the church, agree with the plain teaching elsewhere regarding "the church," that express provision is made for the expulsion of offenders? Thus in Matt. xviii. 15–17, a certain class of offenders are by our Lord's authority to be treated "as heathen men and publicans." This also is conclusive against the popular theory, even though it might be difficult to find another.

"The field is the world;" but the question naturally arises here, Under what dispensation? If the "field" be taken to represent the world at large, in the present dispensation, how can the surprise of the farmer's servants be accounted for, seeing that there must have been plenty of the tares class in the world while the wheat was being sown?

Again, if the several points in the parable are to be taken into account, beyond what are given in the explanation, it shows a field cleared and prepared for the reception of the good seed, and entirely free from tares. But this cannot by any means refer to the present world during any period of its history down to the present date.

The foregoing reasons, though of a negative character, seem to me to be sufficient to set aside the interpretation that makes the church, or the world as at present constituted, the scene represented by this parable.

Reverting to the similitude employed by the author of the parable, "THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN is likened," and bearing in mind that, in the four gospels at least, the terms, "kingdom of heaven" and "kingdom of God" are convertible terms, suppose we make a trial in this direction. The kingdom of God is to be established in the earth "under the whole heaven," in "THE WORLD to come," by the Lord at his second appearing. What are the circumstances which shall then exist as regards good and bad people, and their treatment? Have we not the world as a cleared field, in which a new crop of people shall be grown?

Before giving a Scriptural demonstration of this, I beg the readers' special attention to a point in this parable in which it very materially differs from the parable of the sower, but which is very liable to be overlooked. In the parable of the sower the good seed represents the truth preached, namely, "THE WORD OF THE KINGDOM." In the parable of the wheat and the tares, the good seed represents "THE CHILDREN OF THE KINGDOM." This is sufficient to show that there is nothing in common between the two parables.

Let us now look at a few testimonies from the prophets in which we have a description of the agencies which shall be employed in the setting up of the Messiah's kingdom, and the condition of matters which shall then be introduced. In some of the passages both causes and effects are distinctly mentioned:—

"I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thy inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." Psalm ii.

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." Dan. ii. 44.

"It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." Micah iv.

"Behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many. . . . It shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory. And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles. And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord." Isa. lxvi.

"As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: and I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant. And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord. For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me: there will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings, and the firstfruits of your oblations, with all your holy things. So I will accept you with your sweet savor, when I bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye have been scattered; and I will be sanctified in you before the heathen. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers. And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for all the evils that ye have committed. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord God." Ezek. xx.

"And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations." Isa. lxi.

"And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them." Isa. lxv.

"Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified." Isa. lx.

"Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Jude.

"I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True; and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew but he himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called the Word of God. And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God." Rev. xix.

In these quotations we have the means by which a new dispensation is to be inaugurated in connection with the re-establishment of God's kingdom. The infliction of judgments shall form a prominent part of the divine procedure. This is in strict accordance with the necessity of the case as well as with divine plan. The flood in the days of Noah, the destruction of "the cities of the plain," the extirpation of the nations of Canaan, the fate of Nineveh and Babylon, all illustrate the necessity for occasional displays of the bare and holy arm of the Almighty. "When his judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness;" otherwise most strikingly declared through the prophet Zephaniah:—

"Wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the earth will be devoured with the fire of my jealousy. For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent." Zeph. iii.

But not alone with judgment shall the kingdom of heaven be introduced; for "he shall judge (or vindicate) the poor of the people; he shall save the children of the needy." "He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass; as showers that water the earth." There shall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon; and they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth." Psa. lxxii.

We might ask here, Does not this description answer substantially to a cleared field sown with good seed and giving promise of a good crop? And does it not thus far correspond with the requirements of the parable? I have pointed out the fact that "the good seed represents the children of the kingdom;" and I have now to mention that there is but one other instance of the use of this phrase "the children of the kingdom" in the New Testament. It occurs in Matthew's Gospel, is used by our Lord himself, and is applied to the children of Israel, even while they were unbelieving and worthy of rejection. See Matt. viii. 12. Much more shall it apply to Israel when purged of the rebels, and planted in their own land.

While the designation "the children of the kingdom" does not belong to the nations of the earth, there seems to be a fitness in contemplating "the nations of them that are saved who shall walk in the light of the New Jerusalem," as substantially occupying the same position with Israel as subjects of the Messiah's dominion.

As I have already intimated we are not necessarily to expect in the facts represented exact conformity with every feature of the parable as to time and circumstance. And while as to the time of sowing the tares, the millennial kingdom may show that exact correspondence with the time of sowing the wheat, which we might be led to expect from the parable, we must bear in mind that this feature is not contained in our Lord's explanation. It is remarkable, however, that at the close of the thousand years, the agency by which wickedness is introduced into the world, is identical with the agency in the parable by which the tares are sown. "The enemy that sowed them is the devil," is our Lord's explanation. In the Apocalypse it is said "When the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations," etc. Their end is also the same; "Fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them." "They shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

It is generally allowed by all who hold the personal reign of Christ upon the earth, that the thousand years shall be but the preliminary stage of the kingdom of God, seeing it is only at the close of that period that all things shall be subjected to the divine rule. Besides the destruction of the deceived and rebellious nations referred to as taking place at the close of that period, there is also a time of judicial assize, when "they are judged every man according to his works." Rev. xx. 11–15. It is then only that the righteous are finally freed from all mixture and contact with evil, and "shine forth in the kingdom of God their Father," that kingdom being then delivered over to its primary owner, but him who has "put down all rule and authority and power, having reigned till he hath put all enemies under his feet."

I submit that on the whole this parable of the wheat and the tares fits at least as well the millennial period, as it can be shown to do the present dispensation.

The remaining parables of Matt. xiii. at a future opportunity.

UNKNOWN INFLUENCE.

How unconscious we often are when we utter words, or write a line, that there may be within winged seeds which will take root in some far off quiet place of which we have never dreamed, or by the way side we have never passed. From these may come flowers which will cheer and refresh, or, perchance, arrest steps that are hasting on to utter forgetfulness of God. Unknown influence: we all possess it, either for good, or for evil. It may be found in the little act of kindness; in a little word of love; a kind word to the stranger; or for the strong ones.

We may never suspect his sorrows,
Note his creases or his cares;
Never guess his hopes and longings,
Never hear his earnest prayers.

But the one who sees his striving,
May regard his feeble powers;
And the pearly gates may open
For the soul as well as ours.

THE DISCIPLE THAT JESUS LOVED.

There is a certain sadness connected with the attainment of two friends who have become so much to each other, that they divide the world into only two parts, "one where the loved object is, and one where it is not." It is too intense for this life; changes and separation will weaken it, or death disrupt it. But there is something sadder in the attachment of Christ and John. The deep devotion, the pure and generous heart, the tender sympathy, the trusting, loving nature of the latter, had so won upon the Savior, that every look he cast upon him was a caress, and every word he spoke, took the gentle tone of a mother addressing her child. He knew how his disciple loved him, and knew too how much he must suffer in the sufferings that awaited him. John, absorbed by his attachment, his countenance by turns made fearful and joyous at the kind words and glorious truths that fell from his Master's lips, seemed never to dream of approaching evil, of possible separation. Jesus, on the other hand, as he with his sorrowful face looked down upon him leaning contentedly on his breast, thought of the future. With his human heart beating warmly for the true, devoted friend on his bosom, he could not but sigh, knowing, as he did, the trials and sufferings his tender nature must yet pass through to prove its love for him. As, in imagination, I behold the two in each other's embrace, I seem to see tears on the cheeks of Jesus, at the same time that his hand bestows a caress. The implicit confidence and trust of his follower appealed to every noble quality of the heart, and he must in those moments have looked upon John, as a mother upon the smiles of her infant, when she knows that in a few hours the executioner's axe will leave it an orphan in the world. The dark hints he ever and anon threw out, filled John with wonder, rather than anxiety, and he loved on, indifferent to his own fate. The other disciples repeated this attachment, and far from being jealous, seemed affected by it. When Christ uttered those sad words, "One of you shall betray me," they dared not ask him who it was, but requested John, who they knew would not be rebuked, to do it for them. He, looking up from that pillow he could not surrender to any other head, said, "Lord, who is it?" and the Savior told him. The youngest of all, a mere youth when he began to follow Christ, he was yet most beloved of all.

John must have passed through strange states of mind, as the wondrous character of the being he loved so intimately and treated so familiarly, became revealed to him in his miracles and by his high claims. Christ seems always to choose him for a companion when about to accomplish any great event. John heard his predictions respecting Jerusalem and the Jewish nation; stood by when he took the hand of the dead daughter of Jairus, and bade her arise amid her astonished friends; was one of the three who ascended the Mount of Transfiguration, and saw the face and form he had so often outward assume the likeness and splendor of God; was in the garden on that night of fearful agony, and gazed on that pallid face streaked with blood, which had so often and so kindly smiled on him; and, last of all, beheld him ascend into heaven, triumphant over death and the grave.

But there is one event which gives John peculiar claims to being "that disciple whom Jesus loved." Christ had endured the agony in the garden; his scarred face had been spit upon; his cheek shamefully struck; the farce and insult of a trial endured; he had fainted under the cross as he struggled with it up the steep hill-side; and with his frame strung to the point of extremest sensibility, had been laid on the rough beams, and the bolts rudely crushed through his shrinking hands and feet, and thus suspended on high. Around him was the railing crowd, behind him a scoffing thief. All his friends had forsaken him and fled: and alone, all alone, he was left to wrestle with his doom. No, not quite alone, for nearer the cross than the taunting rabble stood his mother. It was her child, bleeding and dying there before her eyes, and what were the scoffs and violence of those around her? ay, what was death itself compared to the throes of maternal anguish that shook her bosom! There stood John, rivaling even the mother in love. He forgot he had a life to lose; he did not hear the taunts that were rained upon him, nor see the fingers of scorn that were pointed at his tears; he saw only his dying friend and Lord; beheld but the bosom on which he had so often rested his head, heaving and swelling as though the heart would burst its confinement, and the brow on which peace ever sat like a white winged dove, contracted with agony unutterable. True to the last, pale as the suffering one before him, he stood and wept in speechless sorrow. Christ, in the midst of his torture, and if the midst of the stupendous scheme he was finishing at such a fearful price, cut off from earth, and just as heaven too was about to abandon him, and the power of his Father was darkening over his spirit, was struck with his matchless love. The last, the wildest wave that ever broke over the soul of the Savior, was gathering for its flow, yet even then he gazed lovingly on those two faithful hearts, and his calm though failing voice reached their ears, and he said to his mother, "Behold thy son," and to John, "Behold thy mother." True-hearted disciple, faithful friend, take my place beside my mother; to thy love, so great for me, I can safely commit her. Oh! what a proof of confidence and attachment was that! So high an honor was never before paid human love. Oh! what an inheritance was that the Son of God gave him, his mother, and his affectionate confidence in the last hour of his suffering, and while standing on the portals of the eternal kingdom. No wonder that John, after that, took her to his own home, soothed her sorrows, nursed her declining years, and at last gently and sorrowfully laid her in her grave.

Years passed by, and changes and persecution came, but no change in the affection of John for his Master. Living in his life, he now lived to make known his death and resurrection. Love seemed to supply the place of native energy, and he passed into Asia, preaching the gospel, and planting churches, until at length the hand of the persecution reached him also, and he was banished to a lonely island in the Ægean Sea.

How long he remained there we know not; silence and uncertainty rest on his history. Alone he trod the desolate beach, cheered by no voice, solaced by no companionship. He whose happiness had consisted in laying his head on the bosom of his friend and Lord, was left without a friend. The monotonous dash of waves at his feet, the broad and boundless deep stretching away before him, the cry of the sea bird and the roar of the storm, these were the only sights and sounds left to the lonely exile. Day after day, and week after week, the same unvarying routine. The solitary walk on the shore, and still more solitary rest under an overhanging rock, filled up the measure of his employments. Ah, how sweet then was the remembrance of his long and affectionate interviews with Christ—how full of solace the words he had spoken, so sweet that the desert seemed peopled with angels, and the hoarse murmur of the sea sounded like an anthem of praise to God. As he stood and saw the sun go down on the deep, he remembered that just so it flashed over the Sea of Tiberias, when Jesus fed the five thousand. As he looked up to the silent firmament, gorgeous with stars, he remembered the strange night he passed with Jesus on Mount Tabor, looking on the same heavens; and when he pillowed his lonely head upon the sand, he thought, with throbbing heart, of him "who had not where to lay his head."

How long he lived thus in holy contemplation, to prepare him for the wondrous revelations about to be made, we know not; but one Sabbath morning, as he was walking the wild desert island, filled with thoughts of the world to come, he heard a voice repeating in trumpet tones behind him, "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last."

Turning to meet the voice, he saw a form dread enough to appal the stoutest man. A mantle wrapped it from the neck to the feet; the head and hair were white as wool, the eyes burned like fire, the feet shone like brass in a furnace; in his uplifted hand stars were blazing; his countenance was like the sun shining in its strength, and his voice like "the sound of many waters." No wonder the overwhelmed exile fell on his face as a dead man, before his fearful form and aspect, and dared not lift his eyes again from the earth, till the same terrible voice bade him arise. Of the wondrous visions that were then revealed to him, who can speak? The gates of hell and heaven were flung open to his view. He saw the smoke that curtained the bottomless pit, and the city whose only light is the presence of the Lamb; but the speechless agony, the terrible conflicts, the appalling sights, together with the splendors of the heaven of heavens, the throne and the white-vested elders, the dazzling glory of the crystal sea and rivers of paradise, the music of the harpers, the thrilling power of that loud hallelujah, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain," as it rolled from ten thousand tongues full on the throne of God and the Lamb, who can describe? That desolate island around John, was greater than Mount Carmel of old, when horses and chariots of fire encircled the prophet. God was there! unveiling himself, this world, and eternity, to a mortal.

This strange interview, with its long train of mysterious and fearful visions, was at last ended; as was also the exile of John, and he smiled once more in the midst of his friends. But the scenes he had passed through did not change his nature; he was the same gentle, loving being as ever. Overflowing with kindness and sympathy, all things else seemed worthless in comparison.

And when the lamp of life burned dimly, and his trembling voice could hardly articulate, he still spoke of love. It is said he lived to be eighty years of age, and then, too feeble to walk, was carried into church on men's shoulders, and, though scarcely able to speak, would faintly murmur, "Brethren, love one another." Affection was his life, and it seemed to him that the world could be governed by love.—J. T. Headley.

War Expected Any Day.

The views of Hon. S. S. Cox on the Eastern Question are expressed in the following item clipped from the Boston Journal and dated New York, Oct. 11:—"Minister S. S. Cox was busy all day yesterday receiving his political and personal friends. When asked about the Eastern Question he said: 'Matters at present look very blue. War is liable to occur at any moment. To explain the situation properly would take some time. Russia wants Constantinople, is the old saying, and this time she will get pretty near there. She first wants Bulgaria, and is near getting it. Her hostility to Prince Alexander was well known. He was made to run, but came back again. The next time he must have thought there was no use of fighting; Russian influence, so he went away of his own free will. This, I think, was very foolish. The people were all with him and he might just as well have remained. Now Russia will get Bulgaria, then Eastern Roumelia, and she is over the Balkans and within a stone's throw of Constantinople. The treaty of Berlin says Russia must stop at the mountains, but what does Russia care for this? Did she not fortify Batoum right in the face of Europe and the treaty? England, to be sure, made a slight protest, but what good did it do? Of course, when Russia makes this move there will be a great row. Austria is looking with envious eyes on part of that territory, and if she can get Germany's help she will fight for it. When we were at Bucharest the streets were full of Russian officers, who talked very loudly about what they would do. I expect war at any day.'"

And so it goes. What a day will bring forth we know not; but of this we are sure, that ultimately "the kingdoms of the world" will "become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." But fiercely must rage the storms until that endless calm shall come.

RENEW TODAY.

BE patient about articles. We are doing all we can.

WE propose, if desired on the part of our brethren, to give a brief outline history of our own past life. Shall probably defer this till in the month of January or, possibly, a little later. Our personal connection with some of the great religious movements of this remarkable century can be made, as we believe, a topic of interest to our readers.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

In times of trial and hours of despondency there is nothing more heart-cheering than the kindly expressions of encouragement from some loved and trusted friend. Friends both at home and abroad are holding up our feeble hands with their inspiring words, and acts of kindness. Above all there is a sweet peace that sometimes thrills our sorrowful heart that comes from the eternal fountain of all blessing—from the infinite heart of love, that of our Heavenly Father. We pen an extract or two from letters addressed to us by our loved brethren. The first writes: "My dear Brother in our Lord: Peace be to thee. I wish—God will—you may be kept at THE RESTITUTION chair, and be supported there by men, as I do know God does hold you up in the arms of his grace. . . . How can I aid you. I know you must weary of men and things. We are passing away. When will He come whom we love and wait for? The heart aches and breaks with long waiting, and the woes of our poor world. T."

Another writes: "Dear Brother Chaplin: THE RESTITUTION of the 17th, announcing your consent to occupy the Editorial chair of our loved paper 'a little while longer' is at hand. I am glad you have consented to this, for I do not know who could take your place. I know it is quite a tax upon the strength of one of your years, but it occurs to me that contributors can aid you materially if they will. I do not know that I can be of much service, but I am resolved to do what I can. . . . . May God's blessing ever attend you. G."

Still another accompanies a token of his friendship with these words: "My dear Bro. Chaplin: I feel sure that the great reward—'the well-done, good and faithful servant, awaits you. That for all your labor and self-denial you will be abundantly rewarded when he comes whose right it is to reign; and whose reward will be with him to give every man according as his work shall be." S.

These are cheering words indeed at this time, and although we feel fully conscious that our brethren greatly overrate us, yet there is one thing beyond all possible estimate, which is the guiding and upholding of God's divine hand. When having done all we can, we feel that we are but an unprofitable servant, and that our final salvation will be of rich unmerited grace.

THE PERILOUS TIMES OF "THE LAST DAYS."

In 1 Timothy iv. 1–3 we have a prophecy of Paul's of "the latter times," an expression which may refer to any part of the second half of the times of the Gentiles, though it is never used with regard to the first half. Paul in this passage describes the characteristic features of the Papal apostasy, which deluged Europe with superstition during the middle ages.

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their consciences seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats."

In 2 Timothy Paul predicts later events still, the perilous times of "the last days," an expression markedly distinct from the previous "latter times."

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."

Now while certain of the features here enumerated are evidently not peculiar nor distinctive of any one special period of history, yet a high state of civilization has a tendency to produce, not exaggerated individual cases, but a general prevalence of selfishness, pride, luxury and corruption. The old Roman civilization, with which Paul was acquainted in the city of the Cæsars, was not certainly lacking in individual instances of these things, though it had features of a very different character. But there were to intervene between those early days and "the last times" long ages of semi-barbarism, during which all that old civilization would cease to be—ages which would be distinguished by other crimes, and especially superstition and a Christianized idolatry. But "the last days" were to witness the revival of the crimes incident to high civilization, with certain special classes of sins super-added. Boasters, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, despisers of those that are good, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, and especially "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof," "ever learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth." That these features are all singularly characteristic of the nineteenth century none can question. Its latest and most popular philosophy is agnosticism—a confession that after all its vast and far reaching discoveries, after all its profound researches, it is unable to reach any knowledge of the truth on the highest of all subjects. Agnosticism is simply know-nothingism. It is more: it is not only an assertion that nothing is known, but that nothing can be known; it puts an extinguisher on even the attempt to know him, whom to know is life eternal. Our age has a form of godliness, a Christian Church is established in most states and is sustained by the different powers of Europe; but where is the power to maintain purity in the Churches, or righteousness in the laws of Christendom? Where is the power to arrest war and bloodshed, rapine and slaughter? Where is the power to subject the counsels of nations to the law and will of God, to produce in society any sort of resemblance to the kingdom of God? The religion of these last days has well been called a baptised heathenism; Christian in creed, heathen in practice.

Another feature of the philosophy of these last days is given by Peter, and is singularly characteristic of our times. "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Or as Darwin, the apostle of the nineteenth century, puts it: "All things continue as they were since the beginning of the creation; there is no need for miraculous intervention, no room for supernatural action. We live under a reign of law; as it was in the beginning, so it is now, and so it ever shall be as regards the succession of physical phenomena. One form of life is evolved out of another in endless succession; in physical, mental, moral, and religious spheres, all things continue as they were," or rather, change so slowly and gradually, that no sudden catastrophe need ever be apprehended; on the contrary, "we may count on an assured future of great length." Such is the fashionable creed, such the universal doctrine. But its teachers are, as the apostle Paul states, "willingly ignorant" that all things have not continued in one long, uninterrupted succession. They are willingly ignorant of the all-important fact that a flood once broke in on ungodly men, and "took them all away." They are willingly ignorant that the invariable law of death has been conquered by the glorious fact of resurrection. If the combined voices of the most universal and ancient traditions and the most authentic and well attested history demand credence for any fact, they demand credence for these two; and these two facts once admitted, Divine intervention—the control of the law by the Lawgiver—is demonstrated, and the occurrence of such a crisis as is predicted in Scripture is, not only possible, but likely. If what is called the course of nature has been interfered with in the past, it may be interfered with in the future, and in the near future.

Daniel's prophecies also, though dealing principally with the course of nations and the lapse of ages, gives us two or three general social signs of the state of things at the close of this age, and it cannot be denied that these apply to the nineteenth century as to no previous one. He does not say the power of steam will be applied to locomotion, and the art of travel will be revolutionized; but, looking at the result rather than the cause, he mentions in half a dozen simple words the most characteristic feature of the nineteenth century—"many shall run to and fro." Now to an eye that could embrace in one glance the civilized world, all its seas, and all its shores, all its roads and all its rivers, all its towns and its cities, what would be the first and strongest impression produced on considering the scene? Surely that of ceaseless motion; many running to and fro, like ants around the anthill. Innumerable travellers cross and recross each other's paths, not creeping or crawling, but rapidly running in every direction; trains flying with amazing speed by day and by night all over the land; steamers crowded with hundreds and even thousands of passengers, traversing every sea and every ocean; huge floating hotels, thronged with guests, plying in multitudes on the great rivers of the great continents; railroads, level, elevated, and underground, passing over and under each other in the million-peopled cities of different countries; the whole scene swarming with men and women in motion: many runners to and fro! No previous age of the world's history could have presented this spectacle; it is unique, it is becoming ever more marked, as year by year hundreds of miles of fresh railroads open up new districts and as population and emigration increase, and as commerce spreads. Ten thousand persons travel now where one travelled formerly; even ladies and children think little of circumnavigating the globe for pleasure. There is no mistaking this sign of the time of the end; it is distinctive, and so conspicuous and unprecedented as to be a subject of constant comment. How few can they point to it with pride and pleasure, remember it is a Divine mark of the time of the end, and associated with the predicted second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead!

Nor is the second prediction less remarkable and distinctive. "Knowledge shall be increased." Education in most of the countries of Christendom is now compulsory, and the result is that every child can read, on the one hand, while literature floods every home on the other. All that is going on all the world over is known by the masses of the people as well as by their rulers day by day. The news of events transpiring in India and Australia is published in London before the hour of the events arrives, for telegraphic messages travel faster than the sun! Every discovery is immediately published throughout the earth, popularized and turned to universal account. The higher education, unattainable to saint or sage, king or conqueror in the earlier ages, is now at the service of the common people; and an intelligent English schoolboy in these days knows more of the elements of true science, of the system of the universe, of the laws of matter, of the past and present condition of the globe on which he lives, than did the wisest philosophers of the olden time. As "knowledge is power," the result is, that nature with her mighty forces is every year becoming increasingly the helper and the friend of man, to the rapid increase of the physical well-being of the race. The knowledge of these days is real knowledge, an acquaintance with the facts and forces of nature, a rediscovery of the records of the past, and, above all, an immensely widespread acquaintance on the part of mankind with "the volume of the book," containing that Divine revelation which imparts the highest of all knowledge, the knowledge of God and of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

Brief was the Bible of Daniel's day, and few were the copies of it! Yet only where it had enlightened the minds of men did any true moral or spiritual knowledge exist. Age after age elapsed, and the New Testament was added to the Old. But how few comparatively were still the copies! And owing to the uneducated condition of the masses, how few could study the copies that did exist! In the dark ages the Bible might almost as well not have existed, so little were its glorious revelations understood. And there followed ages when to read and study it brought torture and death, and when, alas! editions were printed to be burned. Only since the reformation has the world really possessed the book, and only within the last century have Bible societies existed to multiply versions and editions, and to distribute by millions all over the world this king of books. The increase of knowledge which has resulted is almost inconceivable. It has rendered it difficult for us to realize the ignorance of other ages. The increase of knowledge is not to be measured by the amount of light possessed by individuals only, but still more by the number of individuals enlightened. The universality of education, and the marvellous results of the combination of steam power with the mechanical ingenuity that has perfected the printing press, has filled with the light of knowledge the whole civilized world, in a way and to a degree that is absolutely peculiar to the nineteenth century, and especially to its second half.

If this expression, "knowledge shall be increased," be taken as referring especially to a knowledge of the meaning of the prophetic Scriptures, a signification which its context quite justifies, then also is it characteristic of these days, and of these alone. The early fathers understood the predictions about the second coming of Christ, but they were inevitably in the dark, as indeed they were intended to be, as to the meaning of the prophecies about Antichrist, and the events of the second half of the times of the Gentiles. Light dawned gradually after history began to fulfil the predictions; each stage of accomplishment has made the meaning of the prophecies clearer, and since the reformation progress in a true knowledge of their meaning has been solid and rapid. Now in the close of this time of the end, the clouds of obscurity have completely rolled away; the whole plan and order of events, the succession of empires, the limits of chronology, the scales of measurement, the nature of fulfilments, all have become, in the combined light of facts and of analogies, so clear, that he who runs may read; and the fulfilment of ancient Messianic predictions in the first advent of Christ is scarcely more clear than the fulfilment of the predictions of Antichrist and those of the incipient restoration of Israel in current events.—By Mr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness.

Work Out Your Own Salvation.

The direction of the apostle Paul to the Philippians to "work out" their own salvation "with fear and trembling" has been made the subject of much foolish and needless controversy as to the meaning of it. The Calvinists and the Arminians have fought over it; the one party insisting that it teaches that salvation has to be worked for, and the other insisting that it teaches just the reverse of that. The traditional exegesis on either side has been worked over and over, and the changes rung on every word in the passage. It is not so strange as it is lamentable that some of the simplest and most helpful passages of the Scriptures have been laid hold on for controversial purposes and dragged into a rut of traditional interpretation, and so lost to all practical helpfulness. The meaning of the exhortation is to our minds most simple, and has nothing whatever to do in the battle between Calvinists and Arminians, a controversy which, would to heaven, had never been raised, and which we devoutly wish earnest Christians would let alone, and give themselves to the more legitimate work of saying men, and reading and teaching the word of God, without doing so by the rule of any theological system.

We find in this exhortation several very good lessons, which we will try briefly to indicate: First, the instruction of Paul to the Philippians "work out your own salvation," is simply to go on with their Christian life without depending upon him, the apostle, to be with and by them to help them. He was very much attached to these Philippians, and they were to him; he had been much with them, and they had learned to be very dependent upon him. When he was with them they had been obedient to the faith, and simple in going forward in their Christian life. He was now in prison, from which it was not probable that he would ever come forth to see them again; so he writes acknowledging a gift, and reminding them of the great and blessed faith by which they were saved, and gives them much good instruction, in which he says: "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation," etc. That is, do not be dependent upon my presence with you, but go on by yourselves just as you would if I were present with you.

This is a most simple and important lesson for us today. How many churches and individual Christians make their progress and Christian work depend on the presence of their pastor! If the pastor is at home, and with them in all the stated services and his pastoral visitations, they do well, but if the pastor is absent, or they chance to be for some weeks or months without a pastor, then they seem not to be able to go on. When the pastor preaches they are present; if he is absent, they are apt to be. When the pastor is present at prayer-meeting, they are; but if they know that he is not to be there, they are apt to stay away. If the pastor's visits are regular and frequent, they manage to "keep along;" but, if they are not visited and petted and strengthened as often as it seems needful for them to be, they fall away and grow indifferent, not only to work but to spiritual life itself. In a word, they have never learned to "work out their own salvation." We do not underrate the importance of the pastorial office or presence; nor the advantage of faithful attendance upon all the services of the church by the pastor; nor his visitation work among his people; but we do deplore the state of helplessness into which many churches and most individual Christians fall, the very moment their spiritual leader is away from them. If this injunction were taken to heart by all God's people, individual life would grow more independent, vigorous, and aggressive, and church life would wax strong and constant, and the work of the Lord would not fail by the way, in the event of a change of pastors, or any hiatus in the pastorial office.

The second lesson suggested by the exhortation is, that salvation (i. e., the Christian life) which has been bestowed by Jesus Christ through faith in him, is not a magical life, but a new principle or a divine beginning which has to be improved and developed, or, in other words, "worked out." There is much nonsense still talked and taught in certain quarters, looking to some "short method" of Christian growth and holiness. Much ridicule and high contempt is put upon the idea that the Christian has to work, and toil, and fight for his advancement in the spiritual life. It is true that we do not have to work for our salvation; that is indeed a gift, handed over to the soul that believes on the Lord Jesus Christ; but we do have to work out, or make the best and most of that salvation when once it is ours. It is the essence of salvation (that is, the restored and regenerated character) that it is changed into the image of Christ Jesus and brought to perfection by the conflict with the "law of sin and death" that still works in our members. There is no short cut to the possession of developed Christian character. Salvation—i. e., the attainment unto the likeness of Christ—is not obtained by "a jump," or by a "second conversion," or by a "holiness experience," or by a magical endowment of the Holy Ghost. It is most blessed that we are not left alone to this work; for God, indeed, is present, working in us, both to will and to do his good pleasure. Without him we can do nothing; and, we say it reverently, without our cordial and hearty working together with him in the matter of our own salvation, he can do nothing or next to nothing with us. Our Lord learned obedience by the things which he suffered; it is not to be supposed that we will learn without some like training and discipline. He was made perfect through suffering; it is not probable that we will be made perfect by some patent process of "holiness" or "second conversion." But, working together with him, in the daily toil and battle of life, we will ultimately have "worked out our salvation" to the praise of his glory.

The expression, with "fear and trembling," is only significant of the grave work of laying our own hands on so great and delicate a thing and the spiritual nature which God has given us for developing and "outworking." The artist who was entrusted to cut the Koh-i-noor must have taken his task in hand, if with confidence, also with some "fear and trembling." He well knew the importance of every movement and bearing of his hand as he cut away the precious gem and reduced it to the size and form which would best develop its greatest and highest brilliancy. Surely the training and development of our souls, which are for the diadem of God, entrusted to our own hands, to be wrought for his glory, is a work which may well be prosecuted, if with confidence, yet not without fear and trembling.—The Independent.

The Glory of the Church.

The glory of the Church is at the coming of the Bridegroom in glory. It is at "the manifestation of the sons of God." "It doth not yet appear;" it is hidden now, as is the flower in the seed; but the seed is the earnest of the flower: first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. Now and all along we see a process of development, involving as preliminary the believer's discipline of joy and sorrow, suffering and trial in a state of imperfection unto the fulfilment of the promises as the reward of cheerful service, of patient waiting and hopeful endurance "at the resurrection of the just." Now it is the cross, then the "crown, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give in that day unto all those who love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 6–8, in that day not of death but of rapture and of life "when he who is our life shall appear" in glory. Brethren, we look for life, not for death. The blessed hope of glory carries us beyond any intermediate state of twilight to the resurrection morning, when the Sun rises and the mist fades away. It is possible to miss death. "Behold," says the great apostle to the Gentiles, who believed with all his soul in the second coming of his Lord and the resurrection of the dead, "I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed." Again: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Then the marriage of the Church is come, and she is "arrayed in fine linen, clean and white." Then is she presented to her Lord "a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing:" a holy and perfect Church, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."—W. R. Jeffin.

The Sphinx and New Discoveries.

The Sphinx occupies a position where the encroachment of the desert is most conspicuous. At the present day nothing is to be seen of the animal except its head and its neck; but the old Egyptian monuments on which it is figured show not only the entire body down to the paws, but also a large square plinth beneath, covered with ornaments. Since the time of the Greeks, perhaps even since the reign of Thothmes IV., this plinth has disappeared beneath the sand, and its very existence had been forgotten. It is generally supposed that the Sphinx is hewn out of a large isolated rock, which overlooked the plain. But M. Maspero's researches suggest that it is a work yet more stupendous. He has proved that the Sphinx occupies the centre of an amphitheater, forming a kind of rocky basin, the upper rim of which is about on a level with the head of the animal. The walls of the amphitheater, wherever visible, are cut by the hand of man. It seems probable, therefore, that in the beginning there was a uniform surface of rock, in which an artificial valley has been excavated, so as to leave in the middle a block out of which the Sphinx was finally hewn. The excavations now being carried on will doubtless verify the existence of the plinth, shown on the old paintings, and also furnish evidence, by the ornamentation of the plinth, of the true age of the monument. M. Maspero is inclined to assign to it a very great antiquity—possibly higher than the early dynasties, i. e., than the first period of Egyptian history. As the result of last winter's work the sand round the Sphinx has already been lowered by about thirty meters.—The Academy.

When the farmer has put the seed into the ground, he waits. His whole duty lies in waiting, so far as that growth is concerned. Though he sees no signs of any germination, he waits. When, at last, it comes out of the ground,—a feeble, insignificant shoot, which apparently can come to nothing,—he waits. When it has grown, but yet no blossoms appear, he waits. All through the spring, during the early and the latter rain, all through the hot days of summer, on into the declining autumn, he waits; and at last goes out with his wagon and oxen and men, and the ripe, rich shocks and sheaves of corn are piled high into his barns, till they overflow with the abundant harvest. That all comes from waiting.

The church of God at Cleveland, O., will hold meetings at 10:30 a. m. every Sunday (D. V.) in Bland and Heller's Block, Nos. 21, 23 and 25 Ontario Street, Corner of Bolivar, north of Canal. Meetings free. Brethren from abroad of like faith and all searchers after truth are welcome.

REST REMAINETH.

Rest remaineth—oh, how sweet!
Pleasant fields for wondering feet,
Peaceful calm for sleepless eyes,
Life for death, and joy for sighs.

Rest remaineth; hush that sigh!
Mourning pilgrim, rest is nigh;
Yet a season, bright and blest,
Then shalt enter on thy rest

Rest remaineth, rest from sin!
Guilt can never enter in;
Every wearing thought shall cease,—
Rest in purity and peace.

Rest remaineth, rest from tears,
Rest from parting, rest from fears;
Every trembling thought shall be
Lost, my Saviour, lost in thee.

Rest remaineth—oh, how blest!
We be there, and we may rest;
Faith, reposing faith, doth rest
On the things that are not seen.

Thus, my Saviour, let me live,
Ever, here at rest with thee,
And at last, by thee prepared,
On thy bosom rich to revel.

The Book of Jubnh, called Job, Son of Zare, Son of Hraguel, Son of Hesun, Son of Isaac, Son of Habraam.—According to the Septuagint.

CHAP. XXX.

1. But now the least have laughed me to scorn; now they are admonishing me whose fathers in their allotment I despised; whom I did not consider worthy to be computed with my shepherds' dogs.

2. And their strength, would that some of it were mine; a full end of loss would get them.

3. In the struggle of want and famine were they, some of them fleeing from barren necessity and the wretchedness of yesterday.

4. Some of them feeding in salt-marshes by the sounding sea, who had been food for their own salt-marshes; without honor and made little of, in want of every good thing; some of them were even kneading the roots of trees into dough by reason of great famine.

5. Thieves have stood up against me,

6. Whose houses were holes in the rocks.

7. In the midst of tuneful sounds of merriment would they call for help, some of them who had been begging through the wild places beneath bundles of fagots.

8. Sons of the thoughtless and dishonored, with name and fame quenched from off the earth.

9. But now I am their cithara and they esteem me their ditty.

10. They have abominated me and stood afar off; and have not even refrained from spitting in my face.

11. For he (God) hath opened his quiver and afflicted me and hath sent forth a bridle curb for my face.

12. On the right hand they have stood up against that which was budding into life; their feet have they stretched out; and they have built up against me; their paths of loss

13. Have my paths worn out; for they have stripped off my kingly robe.

14. His (God's) arrows hath he sharpened against me; he hath used me as he would indeed; I am mixed up with woes as is the dough.

15. Woes hath he turned against me; my hope hath departed like a breath of wind, and my salvation like a cloud.

16. And now shall my soul be poured out upon me, and days of woe possess me.

17. My bones have been racked in the night and my sinews have become relaxed.

18. With much strength hath he laid hold of my kingly robe; he hath grasped me as doth the neck-band of my shirt.

19. He hath accounted me as clay; in dust and ashes is my allotment.

20. I have cried unto thee and thou dost not hearken unto me; and they stand and contemplate me.

21. They have walked over me without mercy; with a strong hand hast thou scourged me,

22. Thou hast ordered my affairs in woe, and thou hast snatched me away from salvation.

23. For I know that death will wear me out; yea, earth is every mortal's house.

24. Would that I were able to handle myself, or that I might beseech another and he might do it for me.

25. Forsooth I have mourned with any one who was helpless; I have sighed when I saw a noble man in straits;

26. But while adhering to the good myself, in days of calamity have met me all the more.

27. My stomach hath turned away from it, and will not be silent; days of wretchedness have overtaken me.

28. Sighing I went my way without a murmur on my mouth, and I stood and raised my voice in the church.

29. I have become a brother of the sirens owls and companion of the ostriches.

30. My skin hath become very tawny and my bones with the scorching wind.

31. My cithara hath gone away in sorrow and my song into mourning for me.

Editor Restitution:

On the 21st inst. (Oct. 21, 1886) I was 77 years old, and I am reminded if this age lasts many years, I shall have passed the last mile stone in life's journey through this dark and cloudy way. Then be laid aside to rest in the dust until Jesus our Life Giver shall come. Then I expect to see you and all who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection out from the dead ones.

Sixty-one years comes December 11th since I was immersed and united with the First Baptist Church in Southbridge, Mass. Forty-one years have rolled away since I commenced to preach, as the people called it. Forty-six years the 17th of last June since I was ordained according to the practice of the Baptist churches, and with them I performed pastoral labor also that of an evangelist, until the fall of 1845.

In 1839 and 40 I obtained the lectures of the much loved by the good, Elder Wm. Miller, which were an instrument in the hand of the Lord, of leading me to embrace the coming of Jesus and the setting up of the kingdom on the earth, about 1843, a time never to be forgotten by me whilst memory lasts! Glory be to God for those days of a general deluge of the power of God.

In the fall of 1845 I was led to see that my all should be identified with the coming of Jesus and all of its kindred truths as I might learn them from the oracles of truth, in order that I might be saved. Hence I laid all on the altar, reputation and all I had, and said to the Lord, here I am, open the way and I will go. And at once he opened the way and I have gone, but only among brethren where I was invited, and that without a dollar being pledged. Never have I asked any one to give or pay me one dollar for my labors.

I have traveled in fourteen of the States, also much in Canada during the past thirty-five years, for the purpose of giving the proclamation, the plan of human redemption, the gospel. I have paid out of my own and the Lord's money for printing and binding my own works, about $3,000. Never have asked anyone to assist me in this labor of love. They have gone to China, South India, Isle of Man, England and the United States, to my knowledge; where else, God knows. I have been a contributor to fifteen different papers.

In 1848 I embraced the doctrine of the complete mortality of man. And in 1851–2 I embraced what is commonly called the Age-to-Come doctrine, though in a broader sense than it is believed by many of my brethren. Nevertheless I have unwavering confidence in all that I teach.

In 1861 I became convinced that I did not possess a valid title to the promises God had made unto the Fathers, therefore I came to the conclusion to make it good by being immersed into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. This was done by the late Elder Joseph Marsh in the clear waters of Lake Ontario. And during the 49 years of my present ministry, I have never asked any one to pledge me a dollar for preaching what I believed to be the truth. Glory be to God! the cruse of oil and barrel of meal have never been empty! And this day finds me enjoying good health, memory good, but the sight of one eye is gone, and the other by much usage has become dim, so that it is difficult for me to read but a trifle of THE RESTITUTION. What event shall befall me in this year of my pilgrimage God only knows. But I am resolved to do my duty in his service, for I love it. However, I shall only go out as my brethren shall write for me to come.

Fraternally, R. V. LYON.

Sad Thoughts.

And if Christ be not raised your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. These sad thoughts will harmonize with no system of natural immortality. Dr. Walsh and Brewster's long and tedious discussions on that question were able, but not useful; more calculated to bewilder than to convince and settle one's faith. The impregnable fortress of natural immortality drawn from its universal belief by the heathen world, is a sham and delusion. You can prove a plurality of gods, yea a multiplicity of gods, in the same way. All these nations believe in a multiplicity of gods as strongly as they believe in natural immortality, and all are idolaters.

What is Best.

We do not know! Thou knowest!
As children to the dark
We lift our voices, our hands to thee.
And find a rest, an ark!
We trust Love in our ignorance,
In Wise, in Good, O Strong!
And though the shadows close on pain
We find thee with our song.

We think we know. Thou knowest
We dream and hope and plan,
And make mistakes, and sigh to know
How frail and weak is man;
But Love, from the beginning,
Cannot see the end in fear.
We rest upon the knee [illegible]

We do not know [illegible]
And so we [illegible] walk;
And for our resting only a rasp
A better side of pain;
We falter and fall, and then we [illegible]
We cry to thee for aid,
And only feel when Hope and Joy say,
"Try, be not afraid."

O God, we would be wiser yet,
And only [illegible] Thou;
Lead us not [illegible] the little ones,
We are thy children now;
And day by day, and step by step
We see Thy guiding hand;
Oh, let us cling to thee until
We reach the safe home land.

And then let [illegible]
The journey short or long,
Our hearts will rest in comfort,
And we will sing our song;
Since then [illegible]
In weakness and in [illegible]
We trust in [illegible]
And from the darkness see [illegible]

Three Things.

"I once met a thoughtful scholar," says Bishop Whipple, "who told me that for years he had read every book he could which assailed the religion of Jesus Christ, and he said he should have become an infidel but for three things:

"First I am a man. I am going somewhere. Tonight I am a day nearer the grave than I was last night. I have read all such books can tell me. They shed not one solitary ray of hope or light upon the darkness. They shall not take away the guide and leave me stone-blind.

"Second. I had a mother. I saw her go down into the dark valley where I am going, and she leaned upon an unseen Arm as calmly as a child goes to sleep on the breast of its mother. I know that was not a dream.

"Third. I have three motherless daughters (and he said it with tears in his eyes.) They have no protector but myself. I would rather kill them than leave them in this sinful world if you blot out from it all the teachings of the gospel."

Home Hap Faces.

Probably nineteen-twentieths of the happiness you will ever have you will get at home. The independence that comes to a man when his work is over, and he feels that he has run out of the storm into the quiet harbor of home, where he can rest in peace with his family, is something real. It does not make much difference whether you own your house or have one little room in that house, you can make that little room a true home to you. You can people it with such moods, you can turn to it with such sweet fancies, that it will be fairly luminous with their presence and will be to you the very perfection of a home. Against this home none of you should ever transgress. You should always treat each other with courtesy. It is often not so difficult to love a person as it is to be courteous to him. Courtesy is of greater value and a more royal grace than some people seem to think. If you will but be courteous to each other you will soon learn to love each other more wisely, profoundly, not to say lastingly, than you ever did before.

Shall We Give Smiles or Frowns?

How few of us reflect how little it takes to make one happy or unhappy. A smile, a tear, a frown may do it. It takes but a moment of time, but the result of that smile or frown may shape the future course of the one on whom it is bestowed.

There is a little ragged boy trying to get an honest living selling small wares. Do not answer him harshly. You may decline buying with a smile as easily as with a frown. He may have become almost disheartened; but "Try again," seems to be whispered in his ear, and he approaches you fearful of a denial. Give him a smile, help him if possible, for it may be the turning-point in his life. On such a simple act has hung the destiny of many a child. Many a one who has sold candy or shoe-strings at the corner of the street has become famous in the church as well as in the world.

A child has broken its doll's head or arm. Say a pitying word if you cannot then stop to repair it. It is a double grief to the little one if no word or look of sympathy is given. The child could exclaim, "You might have said, oh!" as a little one did who was turned off by a heedless father, who said, "I can't help it," when his child told him with tears of some little pain.

See that young girl, without carriages or friends in the city to guide or counsel her. Kindly inquire after her; see if she attends church or the Sunday school. Take her to your own place of worship; introduce her to the Sunday-school class. If she needs suitable clothing, help her in as delicate a manner as possible, that she may not feel that it is common charity. That she receives. By so doing you may place her feet in the pathway of eternal happiness.

Happy are blessed are they who dispense smile, instead of frowns.—Home Guard.

I take my pen in hand to write you a few lines. I write to thank you for the continuance of my paper after the remittance was due. I love the paper and think I can't do without it as long as I can see to read. My eyes are failing me and my nerves are very weak. Next month I will be 84 years old, and I have not heard a gospel sermon for more than four years. My Bible and my paper are a great comfort to me. I love to read the letters from those that have the gospel preached. Enclosed you will find one dollar for my paper, THE RESTITUTION, until May.

LOIS NEWELL.

Editor Restitution:

As I had an appointment near Tidioute, Pa., I made arrangements to step off at Hydetown and Oil City to see what I could do in getting subscribers for THE RESTITUTION for three months if no longer. Received ten new subscribers and others that will take it as soon as they can get the 25 cents; and most of those that have subscribed I am satisfied will continue it. Enclosed a list of subscribers as also others that will pay soon, and names of some to send a copy to, as also my own and Brother Lent's subscription, about due. Others that have taken it have promised to renew soon. I scattered what few copies I had of my own. By the grace of God I endeavored to proclaim the truth and the whole truth while I was gone, in the private house, in the skating rink and the school house. The weather being bad, snow a foot deep fell and in the mud, so but a few were out to hear, and away back from the general travel and the people poor. Preached at Davy Hill three discourses and got two three month subscriptions to THE RESTITUTION. Preached at the rink on Sutton Hill four times and at Bro. Fisher's Sunday evening where we broke the loaf, etc. There were seven present who took part in it besides myself. One old brother, past 80 years, came on the cars and then walked seven miles to be at our meeting. Got back home all right thank the good Lord. Yours in hope.

Editor Restitution:

I see by the number or date of my paper that my subscription has expired, and I do not wish to do without its noble, Christian, Bible truths and advice with the letters from those lonely scattered ones that are striving to be ready when the Master comes, to enter into immortal life and the kingdom that is to belong to our Christ and also to his great family, which will be the redeemed from the earth and from among the children of men when he comes whose right it is to rule the whole earth, including the kingdom that Zedekiah abdicated, when all the righteous shall inherit the earth (regenerated) and live in the abundance of peace forever. What a noble thought and how inspiring, and with all what an incentive to faithfulness to learn and know from his own word what his divine plans are in regard to our poor, fallen, Adamic race. Yes, brethren, as long as the blessed Lord gives me the means I want the only paper I know of that teaches these great truths, to lay on my table so that my children and others may have the opportunity of reading something that is not fiction, as the most of our Sunday school literature is in these last days. Be faithful brethren, the time is short now. He that shall come will come. Be ready. Yours in hope,

J. A. WILSON.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed please find a bank draft for $1.00 to apply on my subscription. I do not always have the ready money to send when the subscription expires, but please remember that it will always come while I live, or while the pages of THE RESTITUTION contain such wholesome doctrine. It is all the preacher I can hear. That and my Bible are all the religious influence I can find in this sinful country. I yearn and feel a soul that really believes the Bible or that seems pleased with the good news of the gospel of the kingdom. Intemperance in all its forms walks forth unbashed and unchecked, and any man who tries to live a sober, Christian life, is looked upon as foolish or simple. But thanks be to Jesus, it has always been so with the heirs of the kingdom, so I feel encouraged to press on for the mark of the high calling which is in Christ Jesus. If I had the means I would pay the expenses of a good, able expounder of the gospel to come here and give this people the warning. The perilous times of the end of Gentile times are coming on them and they perceive it not. Dear RESTITUTION as fast as I am prospered I will want to help send the message to worthy ones who have not heard.

Yours in hope,

WM. H. ROBERSTON.

THE CITY OF THE GREAT KING.

We are in the City of the Great King. Today the Jews are waiting at the ancient outer wall of Solomon's temple. They cry out in the language of the Psalmist: "O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled; they have laid Jerusalem on heaps." These mourning Hebrews believe the time will come when the city will be restored to them, and until then their lamentations will be heard in the public places. The Turks are the heathen, and the very rock on which Solomon built the house of the Lord is fenced in and became the grand central venerated object of the magnificent Mussulman mosque of Omar. From this rock Mahommed ascended to heaven according to Mahommed tradition. Twenty-seven times has Jerusalem been destroyed, and so luminous had become the heaps of rubbish that only a few years since a church built in the time of the Crusaders was by accident discovered and excavated entire—a handsome stone structure, larger than your own Swedenborgian temple. The Jewish people are here increasing in numbers, improvements are being made, and land rising in value—some in locations that a physical New Jerusalem is dawning. Compared, however, with Chicago activity, the progress is slow, and it might take at the present rate a thousand years to do away with the old and substitute the ideal. This is essentially a pilgrimage city. It thrives under the competition of Greeks, Latins, Armenians, Copts, Maronites for holy places, attracting thousands of pilgrims and tourists. The manufacture and sale of holy relics is great—crosses of mother-of-pearl, olive-wood, pressed flowers of the Holy Land, crowns of thorns, stone vases from the Dead Sea, and shells from the Jordan. Even Mahommedans enter into the competition. They are in exclusive possession of the temple site, the tombs of David and Solomon, and the chamber of the last supper. They control the Turkish soldiers who stand guard at the holy sepulchre and at Bethlehem to prevent rival Christian sects fighting each other. In 1874 lives were lost at these unseemly quarrels. The Jews have the two great synagogues on Mount Zion, the pillar of Absalom, and the tombs of James and Zechariah; but they wail and lament that the tomb of Rachel is not restored to them. A French princess has built a church and convent on the Mount of Olives to display tablets of the Lord's prayer in thirty-three languages, to give herself a final burial-place, and to keep ten nuns of the black veil in perpetual seclusion. The Sisters of Zion have the judgment-hall of Pontius Pilate for a convent school. And the wild Bedouins of the desert have the Jordan, and the Dead Sea, Joshua's ancient Jericho, and the fountain of Elisha, and rob and strip pilgrims who fail to pay them tribute and accept their services as guards. Honest robbers! The hermits take to the caves in the wilderness of Judea, and feed the few remaining ravens that have survived the times of Elijah.—Chicago Tribune.

Contending the Word.

Isaiah speaks of Jehovah as the one "that frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish; that confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers," chap. xlii. 24–26; and the confirmation which the historical as well as the prophetical words of the Bible are receiving in these days of flippant infidelity and learned looseness is very remarkable. The following from the Sunday School Times of Sept. 11th is to the point:—

"How we all used to laugh over the story of the credulous old woman who doubted some of the more truthful stories of her returned sailor boy, but who was prompt to believe him when he told of the raising of a wheel of Pharaoh's chariot with his ship's anchor out of the Red Sea! It was such an obvious impossibility that one of these chariot wheels could have been preserved, even below the bottom of the sea, during thirty centuries and more, that the silliest man could join in the sneer of the accomplished scientist over the weak-minded woman's credulity. Yet here stands the wide world in admiring interest, while the very bodies of the father and the grandfather of that Pharaoh whose host pursued Moses and the Hebrew multitude down into the bared bed of the Red Sea, are unrolled from the garments of the grave; and as men look into those faces, which struck terror to the hearts of the ancestors of Moses and Aaron, none question the identity of the recovered bodies without subjecting themselves to such sneers as were given to that old woman's reverent credulity. No sooner had the unrolled mummy of Rameses II., the chief oppressor of the Hebrews, been put on exhibition in the museum at Boolac, than the mummy of his father, Seteo I., was also exposed to view there—as reported to our readers. Seteo I. was probably the father of the princess who rescued the infant Moses from the Nile. He was a mighty conqueror in his day. He was also a predecessor of M. de Lesseps in opening the Suez Canal between the Red Sea and the Mediterranean; and he began again the building of the Great Wall in front of that canal, which had fallen into ruins during the sway of the Shepherd Kings. No chariot wheels are found buried with these kings; but delicate linen cloths which wrapped their bodies are well preserved; and with some of the mummies of an approximate date there are even found intact the funeral garlands—the 'flowers of the field' which are proverbially so frail and perishable. After all, was the old woman's belief so far inferior to that of the scientists? There are strange discoveries now making in the Bible lands; and every discovery is only an added confirmation of the historical accuracy of the Book of books.—Messiah's Herald.

Pure in Heart.

The cure for the evils of this life cannot be found in outward surroundings. These help to some extent. But evil finds its birth in the soul's choices. To meet this Christianity is radical. The word of God reaches to the purposes of man's heart, and thus seeks to control outward acts. Formalism makes the outside of the platter clean. The gospel makes the heart clean. It purifies the fountain from whence life issues. Outward influence may restrain in some degree, but no life can be made pure from without. The body may be surrounded by pure air, and yet be filled with disease. But let healthful lungs bring the pure air in contact with the blood which flows to the heart, and disease is driven out. Christ casts the devils out. The Spirit in the heart keeps them out, and so the life remains pure. Seek that inward purity. This only is purity. All else is delusion or deceit. This within, all else is harmless. Temptation may rage, but it must stay outside. It is dangerous only when it is permitted to rest within.—Herald and Crown.

NOTES.

DARBY.—Near Severance, Kan., October 17th, 1886, Sister Sallie Darby, aged 68 years.

She died very suddenly of heart disease. Much might be said of the virtues of the deceased. The object Paul had in saying he had fought a good fight, was to encourage others to hold out faithful. She was an excellent wife, a kind mother and a good neighbor. She was the first wife of Brother John Darby, among the first to embrace the faith in this community. Their three daughters and one son are of like faith. Her sudden death cast a gloom over the community and especially the church. Brother J. W. Orem preached the funeral to a large audience from this Scripture, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should praise the dead." Written by request.

J. T. BUTLER.

GREEN.—At the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. Wallace, in Ada, Kent County, Mich., November 7th, 1886, Brother Horace Green, aged 87 yrs.

Brother Green and his estimable wife embraced the "blessed hope" of the glorious appearing more than forty years ago. Although not aided by the fellowship of those of "like precious faith" in their long pilgrimage, they have, with the help of the Bible and THE RESTITUTION, fought the good fight and kept the faith. We trust a crown of glory is laid up for them as for all who "love his appearing." Sister Green says her husband "held to the doctrine of immortality through Christ, till his death." Nearly two years ago we visited them, when Bro. Green requested me to preach at his funeral on the subject of eternal life, which I endeavored to do.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1886. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

REST FOR THE WEARY.

Not long, not long! The spirit-wasting fever,
Of this strange life shall quit each throbbing vein,
And this wild pulse flow placidly forever.
And endless peace relieve the burning brain.

Earth's joys are but a dream: its destiny
Is but decay and death; its fairest form
Sunshine and shadow mixed; its brightest day
A rainbow braided on the wreaths of storm.

Yet this is blessedness that changeth not—
A rest with God; a life that cannot die;
A better portion, and a brighter lot,
A home with Christ; a heritage on high;—

Hope for the hopeless; for the weary, rest
More gentle than the still repose of even;
Joy for the joyless, bliss for the unblest,
Homes for the desolate in yonder heaven.

The tempest makes returning calm more clear;
The darkest midnight makes the brightest star;
Even so to us, when all is ended here,
Shall be the past, remembered from afar.

Editor Restitution:

I wish to propound a few questions through your columns to those who teach mortal resurrection and judgment for the saints, and vigorously oppose the Scripture teaching, viz: that the saints will be raised up from their death sleep with spiritual bodies, and thus rise to meet the Lord in the air, and so ever be with the Lord. Those who contend for mortal resurrection of the saints, do so because they insist that the saints must appear before the judgment seat of Christ, for it is there to be determined who shall merit eternal life, or who will be entitled to receive it by, through, or on account of his works; and after judgment of approval, be invested with eternal life as a reward for the good which he has done. The Scriptures teach that "Ye are saved by grace through faith; and this not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." "Not of works, lest any man should boast," Eph. ii. 8, 9. David said, If thou Lord shouldst mark iniquities, who should stand?

Now clearly, a judgment of the saints according to their works would be a sure and certain condemnation of every one, (as there is no man that sinneth not); unless the Lord would let the good works weigh against the bad and thus blot out bad by good works, and so get salvation by works and not through grace; then he would get salvation as a reward for his works and would merit it and so be able to boast.

What is the judgment of the saints for, if not to ascertain who is to receive eternal life, if that be dependent upon good works? If eternal life be the gift of God through Jesus Christ, will a judgment of the saints be necessary for God to determine to whom he will give it, when he has already chosen them before the foundation of the world? What then could be the purpose of a judgment of the saints before getting eternal life? The Scriptures teem with authorities opposing mortal emergence, and judgment of the saints before receiving everlasting life. How do men become saints? Jesus says, "they shall be all taught of God."

Jesus says, "Of his own will, begat he us with the word of truth," Jas. i. 18. He also said, "God is taking out a people for his name," Acts xiv. 14. It is stated that "The Lord added to the church daily, such as should be saved." Acts ii. 47. "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed," Acts xiii. 48. "God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation," 2 Thess. ii. 13. "But ye are a chosen generation," 1 Pet. ii. 9. "Elect according to the fore-knowledge of God." 1 Pet. i. 2. "Knowing brethren your election of the Lord," 1 Thess. i. 4. "For you are saved by grace through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast," Eph. ii. 8, 9. "The Lord opened Lydia's heart that she might attend unto the things spoken of Paul," Acts xvi. 14. "The Lord knoweth them that are his," 2 Tim. ii. 19. "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world," Acts xv. 18. "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building," 1 Cor. iii. 9. "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his," Rom. viii. 9. "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your ownselves. Know ye not yourselves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except that ye be reprobates?" 1 Cor. xiii. 5. "If any man shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father, which is in heaven," Matt. x. 32. Now can you tell me the object of a judgment for such as are mentioned in the foregoing quotations? Those who have been called, chosen and elected by God; known from the beginning by him; confessed by Jesus Christ before his Father, therefore known and acknowledged by him; and known of themselves that Jesus Christ is in them? Is it not clear that a judgment for such to ascertain their standing before God, would be a work of supererogation? Does God not know them as well before they are judged as afterwards? Does not Jesus know them as well before, as after judgment? Let us follow the Scriptures a little further on the subject of judgment of the saints. Jesus said, "He that believeth on him that sent me is not judged," Jno. iii. 18. R. V.

"He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment, but is passed from death into life," Jno. v. 24. R. V. Paul said, "There is therefore now no condemnation for them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit," Rom. viii. 1. The spirit through Paul said that they should not be condemned; and Jesus said, they shall not come into judgment. Will you insist in the face of all the foregoing, that the saints must be judged before receiving eternal life? If you still persist, let me present you something further. Will you contend that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob must be judged to ascertain whether or not they will be in the Kingdom of God, when Jesus has declared already that they will be there? Will you contend that the apostles must be judged to ascertain their fitness to be in the kingdom of God, when Jesus told them that they should be there and sit upon thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel? Also will you contend that David will have to be judged as to his eligibility for that kingdom, when the Scripture has declared that he shall be a Prince forever? Will you also contend that Enoch must be judged as to his fitness, when the Scripture shows that he walked with God, and was translated? Also in the case of Elijah, who also was translated? Also in the case of Moses? Also in the case of the cloud of witnesses mentioned in Heb. xi.? Will you still contend that all these must rise from their graves in their mortal state and be judged to see if they are worthy to receive immortality and inheritance in the kingdom of God?

If you are still contending, let us pursue the subject: "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other," Matt. xxiv. 31. "The dead in Christ shall rise first," 1 Thess. iv. 16. "Even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him," vs. 14.

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice," Ps. l. v. "Two men shall be in the field; one shall be taken, and the other left," Luke xvii. 36. "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (age), and the resurrection from the dead, ....Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the (that) resurrection," Luke xx. 35, 36.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years, Rev. xx. 6. Will you explain how their worthiness to obtain the resurrection which declares them to be equal to the angels is known, before the judgment, to which you say, they must come, before their worthiness can be known? Also explain how the angels are to know who are the elect, before they come before the judgment which you say must declare whether or not they are elect?

How are they to be known to be of the first resurrection, over whom the second death hath no power, and to be kings and priests, before they come before the judgment which you say is to declare whether or not they are worthy to be such? How is it to be known before judgment, that they are the dead in Christ, who shall rise first? I may ply you with more questions concerning the judgment of the saints to declare their eligibility to eternal life; but the foregoing are no doubt sufficient to put the thoughtful and truth-seeking reader to examining the word for himself.

Now, as to immortal emergence for the saints, there can be no doubt, for the Scriptures are so plain that a one can see it, when that Luke of "judgment for the saints as to their fitness to receive eternal life," is taken out of the reader's eye, which I trust the foregoing will tend to do.

David believed and taught immortal emergence, for he says, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness," Psa. xvii. 15.

Jesus taught it in Luke xx. 35, 36. Paul taught it when speaking of the dead in Cor. xv, 44, when he said, "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." Also in vs. 52, when he said, The dead shall be raised incorruptible." According to your teaching concerning resurrection and judgment for the saints, they rise from their graves mortal men, therefore they are raised corruptible, and go before the judgment, and if declared worthy, they then being living men, on an equality with other living men who have never died, and are all together "raised or built up" into incorruptibility; all of which nullifies Paul's words that, "the dead shall be raised incorruptible."

John believed and taught it when he said, "When we shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is," 1 Jno. iii. 2. You believe that the saints will come before the judgment seat of Christ, which is very correct; but they are saints already in possession of life eternal when they appear there, and come there to receive ther rewards according to their works, not eternal life, for that is the gift of God, and cannot be purchased by good works. You have misconstructed the judgment mentioned in Matt. xxv. 31 to 46, whom you apply it to the saints; for it is there stated to be a judgment of all the nations—the Greek word —ethnos—translated "nations," is the same word translated "Gentiles," but upon giving it an examination you will see that it must be a judgment of Gentiles, as the judgment is individual and not national. And besides, they are judged for the treatment offered to Jesus through "these my brethren," who are the saints, while they were in their mortality in the different ages when they lived, and were subject to hunger, thirst, sickness, nakedness and imprisonment; but now having been raised in the first resurrection with spirit bodies, having met the Lord in the air and been with him ever since and been associated with him in establishing the throne, etc. The individuals mentioned in the judgment as subject to it, are those who lived at the same time that "these my brethren lived, consequently many of them are resurrected ones, brought to judgment. Another proof that the judgment there described does not apply to the saints, is the fact, that those who are rewarded at it with everlasting life, and inheritance in the kingdom, receive it, not for belief of the gospel of the kingdom and obediences thereof, but are rewarded for works simply. Again they can only receive citizenship age lasting, because the Kings and Priests are taken out through the gospel, and are already perfected when these Gentiles are judged on account of treatment rendered to Jesus through "these my brethren," the kings and priests, who are clothed with the divine nature when they appear there as "these my brethren" with the Lord.

You often speak of the restoration of the kingdom of God, but you lose sight of one very important part of that kingdom, viz: citizens of it. You teach that the citizens of that kingdom will be composed solely of mortals who will be living when it is established; and that these will be given citizenship in it after resurrection and judgment. This teaching of yours is opposed to the Bible teaching on the point, as you may see by an examination of that book, search and see.

When you have found that the saints arise from their death sleep with immortality upon them; and that there is no tribunal before which they must appear to be judged as to their fitness to receive eternal life, then you can understand many other Scriptures which now appear misty to you.

I have studied the same Bible that you have; I hold as you hold, but I thank our heavenly Father that my heart, as Lydia's was, has been opened to see and attend unto the things spoken of Paul, Jesus and the prophets. May the Lord guide you unto all truth.

Your Brother in Israel's Hope.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Every Gentile believer, by his faith, is brought into the covenanted progeny, and is thus made one of the elect and holy nation. And it is only this elect people who will enter the promised inheritance. But do not forget that this individual election is not an arbitrary thing, but is made to depend on our voluntary choice of the will of God, on our faith in his Son. God, of his pure sovereignty, determined that he would have a kingdom, that that kingdom should show forth his power, his wisdom, his goodness, and his glory to all rational beings, and that a peculiar people, a holy nation only should inherit it, being joint heirs with his Son who should possess the supreme rule. All that was predetermined. Such an election was fixed upon in the Divine Mind. And his word had gone forth, and nothing could hinder its accomplishment. This is the election which is certain, absolute, and on the part of God, unconditional; but whether you or I form one of the elect and holy number, depends upon our faith and obedience. His election of us, as individuals, is conditional. Only thus can we make sure our own calling and election.

By the exercise of the same faith which Abraham had, we are regarded as the seed of Abraham, and become heirs of the promises. "Know therefore," says Paul, "that they which be of faith, the same are the sons of Abraham," Gal. iii. 7. Abraham was chosen, and the covenant was made with him, because of his faith; all individual Gentile believers, therefore,—all receiving Christ, the promised seed, and thus becoming one with him,—are Abraham's adopted sons; and hence, in relationship with Abraham, with Abraham we are heirs of the kingdom. "If ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, heirs according to promise," ver. 29. By this means God's covenant is kept unbroken, and the Gentiles become partakers of the wonderful blessings flowing from the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Paul was, in a special sense, the apostle to the Gentiles, and for this reason was very definite in his teaching on justification by faith; because it was by faith they were to be engrafted into a good olive tree, into the stock of Israel, and for their faith be accounted sons of Abraham.

Fausset is no doubt correct when he says that "the stock of the Church is Jewish." The gathering out of a people in this dispensation for his name, choosing, electing a body, from among both Jews and Gentiles, who shall possess the kingdom with the Christ, and be joint-rulers, is a confirming and fulfilling of the covenant made with Abraham and the Jewish nation.

It was not intended that any even in the natural line of Abraham should inherit the kingdom unless they had the faith of Abraham. It is true the covenant was made with him and comprised or took in all who naturally descended from him, and the election only were favored with the Theocracy; yet, as individuals, none at the last will belong to the royal priesthood and share in the rule of the kingdom if they fall into unbelief and sin.

The dispensations of grace and mercy both to Israel and the (now) existing nations, are based upon the covenant made with Abraham. Hence the importance attached to it, and the frequent references made to it in the word. A covenant also was made with David. Now some that look for a fulfilment of the covenant made with Abraham, do not look for a fulfilment of the one made with David. But we are not at liberty to accept one covenant and reject another.

For many long centuries men have been following one another in well trodden ruts, and few have inquired whether they were in the right track. Theories have been formed by imaginative minds, based upon a misapprehension of some passages of Scripture, and they have been embraced by others and passed down the ages from one generation to another, many never even raising the inquiry, Are these theories according to the word? Surely there should be delay no longer in bringing every thing to the test of God's word. What is true cannot suffer by the trial.

The idea of the kingdom, the plan of it, the foretelling of it, and the long preparation of it are all divine. So will be its establishment, its laws, and their administration, and its righteousness, and glory, and happiness. The whole thing was conceived by supernatural wisdom, and will be carried out by almighty power. And miraculous agency will be employed in the setting up of the kingdom. And but for the manifestation of such power, seeing the monarchs and governments of the world are so potent, the kingdom would never be set up. Miracles will be necessary, and a firm belief in miracles is necessary to our hope. The curse brought upon the earth, and the groaning of the whole creation, brought about by sin, will never be removed but by divine interposition. The redemption of man from the power of death, the binding and imprisonment of Satan, the subjection of all things to Christ, and the filling of the earth with order, and peace, and glory will never be accomplished without the putting forth of the supernatural power. But we have Jehovah's promise that this in due time will be brought into exercise. The same divine word that gives a revelation of the kingdom, gives a revelation of the method in which it shall be set up, and that is clearly connected with the supernatural.

Some writers argue, and no doubt correctly, "that laws exist outside of those known, and that the Divine Will can employ such laws whenever it is desirable." While miracles, therefore, are a suspension of the laws of nature, it may be a suspension only of such laws as are known to us. Miracles may be the result of the operation of laws unknown to us. But we must not forget that God is at the back of all existing laws, whether known or unknown; but he can change laws, or modify them, or set them aside and make new ones. God's power, and wisdom, and will, God's essential attributes are above nature's laws, and by Divine interference he can alter or prevent their operation. Christ when on earth showed that he had in himself power over nature and nature's laws; and this same power he will exert shortly in removing the curse from the earth and restoring all things according to the predictions of the prophets, and his control will be absolute over all creation, and over all laws whether known or unknown. Great and stupendous miracles were wrought in behalf of the Jews in the early ages, and still greater miracles will be wrought in the closing of this age and in the opening of the next in their establishment as a people and as subjects of the kingdom.

THE COMING AGE,

—ITS—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. WEETHER.—

This is a reprint of a book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of christian thinkers, and which is exciting to the popular mind among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. All are asking the question: "What are the signs of the coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound unrest and tremendous wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the wide use of modern inventions, railways, telegraph and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar causes, point unmistakably to the fact that we are living in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents in their stead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the all-pervasive yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the law of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will be, it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who wields and governs all.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS:

The book is truthful, reverent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Reformer.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Decidedly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Sydney Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than cloyed in our inquiry.....The aim of the reformation is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a wealthy, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel Hist. D. D.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

But we know of no doctrine of Holy Scripture against which there has not been an array of opponents. This doctrine has not fared better than others; it has, indeed, fared much worse than some others. It has been opposed, as we have previously intimated, by a great many able writers and popular preachers. Some very eminently explain the kingdom to be the church, and the coming of the kingdom to be the extension of the church. For more than eighteen hundred years the church has been in the world; but as long as the church is in the world, she is taught to pray for the kingdom to come, which is evidence that the two are not identical. If the kingdom had come, we should not have to pray for it to come. The church is in our midst; therefore we never have to pray for the church to come. It is by the preaching of Christ, by the proclamation of the gospel, that we extend the church; but it will be the coming of the Lord himself that will be the coming of the kingdom. The manifestation of God's grace in infinite wisdom was determined upon before the world's foundation, both in the church and in the kingdom.

That the church is not the kingdom is evident from 1 Cor. xv. 50. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Believers must put off mortality. Their flesh and blood bodies, destined to corruption, must be changed, must be made incorruptible, must be immortalized, before they are qualified to rule in the kingdom. But all who are members of the church have bodies of "flesh and blood."

Numerous parables show that just prior to the establishment of the kingdom, there will be a time of trouble, a time of unequalled persecution, a time of terrible trial and suffering, as may be seen from the fourteenth chapter of Zechariah and other parts of Scripture; but the church of Christ was founded when the nation had rest. This, therefore, is further evidence that the church is not the kingdom.

Prophecy also shows that the church, a little previous to the Lord's coming, will be in a low condition. There will be a falling away; unbelief will prevail; and true and simple piety will be persecuted. But this will never be the state of the kingdom. Hence the conclusion is inevitable; the church cannot be the kingdom.

We remark further, that just as no earthly kingdom could exist without a form of government, so the kingdom of Christ will have a form of government,—a divine form, perfect, absolute, and for ever established and unchangeable; but the church has never had an established form accepted by all its members; and as the church has divided and subdivided again and again, and broken up into scores of different sects, so there have come into existence scores of different forms of church government. This of itself is evidence that the church is not the kingdom. There is incongruity in the very idea. There is no consistency between what is set forth in the prophetical writings concerning the kingdom, and what is seen to exist in the church.

The state of the Christian church from the beginning,—the dissensions, the controversies, the wranglings, the persecutions which have marked its history; the errors of discipline, the errors of doctrine, and the differences of opinion respecting the ordinances; these things and others that might be named, all show that the church is in no sense the predicted kingdom. The church is an assembly of believers—many of them very imperfect—in training, in preparation for the kingdom.

In Dan. vii. 27, it is said that the kingdom shall be given to the saints of the Most High. But the saints themselves constitute the church, and therefore, the church cannot be that which is given to it. If the church receives the kingdom, and possesses the kingdom, it cannot be the same as the kingdom.

When the kingdom is possessed, the saints are to be rulers, and have [illegible] dominion. Being joint-heirs with Christ, they are to reign with him, so that their position will be one of great honor; but that has never been true of the church in all the past eighteen hundred years. How, therefore, can the church be the kingdom? The church has been persecuted and oppressed instead of ruling and reigning.

Paul reckons the establishment of the kingdom from the appearing—the second appearing—of Jesus; but the Christian church was established shortly after his first appearing. The two, therefore, cannot be the same.

At the time when the kingdom shall be set up, both according to Daniel and John, there will be judgment, and destruction of enemies; earthly kingdoms shall be broken and consumed; the prophets and the saints and them that fear the name of God shall be rewarded, but this was not true of the period when the church was established.

If by the church is meant the kingdom, and by the kingdom is meant the church, and the two terms mean the same, then we may put one for the other wherever either the one or the other term is used, and the sense will still be unimpaired. But let any one try this, and he will soon find out not only that it is a mistake, but a very serious one. Try Matt. viii. 12: "But the sons of the kingdom (the natural heirs) shall be cast forth into the outer darkness." Put in church for kingdom, and it will read, "But the sons of the church shall be cast forth into the outer darkness." Try Mark xi. 10: "Blessed is the kingdom that cometh, the kingdom of our father David." Put in church here for kingdom, and it will read, "Blessed is the church that cometh, the church of our father David." Matt. xxi. 28; xviii. 18, 17; Acts viii. [illegible] passages may be tried in the same way, and the result will be to make good sense into nonsense.

In various passages the kingdom is promised as a reward for faithfulness; but this is opposed to the theory that the church is the kingdom, and that believers are in the kingdom now. The church is never promised as a reward for faithfulness. Besides, if the kingdom is now existing, and believers are in it, in what sense can they be said to enter it in the future? But further, the common system is inconsistent with itself. If persons enter the kingdom when they believe on Christ and are born again, and then continue in the kingdom as long as they live, how can they be brought up for trial before the judgment of the great white throne, as the popular teaching endeavors to show.

It is a common expression of some ministers, in referring to new converts, to say that so many have entered into the kingdom, or been born into the kingdom. But Scripture does not speak thus. To those who are already believers, Paul says, "Who calleth you into his own kingdom and glory." "To the end that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer." 1 Thess. ii. 12; 2 Thess. i. 5. Both these passages put the kingdom in the future. SILAS HENN.

BE COURTEOUS.

It is God's will, that we "be courteous," that we be kind, that we treat others with loving, tender consideration. And when it is God's will that we do a thing, we must do it; when it is his will that we "be" so and so, every power that we possess must be brought to bear toward that end.

"Be courteous!"—not just to your relatives, not only to those friends who are dear to your heart, not to those of the household of faith alone, but to all; to the poor, to the humble, to the timid child, to the guest, to the stranger.

We love kind and sociable people, we love people whose words are helpful hopeful words, whose presence is like a benediction. Let us strive to be like them, let us make ourselves. (I say make with strong emphasis) be kind and sociable, by cultivating loving kindly feelings. Let us ask God to help us to speak helpful hopeful words. God knows there is need enough of such. He sees the poor brother fainting by the way. He sees the despairing, melancholy one, almost ready to stretch out the hand in self-destruction. Oh, to be able to help! to be able to speak the right word! I pray for this. I pray to "be courteous," not only in outward behavior, but from the heart. God weighs motives, he sees what we feel, and he wants us to feel right. He will not look on us with any degree of allowance if we mistreat, or cast causeless reproaches upon those who have taken upon themselves the name of his Son.

I want to "be courteous" to the sinful, that I may win them over to the side of Jesus. There is a feeling of absolute pain at my heart, when I look upon them and think that they have no part in, nor hope of the future. They may not be in conduct and manners what I desire, but that does not make me hate them, it only makes me love them with a pitiful, forgiving love that longs, reaches out to save. "Be courteous." Put down the dislikes and the hatred. Be yourselves, like Jesus, and you will make them grow into what you would like them to be; hate them, shun them, run away from them, and you will by and by be filled with remorse over their hopeless graves! "Be courteous" and "win stars for your crown of rejoicing" in the day of the Lord Jesus: "be courteous," and so be missionaries for God to all by whom you are surrounded.

Our Vocation.

Consistency is a precious jewel. Let our calling be what it may, all admire a worthy walk—a walk that shall correspond with the principles, aims and objects of that calling. The physician must understand the nature of disease, the power and effect of medicine, and he must hold himself in readiness to serve his patients when called. Here are the main features of the physician's calling. Should he be lacking in any of these particulars, would he be worthy of the physician's calling? Certainly not.

And if we take any of the other professions, we shall find that the same principles hold good. Christianity is a "calling," a "vocation." As such it has its principles, its aims and objects. Hence Paul says, "I beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called." Eph. iv. 1. Now if a doctor can not omit any of his duties and be worthy of his calling, can one be a worthy Christian and omit any of the duties of Christianity? Without hesitation, I answer, no. And just here let me quote the Master's solemn warning: "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." God grant that this warning may sink deep into the heart of every one that has assumed to wear that "worthy name."

The Christian's calling is the highest, the holiest, the grandest of all callings. No other calling brings to us the promise of immortality in the kingdom of God. No other calling brings to us the promise of heirship of God and joint heirship with Jesus Christ. No other calling will secure to us the promise, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. xxii. 14. And no other calling will admit us into that grand country wherein dwelleth righteousness, and where there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, for the former things will have passed away.

In view of such exceeding great and precious promises, brethren, shall we not strive to "walk worthy" of the Christian vocation "with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace?" Shall we not let our light shine before men, that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father who is in heaven? Is it not a grand privilege to battle for truth and righteousness as we pass through the perils of the last days. May the Lord help us to realize our responsibility; to gird on the whole armor; to fight the good fight of faith, and to lay hold on eternal life! Amen.

G. W. GREEN.

To the Church of God Assembled in Conference at Plymouth, Ind., Greeting in Jesus' Name.

Dear brethren and sisters, we would most gladly meet with you, and talk face to face on the blessed truths in which we feel a common interest, were it consistent with circumstances to be with you. Though distance may physically intervene, we will be with you in spirit, and meet at the same mercy seat in prayer, asking that divine assistance may be given, that all your deliberations may be characterized by the same loving, gentle spirit that was present with our blessed Master, whilst he dwelt among men. Truly we are living in perilous times when we need to have on the whole armor, and our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel.

Alas, we cannot deny that many are departing from the faith. Why is it that they depart? The answer comes, Because they are not thoroughly established in word and doctrine. Sound doctrine is the only sure basis on which we can rest secure from the thousand beguiling and vain religious theories that are afloat both in the world, the nominal churches, and also among those who profess to have come out of Mystic Babylon. We know some will feel to say, "Let us have more of the practical and less of the doctrinal." This is not according to Godliness. Doctrine held a very prominent place in the teachings of the apostles. See Eph. iv. 14; Col. ii. 22; 1 Tim. i. 10; iv. 1, 6, 13, 16; v. 17; vi. 1–3; 2 Tim. iii. 10–16; Titus i. 9; ii. 7–10; Acts ii. 42. In this they followed their Master's example. See Matt. vii. 28; Mark xi. 18; xii. 38; John vii. 16, and very many other texts. Was it not the doctrine that Christ preached that made him so conspicuous in his day? He said, My doctrine (or teaching) is not mine, but the Father's which sent me. So likewise the apostles were accused as setters forth of strange doctrine, and so likewise today are those who follow their example accused in the same way. What is it but a difference of doctrine that separates us from nominal Christianity? There are but two kinds of doctrine, one is of God, the other is of man. The former was taught by our Lord and his immediate followers. It has not changed, for it was true, and truth is unchangeable in its character. Neither has it changed in importance.

The last words that fell from our dear Master's lips were, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be condemned." This is very conclusive. Salvation is made to rest on faith, and faith must grasp something on which it can rest, and that something is the doctrine or teaching of Christ and his apostles as given to us in the word of life.

Feeling is not a reliable test of our state of preparedness to meet the Lord. Thousands and thousands feel happy in a false hope; but that does not prove that the great Jehovah is going to let such one make his own plan whereby to escape from death. He, in his infinite wisdom, has laid the one plan whereby we may enter into life. Jesus said, "And this is eternal life, to know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Believe in him, let us see to it that we know him in his word. Let us see to it that the doctrines we believe and teach are his. Let us with renewed diligence search the written word, and assuredly we will be drawn closer together into the one faith which was in divine wisdom devised for our benefit. Let us see to it that our every day lives harmonize with our high calling. It is written, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God but it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Blessed assurance, it lifts the weary soul above the toil and cares, the trials and conflicts of this present life, and by the eye of faith we can see the promise fulfilled and taste of those pictured everlasting joys. And now unto the care of him who is able to keep you from falling will we commend you, hoping that you may by him be abundantly blessed, strengthened and built up in our most holy faith. Your brother and sister in Christ, JEFFERSON and CARRIE WILLIAMS.

[This letter, although it came too late to be read at the Annual Meeting, as well as too late to be published in an earlier issue of THE RESTITUTION, will be read at this later date with the utmost pleasure by all our subscribers, as the names of the signers have become so endeared to all who take our paper.—ED.

Memphis.

Memphis was the second capital of Egypt—sometimes the first—and there the Pharaohs lived at the time of the Exodus; and there, if its monuments had remained, might have been found the traces of the Israelites, which we seek in vain elsewhere. Historically and religiously it ought to be as interesting as Thebes. Yet Thebes still remains quite unrivalled. There was never anything at Memphis like that glorious circle of hills—there is now nothing like those glorious ruins. Still it is a striking place. Imagine a wide green plain, greener than anything else to be seen in Egypt. A vast succession of palm groves, almost like the Ravanna pine forest in extent, runs along the river side, springing in many spots from green turf. Behind these palm forests—behind the plain—rises the African range; and behind that again, "even as the hills stand round about Jerusalem," so stand the Pyramids round about Memphis. These are to Memphis as the royal tombs to Thebes, that is, the sepulchres of the kings of Lower, as those of Upper Egypt. And such as the view now is, such it must have been as far back as history extends. They are not actually as old as the hills, but they are the oldest monuments of Egypt and of the world, and such as we see them in the distant outline, each group rising at successive intervals—Beshur, Sakara, Abou Sir and Gizeh—such they seemed to Moses, to Joseph, perhaps to Abraham. They are the sepulchres of the kings, and in the sand hills at their feet are the sepulchres of the ordinary inhabitants of Memphis.

For miles you walk through the layers of bones and skulls and mummy swathings, extending from the sand, or deep down in shaft-like mummy-pits; and amongst the mummy-pits are vast galleries filled with mummies of Ibises, in red jars, once filled, but now gradually despoiled. And lastly—only discovered recently—are long galleries hewn in the rock, and opening from time to time—say every fifty yards—into high arched vaults, under each of which reposes the most magnificent black marble sarcophagus that can be conceived—a chamber rather than a coffin—smooth and sculptured within and without; grander by far than even the granite sarcophagi of the Theban kings—how much grander than any sepulchres anywhere else. And all for the successive carcass of the bull Apis! The galleries formed part of the great temple of Serapis, in which the Apis mummies were deposited; and here they lay, not in royal, but in divine state. The walls of the entrances are covered with exvotos. In one porch there is a painting at full length, black and white, of the Bull himself, as he was in life.

One other trace remains of the old Memphis. It had its own great temple, as magnificent as that of Ammon, at Karnac, dedicated to the Egyptian Vulcan, Pthah. Of this not a vestige remains. But Herodotos describes that Sesostris, that is Rameses, built a colossal statue of himself in front of the gateway. And there accordingly—as is usually seen by travellers—is the last memorial of the wonderful king, which they bear away in their recollections of Egypt.

Deep in the forest palms, before described, in a little pool of water left by the inundations, which year by year always cover the spot, lies a gigantic trunk, its back upward. The name of Rameses is on the belt. The face lies downward, but is visible in profile and quite perfect, and the very same as at Ipsambul, with the only exception that the features are more feminine and more beautiful, and the peculiar hang of the lip is not here.—Stanley's Sinai and Palestine.

TEMPERANCE.

Canon Farrar says that for every Christian made in India, England has made 100 drunkards. From this land there have been far more cargoes of rum sent to Africa than ever there were missionaries or Christian teachers. We fight for Christ between two fires. We go into the hospitals to try and raise the sick and dying, and all the mortars of the civilized world are shelling and bursting these hospitals with the devil's batteries of the liquor traffic. How long, O Lord, how long?

THE SALOON.

This "saloon," that "saloon," the other "saloon"—saloons, saloons, saloons figure constantly and universally in the anarchist trial. Conspirators met in saloons; dynamite was discussed in saloons; bombs were distributed over saloons; armed revolutionists were drilled above, under, or in rear of saloons; treason made assignation in saloons, and time and time again witnesses say "we went to" such and such "a saloon for wine or beer." There is not a country under the sun in which lurk so much treason, revolution and murderous treaty as in our "saloons" of the United States, and notably in all large cities. These saloon pests harbor thieves, thugs, house-breakers, anarchists, robbers and murderers. Nine-tenths of the law-breaking in America are hatched in saloons, and the admitted fact is palliated by the axiom that saloons are headquarters for town, city, and even national election gerrymandering. The liquor counter is the scaffold on which a half-hundred beautiful, vital American things are assassinated, and on which scores of horrid public plagues are glorified. If our Germans adopted citizens are bound to drink their beer, we wish they would use it at home, and join all classes of citizens to banish the public saloon.—North-western Christian Advocate.

To satisfy this desire of our friends we have made arrangements with W. Tuttle of Plymouth, Ind., to make us a quantity of handsome Cabinet Photographs of Elder Chaplin, and we make the following offer:—

To each of our Subscribers who pays his subscription in advance, to Dec. 31, 1887, before Jan. 1, 1887, we will send by mail a Cabinet-size Photograph of Elder S. A. Chaplin, Editor of THE RESTITUTION.

Brother Chaplin has kindly agreed to write his Autograph on each one of the pictures given away by this offer, hence those securing a photograph will also have his

RENEW TODAY.

WE hope our correspondents will be very patient. Many cares occupy our attention at this season of the year. That we may do justice to the columns of THE RESTITUTION Editorially we have to provide for literary and religious journals and books, and we have a number of letters to write. Indeed we do not expect to be in good "working order" till after New Year's day.

THE Editor has consented to have his likeness sent out for two reasons. One reason is that quite a number of our readers would like to see the shadow who may never see the person. Another reason is that probably some others would like this little souvenir better than any other premium that the publisher might be able to offer. The Editor has only to say further in this matter that whatever may result financially will be for the good of the paper. Personally he has no interest in the matter.

IS IT A SIGN OF THE TIMES?

"Therefore, Son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, thus saith the Lord God; in the day when my people Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it? And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company and a mighty army." Ezek. xxxviii. 14, 15.

In this prophecy of the coming invasion of the land of Israel from the north, Ezekiel distinctly shows that the mighty invading army will consist mainly or entirely of cavalry. The restoration of Israel has commenced, and the Czar is equipping his mounted forces. The last decisive conflict is to take place on Oriental, not on European soil.

RUSSIA'S VAST CAVALRY FORCES.

Russia, always rather Asiatic than European, rather nomad than industrial, attaches secondary importance to infantry in the mechanism of warfare. She proposes to make cavalry all that other powers would wish to make infantry, but much more formidable also, seeing that trained cavalry can move with a rapidity impossible to infantry. Gradually she is converting her whole military power into mounted forces; and she has been so earnest in perfecting her army that, without counting her territorial reserves, she can already mobilize 2,482,000 men. This force, classed in two vast divisions, includes no less than 1,180 squadrons of cavalry—608 squadrons for the first and 522 for the second. Prussia at her greatest extremity could only oppose these 1,180 squadrons with 370 squadrons of German horse.

But Russia could still call out cavalry and admirable cavalry, by the hundred thousand, from her steppes and her Asiatic provinces; all the hordes are ready to obey a signal and are being trained to use repeating rifles. It is believed by the writer referred to that, however large their military figures appear on paper, it would be all that Austria and Germany together could now do to oppose Russian infantry with an equal mass of infantry, while they could not oppose the very first wave of Russian cavalry with more than half the number of Western horsemen.

If this view of the situation be trustworthy, the moment of a terrific struggle, upon which the very existence of Western nationalities depends, may not be very far off. But it is not improbable that the foreign reviewer has underestimated German resources and given insufficient attention to the comparative lightness of the Russian armament in point of ordnance and other weapons. At all events, the twin German powers appear strong enough to hold their own, unless some alliance should be made against them of a really extraordinary character. The result of crushing German power by combination, however, would assuredly result in bringing all Western Europe under the feet of the Czar; and Russia's strongest ally might be the first to know cause for repentance. New Orleans Times-Democrat.

THE OUTLOOK.

"Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking for those things which are coming on the earth." Luke xxi. 26.

Some questions give rise to an "irrepressible conflict" that only the arbitrament of the sword can ever decide. The existence of slavery in the United States was a problem of this nature. The right to hold certain provinces is a question aggravating France and Germany that is almost certain to be decided on the battle field. That the different phases of the Oriental Question will result in one of the most dreadful conflicts ever known, is almost universally conceded. It is as clearly seen by the reflecting enlightened statesman as it is by the student of prophecy that a war involving all the Great Powers of Europe is now imminent to settle questions regarding Egypt, Turkey and Syria. The establishment of the Theocracy, however, is the grand factor left out by the worldly-wise. We subjoin the following from the Chicago Evening Journal of Dec. 6th.

THE EUROPEAN SITUATION.

The European combination, at least on one side, is the most powerful that has existed since the days of the great Napoleon. Germany, Austria, Italy and England, probably with Turkey, have formed an understanding that will lead to a close alliance in case of war.

On the opposite side is Russia, with the moral sympathies and support of France. If a general war should occur, however, Germany's entire attention would be occupied by the effort of France to regain Alsace, and the others would be compelled to conduct the attack on Russia without its aid.

Germany, not satisfied with being the greatest power in the world, is adding to its armies, and the Government has demanded the immediate extension for another seven years of the existing septenate, or seven years' appropriations for the army, which does not expire till 1888. In asking for this legislation the veteran Von Moltke, now 86 years old, made a powerful speech in the Reichstag, referring plainly to both Russia and France as likely at any time to be engaged in open hostilities with Germany. He asked "a unanimous vote" for the measure, to show the unity of all classes and parties in Germany for its defense from external foes. Even men accustomed to look on the bright side of things expect serious trouble in Europe with the coming Spring.

JERUSALEM.

As every item of news from Jerusalem is of particular interest at this time, we are careful to select for our readers all that comes in our way. In pursuance of this course, we give a letter from a Jew, now residing in the Holy City, to another Jew residing in Chicago, who publishes it in the Inter Ocean prefacing it with the date, as well as making some additional remarks at its close. We also give from the Boston Journal, kindly sent us by a beloved brother in Christ,—a Reporters account of an interview with Hon. Selah Merrill, lately U. S. Consul at Jerusalem. In both these communications the Turk is spoken of as the hindering power. As such he must soon be removed out of the way.

FULFILLMENTS OF PROPHECY.

Editor Inter Ocean:

CHICAGO, Nov. 27.—For the benefit of a large number of your readers, both Jews and Christian believers in the times of restitution of Israel to his own land, I send you a copy of a letter from S. Konstroone, an American Jew, bearing date of Jerusalem, Sept. 22, 1886.

"An English society has commenced to build up two colonies of poor Jews. Ten houses are in process of erection. The colony upon the Mount of Olives is for the poor Gadites, who came to us four years ago from Arabia. These Jews claim that they were moved of God to leave their homes in Arabia and return to their own land, as the restoration had commenced. It seems they were not mistaken, and they have been miraculously prospered ever since they arrived here.

These Gaditas are a mild, quiet people, simple in their habits, and generally well liked. Thus we see that God is bringing his chosen people of Israel home to their own land according to his word.

A Russian General has arrived and will build a new hospice near the Jaffa (or Joppa) road, which will make a great improvement in that direction. He will also make other improvements.

The splendid new structure built by the Greeks last year is completed and ready to be occupied. The whole building, containing forty stores, has been leased by Mr. Frutinger, banker, for ten years. He will occupy some part of it for banking purposes, and the remainder is already let to Jerusalem merchants.

No one would have believed five years ago that forty costly stores would have been so readily taken for business. It seems now almost incredible.

There are also 100 new shops completed near the Holy Sepulchre(?) The street on which they stand was a heap of rubbish five years ago. Does not this show a wonderful improvement in the Holy City?

The street leading from the Jaffa gate to the Mosk of Omar is one mile in length, and has just been completed. It is nicely paved with square blocks of stone. The people find no fault with these improvements, but pay their taxes cheerfully. This is all in fulfilment of prophecy. Let the world hear what the Lord has said of it by the Prophet Jeremiah:

Here Mr. Konstroone quotes a portion of Jeremiah, xxxiii.

I find our new consul, Mr. Gilman, is a believer in the prophecies; a progressive man, and therefore friendly to all matters pertaining to the upbuilding of the city of our God. We are thankful to God that he has heard our prayers, and sent us the right man at the right time. I hope to share the blessings which God is beginning to pour out upon Jerusalem, with my brother in America. We are not much alarmed about the tidings of war. It is just what we have always believed, that through this great struggle and time of trouble, the desire of all nations will come.—S. Konstroone.

Now, Mr. Editor, since you have been of late the mouthpiece of a goodly number of prophets (?) assembled here from all parts of the land, I, too, should like to add a word to this, being a Jew, and a believer in that Jew of Nazareth whom our fathers, with the Gentiles, put to death. I have great faith in what he says in Luke xxi. 23-24 concerning our people: their dispersion into all countries; Jerusalem trodden down by the Gentiles, and blindness falling upon them, Rom. xi. 25-26, until a certain length of time or years should be fulfilled, namely, the end of the Gentile times, years. Just as there was an end of mercy to our people (A. D. 70) for the fulfilment of a purpose of Jehovah and a beginning of grace, unmerited favor to the Gentile world, for that purpose, so now is the end of the Gentile times, years, at hand, when that blindness is to be removed, not only from great, but also from all nations, Isaiah xxv. 7, and when Israel is to be and is being gathered from the quarters of the earth, their temple to be rebuilt, David, their King, to be raised up unto them, and the enormous wealth of our people (always movable) to be taken there for the improvement and development of that land. Now, keep your eye on the Turkish power; when she goes down the Kingdom of the Messiah will be established in the earth.—P. H. Winterstein.

BACK FROM PALESTINE.

Yesterday afternoon a Journal reporter called on Selah Merrill, LL. D., late United States Consul at Jerusalem and formerly archeologist of the American Palestine Exploration Society. Dr. Merrill, who returned only last week, after an absence of nearly five years, lives in an old-fashioned mansion just at the base of Andover's school-crowned hill. The reporter was shown into a room in which the evidences of the literateur and those of the recently returned traveler struggled for predominance. The reporter had barely time to glance at confused heaps of letters, books and telegrams with which the table was strewn before Dr. Merrill came in, and in reply to the usual question, "Are you glad to get back?" said, "Yes, indeed I am. I am not sure that I have really arrived, however, everything is so unsettled yet. I have just been in to see about my freight, which is at the Custom House."

"Is Jerusalem at all modernized, doctor?"

"No, and it cannot grow on account of the walls—that is, inside the city; outside, there is building going on. Twenty-five years ago there was hardly a building outside of the walls, now there are hundreds."

"Is this a real growth?"

"No, all these houses have been erected by foreign capital. Jews who are citizens of other nations having done a great deal, as the Rothschilds and Montefiore; they have built hospitals, asylums, etc. The Russians have built a number of fine structures, among others an 'Hospice' accommodating 10,000 pilgrims. Their Consulate is the finest building in Jerusalem."

"What is the position of the Turkish Government towards new-comers?"

"Hostile: they are more opposed than they ever were to Christian influences. By 'Christian' they mean European. It is almost impossible to buy a piece of land for a house, and absolutely impossible to get permission to build a church or school."

"Is this hostility open?"

"Yes, during the last two years more than a hundred Protestant schools have been closed by the Turkish Government. This fact would show the feeling against Europeans better than anything else."

"What do you think of the idea that the Jews will all go back to Palestine?"

"It is impossible for them to do it. The Government was so much alarmed at the arrival of 15,000 Jews that it put a stop to their immigration."

"What kind of people are these returned Jews?"

"They are mostly poor, although a few bring money. There is very little trade in Jerusalem, although there are many openings for business enterprise were the Government different; for instance, the soil, which is, in my judgment, excellent, might be farmed to advantage."

"Has Palestine any mineral resources?"

"Yes, there are deposits of salt, bitumen, copper, lead and other minerals which might be worked profitably. About the Dead Sea, too, I have made personal observations and find that petroleum wells might be sunk there with advantage."

"What is the reason for this jealousy on the part of the Government?"

"They see their power and influence waning; they are losing some of their possessions and they have no special friend among the European Powers."

"What is the feeling in the East in regard to the English occupation of Egypt?"

"Oh, it is understood that England has come to stay, and in Palestine they are glad of it, for Egypt has improved so much under British rule that Palestine is getting some of the prosperity."

"Did you know Gen. Gordon?"

"Yes, I knew him intimately; there is a pile of letters from him."

"What sort of man was he?"

"A remarkably retiring [illegible] and unassuming [illegible] companion [illegible]

"What [illegible] Jerusalem's population [illegible]

"The population is about [illegible] Of these more than half are Jews, a little more than a quarter Moslems, and the rest Christians; the Moslems are mostly Arabs with a few Turks."

"Did you find your work as Consul pleasant?"

"Yes, the other Consuls were as pleasant a set of men as one would find anywhere. The annoyances of the position came almost entirely from about 200 naturalized American Jews who were continually getting into difficulty among themselves, and then I would be called in to settle the matter."

"How did you spend your leisure time?"

"All of my leisure time was spent in archæological work. I had the honor of discovering the old wall around the city."

Dr. Merrill is to live at Andover at present and devote his time to literary work.

Dr. Merrill expressed the great pleasure he had derived from the receipt of the Daily Journal during his entire stay at Jerusalem.—Boston Journal, Nov. 30, 1886.

Marvels of Providence.

A celebrated sceptical philosopher of the last century — the historian Hume—thought to demolish the credibility of the Christian Revelation by the concise argument: "It is contrary to experience that a miracle should be true, but not contrary to experience that testimony should be false." Contrary to experience that phenomena should exist which we cannot trace to causes perceptible to the human sense, or conceivable by human thought! It would be much nearer the truth to say that within the husbandman's experience there are no phenomena which can be rationally traced to anything but the instant energy of creative power.

Did this philosopher ever contemplate the landscape at the close of the year, when seeds, and grains, and fruits have ripened, and stalks have withered, and leaves have fallen, and winter has forced her icy curb even into the roaring jaws of Niagara, and sheeted half a continent in her glittering shroud, and all this teeming vegetation and organized life are locked in cold and marble obstruction; and, after week upon week, and month upon month, have swept, with sleet and chilly rain, and howling storm, over the earth, and riveted their crystal bolts upon the door of nature's sepulchre—when the sun at length begins to wheel in higher circles through the sky, and softer winds to breathe over melting snows—did he ever behold the long-hidden earth at length appear, and soon the timid grass peep forth; and anon the autumnal wheat begin to paint the field, and velvet leaflets to burst from purple buds, throughout the reviving forest, and then the mellow soil to open its fruitful bosom to every grain and seed dropped from the planter's hand; buried, but to spring up again, clothed with a new, mysterious being; and then, as more fervid suns inflame the air, and softer showers distil from the clouds, and gentler dews string their pearls on twig and tendril, did he ever watch the ripening grain and fruit, pendent from stalk, and vine, and tree; the meadow, the field, the pasture, the grove, each after his kind, arrayed in myriad-tinted garments, instinct with circulating life; seven millions of counted leaves on a single tree, each of which is a system whose exquisite complication puts to shame the shrewdest cunning of the human hand; every planted seed and grain which has been loaned to the earth, compounding its pious usury thirty, sixty, a hundred fold, all harmoniously adapted to the sustenance of living nature, the bread of a hungry world; here, a tilled cornfield whose yellow blades are nodding with the food of man; there, an unplanted wilderness—the great Father's farm—where he "who hears the raven's cry" has cultivated, with his own hand, his merciful crop of berries, and nuts, and acorns, and seeds, for the humbler families of animated nature, the solemn elephant, the browsing deer, the wild pigeon whose fluttering caravan darkens the sky; the merry squirrel who bounds from branch to branch, in the joy of his little life—has he seen all this? Does he see it every year and month and day? Does he live, and move, and breathe, and think, in this atmosphere of [illegible]—himself the greatest [illegible] whose smallest fibre and [illegible] is as much a [illegible]

Reports of Labor.

[illegible] CENTERVILLE, Kan.

[illegible] Restitution:

I wish to say to the brethren scattered abroad and especially in Kansas, that I came to this State from Indiana last August, and since then have been most of the time engaged in traveling and looking up those isolated brethren so widely scattered over the broad prairies of Kansas and trying to sow the good seed of the gospel. I feel that I have been somewhat successful, for I have met many of the loved ones and always met with a hearty welcome.

Our first meeting in Kansas was held at Bitter Creek. From there I went to Brother Rolando Chaplin's, nephew to the Editor, where our next meeting was held. Next went to Fair View, where we held twenty very interesting meetings, and from there to Millerton with the same effect. I then returned to Bitter Creek where we held another meeting.

Up to this time, Oct. 24th, I had held something over 50 meetings, all well attended and the best of attention given. I think there is good soil in Kansas on which to sow the good seed. Having received several calls and feeling that I could make my work more effectual, I arranged to travel with private conveyance. I started for this place, a distance of 250 miles, coming by way of Wichita, stopping with John Hinman; from there to Council Grove and visited with Brother J. B. Craton; then to Brother Elliot's, Emporia; then to Lebo, where I met Brother Jessie Nichols.

I arrived here on the 13th of Nov., and found Brother and Sister Morris alive to the truth, they being the only ones in this vicinity. The next morning Brother Morris went out to give notice of a meeting, and in the evening a goodly number came out. We have been holding meetings here ever since and the interest seems to be increasing. There is quite a strong Dunkard element here, hence we have some opposition, just enough to make our meetings interesting. On the last evening the house was crowded to overflowing, there hardly being standing room, and the best interest I ever saw.

At the close of the meeting I stated that we had a paper in the interest of our views, and we would send it to any one three months on trial for 25 cents, and to my surprise they began to hand in their quarters faster than I could write down their names. I got seventeen trial subscribers, which I send with this letter. Any one may address me here. Your brother in the one hope.

H. R. CARTER.

Editor Restitution:

I have had a regular appointment and preached the truths of the Scriptures as I now preach them for about three years, at the Hickory School House, four miles southwest of Greenup, Ill., and for the information of passing brethren I would say that my appointment begins the Saturday night before the second Sunday in each month, and all that may pass are invited to give us a call. Last night I closed a series of five sermons at the above place, on account of the extreme cold weather, though notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather there was a good attendance and attention. I expect if my health permits, and the Lord will, to put in considerable of my time this winter trying to preach the truth of God's word. Remaining in the one hope and fervently looking for the soon coming and reign of Christ with his saints in the earth, I will close. JOHN D. RAWLINGS.

JEFFERSON, Oregon.

Editor Restitution:

After due respects and returned thanks for past favors, I will say that I enclose herein a two dollar bill to pay for THE RESTITUTION for the year 1887, for I cannot think of living without it. There are very few here of the one faith, and there is not a preacher in this Willamett valley. If any of the brethren should come to this valley they will find a welcome stopping place with me. I live three miles east of Jefferson. If there is any preacher that wants to get to a warm climate let him come to this valley. There is good health here, good water, and plenty of it. From your Brother.

Manners.

Manners are of more importance than laws. Upon them, in great measure, the laws depend. The law touches us but here and there, now and then. Manners are what vex and soothe, corrupt or purify, exalt or debase, barbarize or refine us, by a constant, steady, uniform, insensible operation, like that of the air we breathe in. They give their whole form and color to our lives. According to their quality they aid morals, they supply them, or they totally destroy them.—Burke.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL.

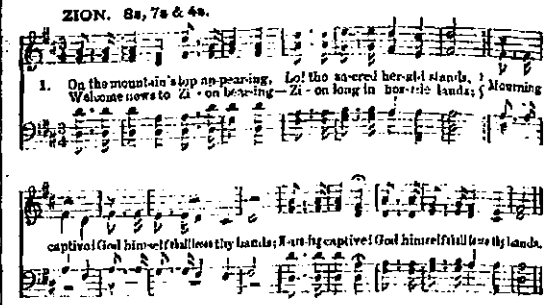
5

ZION. 8s, 7s & 4s.



2 Has thy night been long and mournful?
Have thy friends unfaithful proved?
Have thy foes been proud and scornful,
By thy sighs and tears unmoved?
Cease thy mourning;
Zion still is well beloved.

3 God, thy God, will now restore thee:
He himself appears thy Friend;
All thy foes shall flee before thee;
Here their boasts and triumphs end:
Great deliverance
Zion's King will surely send.

4 Peace and joy shall now attend thee;
All thy warfare now is past:
God thy Savior will defend thee:
Victory is thine at last;
All thy conflicts
End in everlasting rest.

KELLEY.

1 O'er the distant mountains breaking,
Comes the reddening dawn of day;
Rise, my soul, from sleep awaking,
Rise, and sing, and watch, and pray;
'Tis thy Savior,
On his bright returning way.

2 O thou long expected, weary
Waits my anxious soul for thee;
Life is dark, and earth is dreary
Where thy light I do not see
O my Savior,
When will thou return to me?

3 Long, too long, in sin and sadness,
Far away from thee I pine;
When, O when, shall I the gladness
Of thy Spirit feel in mine?
O my Savior,
When shall I be wholly thine?

4 With my lamp well trimmed and burning
Swift to hear, and slow to roam
Watching for the glad returning
To restore me to my home;
Come, my Savior,
O my Savior, quickly come!

JOHN S. B. MASTERS.

1 Far on Zion's Mount appearing,
Lo, a ransomed, shining band;
Sparkling crowns of glory wearing,
Pure of heart, and clean of hand;
They are blessed,
Who upon Mount Zion stand.

2 Waves of glory streaming o'er them;
Hark! they chant a heavenly lay;
While their leader on before them,
Guides them through eternal day,
They are blessed,
For their tears are wiped away.

3 Now they range the earth in glory,
Fears and sorrows all are o'er;
Hear them tell the wondrous story,
Saved from death to die no more;
They are blessed,
Who have reach that blissful shore.

In lots of fifty at 50 cents each.

The delay in getting our New Hymn Book out has been unavoidable. Circumstances we could not control have hindered, but we have done all we could, and now trust we shall be able to present a book in every way worthy of your patronage.

PLEDGES.

We want to know how large an edition to print, and for that reason now ask all our friends to send us pledges of the number of books they want, and we can then get an idea of the number it will be necessary to issue. We do not want your money now, only the number of copies you will take. Send at once.

THE LONG DAY.

"The path of the righteous is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Prov iv. 18.

Within her sunny porch a grandame sat,
Watching the flickering shadow of the leaves
Upon the path; methought I heard her sigh,
A sobbing breath, repressed, like one who grieves.

"Mother, what troubles you?" I gently said.
"You look so happy in your little home."
Lifting her eyes, she spoke, "My child, I pine
For the Long Day to come."

Her quaint, sad words found echo in my heart.
How many of us in the world's wild hum
Find space to sigh, as twilight shadows fall,
For the Long Day to come!

And it shall come, and bring no weariness,
No pain, or tears, or partings in the home;
The former things shall fade and pass away
When the Long Day shall come.

The Book of Job, called Job, son of Zare, Son of Hreguel, Son of Hesau, Son of Isaac, Son of Habraam. — According to the Septuagint.

CHAP. XXXI.

1. I made a covenant with my eyes; and may not have conscious knowledge of a virgin.

2. And what hath God from above allotted in distribution? Even an inheritance from the Most High for him who is sufficient.

3. Alas for the wrong-doer's loss and the estrangement of those who are the cause of transgression:

4. Will he not see my way and will he not number all my steps;

5. And see whether I have gone my way with scorners and whether my foot hath hasted to deceive?

6. For I am being weighed in a just balance and the Lord knoweth my innocence.

7. If my foot hath inclined out of the way, and my heart hath also followed after mine eye, and I have touched bribes with my hands, then

8. Should I sow forsooth and others eat, and I come to be without a root upon the earth;

9. If my heart hath followed after another man's wife, if I have become a subornar at her doors,

10. Then may my wife also be taken by another, and my children disgraced;

11. For wrath's anger is insatiate when a man's wife is polluted.

12. Yea, a fire is there that flameth up against all their portions, and whosever he may have gone, he hath been destroyed from the roots up:

13. And if I have made little of my comrade's judgment of me male or female, when they judged me,

14. What indeed shall I do if the Lord maketh a searching examination of me, and if a visitation what answer shall I make?

15. Is it not that even as I had my origin in a womb, they also had their origin? and we did indeed have our origin in the same womb. (The earth he means evidently).

16. And they when helpless did not obtain from me a utility which perchance I had; and I did not search out widows with mine eye;

17. And if I ate my morsel alone and did not share it with an orphan;

18. Because from my youth up I gave support like a father; and from my mother's womb I acted as a guide:

19. And if I overlooked the naked who was being lost, and did not clothe him;

20. And if the helpless did not bespeak a blessing on me, and if their shoulders were not warmed with a fleece from my lambs;

21. If I ever raised a hand against an orphan, trusting that much responsive aid was mine about me:

22. May my shoulder stand back from its collar-bone, and my arm be torn from its socket.

23. For the fear of the Lord constrained me; from his revenues I may not subtract;

24. If I have got together gold for my dust, and if I have put my trust in a precious stone;

25. And if I have rejoiced in the much wealth that hath become mine; and if I have laid my hand upon unnumbered things,

26. Pray, shall we see the sun that shineth, leave off and the moon waning away? No, for he is ever there.

27. And if my heart hath practiced deceit in secret; and if I have loved with my hand upon my mouth;

28. This indeed would be accounted to me as the greatest transgression, because it was a lie on my part in the sight of the Most High.

29. And if I have become a rejoicer over the discomfiture of my enemies, and my heart hath said, good enough for you!

30. May my ear hear my own curse, and may I become the by-word of my royal people when afflicted;

31. And if my female courtiers have often said, would that some one would give us to be filled with his flesh; and though my powers to use well was very great, hath not the guest camped out of doors? No, but my door hath been opened to any one that came;

33. And if when a sinner I have willingly hid my sin;

34. Yea, if I have not dismayed multitudes from being a mob, from discoursing in their presence; and if I have even allowed a helpless one to depart from my door with an empty bosom;

35. Who would grant me a hearer? and if I had not feared the hand of the Lord, and had withheld a contract against any one;

36. Would they not have read it out when I had a garland of preferment put upon my shoulders?

37. And if I had not torn it up and given it back without receiving anything from the debtor?

38. And if the land had sighed against me and the furrows thereof had mourned along with it,

39. And if I alone without value received had devoured the strength thereof; and if I had grieved the mind of the Lord in what I had received from the earth;

40. Surely then might nettles come forth for me instead of wheat and the bramble bush instead of barley;

C. GARDNER.

Watch and Pray.

This requirement, so often repeated by the Master to his disciples, has special reference to the closing up of this age, being found directly connected with the many signs hung out by the Master as waymarks by which his waiting people may know that sweet home is very near at hand. We are to watch for the signs that mark his coming near, while those who have a theory that nullifies any necessity for his coming, have no interest in the subject and of course will not watch.

We are also to watch and pray lest we be led into temptation. We are now right in the midst of dangerous temptations, that threaten and imperil our eternal welfare. We are tempted to neglect our duty and to conform and mix in with the world. Our Master overcame and so must we. This world, with all its deceptive allurements, was offered our Master on condition of obedience to the usurper, but he spurned the offer, and said "Get behind me Satan!" His [illegible] do likewise if they would overcome and sit down with him in his throne.

We must watch and pray, for we know not what hour our Lord will come, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping, slothful, negligent and inactive. We must watch and pray lest our hearts, minds or affections be overloaded with eating and drinking and the cares of this life, and so that day come upon us unawares. This was the sad condition of the old world. The Master says, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in or contracting marriage, and knew not until the day came and took them all away. So shall it be in the end of this world. They might have known, as the warning was sounded in their ears by a preacher of righteousness for a long time, but they were a world of skeptics, and because of this they justly perished in their own corruption. Just so now; the world is being warned, not by the wise of this world, but by those who are watching and waiting the Lord's good time.

But as it was then, so we find the great bulk of humanity now, lashed in skepticism, their minds filled with the cares of this life, fun and festival, with no time to think and talk about the coming of our long absent Lord, and to wait, watch and pray for the return of him who said, "I will come again!" As sure as an unbelieving world perished in their sins, while Noah and his family, who believed God, were saved in the ark according to God's order, just so the great day hastens on when the final separation of good and bad will overtake this unbelieving and fun loving world. When God's people who are in Christ, the antitypical ark, will be safely landed on the other shore, while the millions of unbelieving men and women who would not have Christ rule them, but preferred the pleasures of sin for a season, must cry for the rocks and mountains to fall on and hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come and who shall be able to stand? A solemn question and a solemn time.

Brethren, let us watch and pray more fervently that we may be counted worthy to escape all these things, and to stand before the Son of man, whose coming now hastens greatly. Christ was once called to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. In a little while our pains and aches will be exchanged for eternal life in the kingdom of God. A few more storms and we are safe at home in our Father's house. Possibly a few more cold winters and we are safely landed on the sunny side of eternal spring. Let us watch and be ready. T. E. ADAMS.

Youth's Column.

A Child's Longings.

I'm but a child, yet Jesus died.
From sin to set me free.
"Suffer the little ones," he said,
"And let them come to me."

I need the love which he bestows,
So tender and so true,
His blessing everywhere I see,
My whole life journey through.

I know there's work for childish hands,
But I am very weak;
I cannot see, I do not know,
Unless his help I seek.

I must go to him, as he said,
And he will smile and say,
"Come close within my arms, dear child;
"I'll lead thee all the way."

Then I shall know that I am his,
And he my friend and guide;
Though I can little do for him,
I shall be near his side.

The Bird's Visit.

A noted German writer relates a beautiful incident which occurred in his neighborhood, in which a poor man, who owed a debt he was unable to pay, was delivered out of his distress by a song-bird.

The man was sitting early in the morning at the house door, expecting an officer to come and distrain him for a small debt; and while sitting thus, with his heavy heart, a little bird flew through the street, flattering up and down, as if in distress, until, at length, quick as an arrow, it flew over the man's head into his cottage, and perched itself within an empty cupboard.

The man closed the door, caught the bird, placed it in a cage, where it immediately began to sing very sweetly.

Suddenly some one knocked at the door.

"Ah, it is the officer," thought the man.

But [illegible] want of a response [illegible] that the neighbors [illegible] his house, [illegible] ght [illegible] rd [illegible] h [illegible] Adam he [illegible] came, he said, [illegible] joy; now leave in peace, [illegible] sent it me."

The Young [illegible] the Savior's Hand.

Let me ask you, poor backslider, did you ever feel the touch of Jesus' hand? If so, you will know it again, for there is love in it. There is a story told in connection with our war of a mother who received a dispatch that her boy was mortally wounded. She immediately went down to the front, for she knew that the soldiers told off to watch the sick and wounded could not watch her boy as she could. So she went to the doctor, and said:

"Would you let me take care of my boy?"

The doctor said:

"He has just gone to sleep, and if you go to him the surprise will be so great it may be dangerous to him. He is in a very critical state. I will break the news to him gradually."

"But," said the mother, "he may never wake up, I should so dearly like to see him."

Oh how she longed to see him. Finally the doctor said:

"Well, you can see him, but if you wake him up and he dies, it will be your own fault."

"I will not wake him up," she said, "if I may only go by his dying cot and see him."

She went to the side of the cot. Her eyes had longed to see him, and as she gazed upon him she could not keep her hand off that pallid forehead, and she laid it gently there. There was love and sympathy in her touch, and the moment the slumbering boy felt it he said: "O mother, have you come?"

He knew there was sympathy and affection in the touch of that hand. And if you, O sinner, will but let Jesus reach out his hand, and touch your heart, you too will find there is sympathy and love in the Savior's touch.

Let Your Light Shine.

It is not enough that we have the light of God in our hearts, and hold it in our hands, and take it where it may shine. We must so let our light shine that others will see it. A missionary, the Rev. Mr. Compton, was on his way to India. One evening, about nine o'clock, he was in his state-room. The great steamer was ploughing its way through the sea. Not feeling very well, he was about going to bed, when he heard the cry; "A man overboard." His first thought was to run upon deck and try to help rescue him. But then he thought he might be in the way, and so could the sailors would do all they could to save the poor man. But couldn't he do something? He could at least try. So he took his little lamp, and held it close to the little window, which, on account of its appearance, is called "the bull's eye." Soon he heard the joyful word, "saved."

The next morning he learned that his little light, shining through the little window, was the means of saving the man. It came at the right time, and was in the right place. It showed the sailors just where to throw the rope, and enabled the perishing man to see the rope as it came near him. All the efforts of the sailors would have been useless, and all the attempts of the drowning man would have been of no avail, if it had not been for the light. O, have you the light which you can hold up at some window, and which may save some soul from perishing in his sins?—Dr. Strykker.

DIED.

MESSIMORE.—At his home in Scott Township, Kosciusko County, Ind., November 26, 1886, Joseph Messimore, aged 68 years, 10 months and 8 days.

An aged wife, four sons and two daughters are left to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father. The funeral discourse was preached by the writer at Stony Point Chapel to a large and seriously attentive audience, on the closing verses of the fourth chapter of 1 Thess. Sadly we laid him "to rest" in the cemetery near by to await the dawn of that bright day when death shall be swallowed up in victory, when the mortal puts on immortality.

IN MEMORIAM.

Brother Messimore was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, of parents of German descent. In his 23rd year he united with the Disciple Church worshiping at the Plain meeting house in the county where he was born. In 1860, with his wife and six children, [illegible] Indiana, settling near the house where [illegible] since he moved in [illegible] than a year after coming to the State. That part of our county was then very new, so that he shared with the early settlers the laborious work of clearing away the dense forest and of founding new homes in the wilderness. He taught several terms of district school and occasionally gave instruction in vocal music. He first heard the peculiar views which weaks Christian body hold, as early as '54, for at the date of my first acquaintance with him in August, 1855, at Pine Creek, Elkhart Co., he cherished our blessed hope, having learned it, in part, as he several times afterward told me, from the lips of the deceased, venerable and prayerful minister of the gospel, Henry Logan. To some extent Brother M. engaged in the public proclamation of the truths he held. His life labor is finished, a crown awaits him. The pioneers of the faith in this part of the State are sadly leaving our ranks. With a sad heart I call to mind the names of many endeared to my Christian experience, those we miss most painfully, brought to us the most helpful.

JOHN L. WINCE.

MELFIELD, O., Nov. 29, 1886.

Editor Restitution:

My dear, much afflicted wife and companion now sleeps in Jesus. She peacefully and quietly passed away last evening at 6 o'clock, in the evening of life (80th year), on the evening of the resurrection day. When the last family reading lesson, in regular course, was: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive (and) remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (go before) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive (and) remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall they ever be with the Lord." 1 Thes. 13-17.

Mrs. Westbeo had been a professor of religion, and always an active member, for 55 years; first a member of the First Baptist Church in Philadelphia, then, with me, a member of the C. Presbyterian Church, but, since 1842, a believer in the near coming and personal reign of Christ. Her faith was always attended by works, even beyond her physical strength. She has been an able friend of THE RESTITUTION, giving the products of her own hard labor.

Her whole soul has been devoted to the Jews, and she has given whenever she had opportunity, to their support and evangelization. She sent Mrs. Davis $5.00 and got four cards of Jerusalem flowers. To her industry, economy, and her continued solicitude-ing later, I shall owe the publication of the "Coming Age" and "The Eastern Question in its Various Phases." She has taken a deep and lively interest in all my studies, and made herself very familiar with the Scriptures.

But her earthly labors, first under severe infirmities, are closed, and she sleeps awaiting the voice of Jesus, and the glorious resurrection. I am left in this hour of Christian sorrow, an interest in the prayers of God's people, that I may be sustained in relative usefulness. Yours in affliction,

J. P. WESTBEE.

I have never had a paper that was so dear to me as the beloved RESTITUTION. It has been to me a schoolmaster; shedding such light upon the sacred truths of God's Blessed word, as to scatter those sectarian teachings of modern theology, including Platonic Philosophy. And now dear friends, with you, I and my dear wife are looking for the blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ, hoping by his atoning merits to obtain an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom. Yours in the faith.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find a $3.00 order, for which please continue our much loved paper to myself six months and J. R. Ham twelve months from October, 1886. He likes it very much, and only regrets not being able to renew when his subscription expired. In my last RESTITUTION, Nov. 10th, I was much interested in "Mex Pen Notes," from Brother C. C., "The Second Advent," from R. K. Strang, "Giving," by C. P. Barber, and "Green," by Sister S. Roxana Wince.

The subject of giving came up once in a conference meeting in Arkansas, where I was present, and one young man called upon all present to witness his vow to God that from that time forward he intended to give the Lord one tenth of his income. At the time I rather opposed his course, thinking that nine-tenths was too much for self. I thought we ought to give all to the Lord and ourselves for his stewards. But now I understand somewhat differently. We are to be his stewards for nine-tenths of all that he enables us to make, as I give him one-tenth also for the special purpose of spreading the truths of the gospel in every way possible.

Whether the young man has kept his vow or no, I know not, neither do I know where he is, but hope the Lord will bless him in his good resolutions, and that he and I may be found at last among those whom Sister S. Roxana Wince styles "Green."

Friends, I fear that some of us are giving more to perpetuate evil, filthy and injurious habits, that were contracted, perhaps, in our ignorance, in one year, than we are giving to the Lord in five years. "These things," if so, "ought not so to be." We should "be wise concerning that which is good, but simple concerning that which is evil."

I remember hearing Brother Colegrove preach one sermon in Arkansas, subject, "But covet earnestly the best gifts;" 1 Cor. xii 31 and to this day it makes his prose more interesting to me. Having seen the man, so methinks when we see the Lord, those precious things which have not entered into our hearts" will then be made manifest and enjoyed.

Editor Restitution:

It cheers our heart to leap with joy to read the letters in our esteemed paper from the brethren and sisters living in different parts of the country. It makes us feel as though we would know them if we should meet them face to face. It causes a secret longing to meet these dear ones and converse together of our trials, and best of all our desire for the coming of the Just One and our final gathering together unto him. While we are denied this privilege we content ourselves with the blessed thought that we shall meet in the sweet by and by. This meeting depends altogether upon the manner in which we conduct ourselves in this life. We should learn to take all our troubles to him who was tempted in all points as we are tempted, who suffered and died the ignominious death of the cross; he, who a just man, paid the penalty of the unjust, and now we behold him sitting at the right hand of the majesty on high, as a mediator, ready and willing to aid us in the day of trial, if we only ask him in faith. The honors bestowed on Christ for overcoming the world are ours if we overcome as he did. Let us make every day a day of prayer and thanksgiving, and as often as possible visit and comfort one another with kind words. A few of us here are still striving for a crown. We meet once a week for prayer and exhortation. The brethren take turn about leading these meetings, and they are becoming a source of comfort and profit to us all. The worldly people are inviting us to visit their homes for prayer. We feel assured that our efforts are being blessed, and we give the praise to the Father of lights. May the blessing of God rest on all the faithful ones is my prayer. Amen.

LONDON, December 6.—Count von Moltke's speech in the Reichstag has made a deep impression in Europe, overshadowing all other topics.

The Vienna Allgemeine says that Von Moltke drew a picture so dark that the idea of war is almost a deliverance, that peace between France and Germany is now almost impossible, and that a terrible gulf yawns in Central Europe.

"LOVING CHRIST'S APPEARING."

"And let us not be weary in well doing." Gal. vi. 9.

I am weary, lonely waiting
For that bright celestial band,
Who are coming with the savior
To the promised, goodly land.
Ref.: Isa. lxiv. 4; Jude 14; Gen. xlv. 14, 15; Col. iii. 16, 17, 23.

When we see Him face to face,
And partake his direct enjoyment,
Mingled with his saving grace.
Ref.: Luke xx. 35; 1 John iii. 2; Psa. cxliii. 8-9; Rev. ii. 22; v. 9, 10.

Are you ready, will you meet me
On that pleasant, lonely shore,
Where the saved will join in singing
And parting crosses no more?
Ref.: Luke xx. 35; Gen. xv. 15; Rev. xiv. 3, 4; 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.

Have you drawn near the Savior
In obedient way,
Do you keep his commandments,
And love him, as you may?
Ref.: James i. 22; 1 John ii. 3; Rev. x. 22; John xiii 34; xiv. 21; 1 Thess. iv. 9.

Are your lamps trimmed and burning
Which will [illegible] with calm peace?
Words you like to hear of the Savior,
Is it beloved his lovely face?

LIFE FROM CHRIST.

"Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life—Inherit eternal life?"—Matt. xix. 16; Mark x. 17. Eternal Life is unwilling to men.

Here, for the first time in the history of Redemption, a man comes forward asking for eternal life. The request is unique, the inquirer's manner is affecting, but the novelty of his language seldom commands attention. We pass over the words "eternal life" where they first start up to view, as dreamily as when they meet us in a modern hymn or sermon. Have we not been reading about this very thing from Genesis to Malachi? and resumed it as an old theme with the first chapters of the New Testament? No; it is a simple fact that the name and nature of eternal life do not occur in the sacred Scriptures till we reach this place.

True, a life different from that we receive by nature is spoken of before; this eternal life, even, is dimly intimated in a very few prophecies; and Daniel predicted an "everlasting life" for the righteous dead at the resurrection; but here a new attainment for living men starts into view, under a definite and original name, an unbroken, age-long, immortal life. Surely the place, time, and circumstances of our introduction to such a doctrine are worthy of some special mark!

The full meaning of the phrase is to be gathered from St. John's Gospel, where the sense of it is wrought conspicuously and plentifully into the texture of our Lord's discussions and preaching in Jerusalem. We gather from the incident here recorded that men were waking up, under the preaching of Christ, to a new danger. They were becoming conscious of a pressing necessity, a blank and mournful destitution. They had been dreaming that life, a deathless life, was secure to them, either as children of Abraham, inheriting under his covenant, or as disciples of Moses, walking according to his law. But, lo, this great "master" of all thought and language, this mighty healer of all diseases, this conqueror of demons and death tells them with warning and commanding voice that eternal life can only be obtained from him, by believing in him, coming to him, and following him.

That this preaching had created a powerful sensation among the people is clear from the question it drew from the lips of two different and remarkable men. A young "ruler" and a "lawyer" made the same appeal to him; and their manner of doing it proves that his preaching of the doctrine had seized upon them by the intellect and startled them in the consciences. The rich young ruler came to him in an agony of concern about his personal attainment of the blessing; while the "lawyer," strong in the conceit of his learning and morality, met him with a battering challenge. The two men illustrate two phases of the same question as it stirred the Jewish mind of that day: and the comprehensive, conclusive, and convincing answers they received are standing lessons in first principles upon the subject meant for all time.

The self-confident "lawyer" may have come hot and eager from the discussion of the topic with his partizans to break a lance with the new Teacher himself. It is certain that he threw himself before our Lord in an argumentative mood: no uncommon attitude for the leaders of opinion in that day to take with him. "Behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" What shall I, a qualified expounder and worthy professor of the whole law, what shall I do to inherit this eternal life of which you speak? The Savior answered the boastful tone of the question no less than its discussional by drift throwing him back upon himself and his professional occupation. 'Thou knowest the law?' do thou? 'Yes, somewhat; being a lawyer, that may be assumed.' "What is written in the law, then? How readest thou?" By his reply this disciple of Moses showed that he understood the law well, in its spirit and comprehension and not merely in some of its details. He summed up all moral duty in the words of the great legislator: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "Thou hast answered right," said the Savior, and added, "this do and thou shalt live;" not "shalt inherit eternal life" be it remarked. The verbal difference is of sufficient importance to be strongly noted in exposition, although the phrase in itself may signify no more than a variation upon the same substantial thought. "This DO and thou shalt live."

The lawyer instantly found himself entangled in the net of his own spreading. He sees it at a glance that he has made a very broad admission. He has acknowledged it to be a duty to love his neighbor as himself, and, as by a lightning flash through his conscience, it is revealed to him that he has never done so. Toward Jesus, before whom he stood up with his tempting question, and his illiterate disciples, he knows full well that he has no goodwill, no neighborly love. The tone, look, and manner of Jesus probably rebuked him for that self-evident and grave dereliction. For he felt accused. Hence, "willing, or rather wishing, to justify himself" against the implied condemnation of the Savior's word, he asked, "but who is my neighbor?" hoping and intending to narrow down that word to his own sect and party. Then with great power, by the parable of the good Samaritan, Christ showed him that neighborly love overleaps all party distinction and national prejudice, and befriends the man in need whoever he may be. The lawyer felt bound, in conscience and by the rules of common sense, to accept this definition of the word. Then came the coup de grace "Go and DO thou likewise."

Clearly this self-assured interrogator was in a bad case in relation to eternal life. He was seeking to "inherit" by works a blessing which could be obtained only by faith. He felt confident that in the Scriptures and by the law of Moses he had already acquired it; but, behold, at a touch his foundation vanishes. He was not willing to come to Christ that he might have eternal life as his free gift. Hence, he is destitute both of its possession and prospect.

Let us turn to the other form of this same appeal. A rich young man, called a ruler by St. Luke, presented himself before Jesus with the same words but in a totally different spirit. St. Luke graphically describes his manner. "There came one running to him, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" According to St. Matthew it is, "What good thing shall I do?" Moral goodness, in the way of "doing," even to perfection of degree, was in the youth's mind, as the condition or price of eternal life. This should be carefully noted, because it evidently shaped our Lord's method of dealing with him. He was a sincere inquirer. There was the radiance of moral beauty about him. For Jesus, "beholding" his manner and reading his heart, "loved him," loved him with a yearning sympathy when he gave him the final instruction.

It will amply reward our close attention if we look at all the points of question and response between this anxious inquirer and the Lord Jesus. The youth was in error, under the common and widespread delusions of his day, a day we it remembered, like most earthly days, when men loved darkness rather than light. The Savior, as in duty bound, struck the sharp axe of truth into the root of the error. He would explode and disperse the delusions in which he trusted, that his intellect and heart might be opened to the doctrine and the power of eternal life.

The first bulwark of error attacked is the general notion of moral goodness in the creature, such goodness and so perfect as to entitle its possessor to eternal life; a fundamental error prevalent today no less than at the period of this question. Vast numbers of highly-intelligent people think that the modicum of moral goodness which qualifies a man for life and society on earth is a sufficient claim, if not adequate preparation, for the everlasting life in heaven. If a man walks with general uprightness and passable benevolence among his fellow fallen men he is too readily adjudged worthy, or qualified, to live for ever in the unveiled presence of God. A strange delusion! bringing the holy heaven down to the moral level of this [illegible] and sin-loving world. This is the [illegible] error Christ here assails.

Comparatively few men in our day can challenge a closer inspection under the moral law than this youth willingly accepted; and up to the mark of his own profession Jesus discovered and exposed no flaw. Did he not thereby allow that he was living up to his light? Surveying his truthful, honest face, and his inquiring, candid spirit, "He loved him," loved him after receiving his confession upon all the commandments of the second table:—"Thou shalt do no murder; Thou shalt not commit adultery; Thou shalt not steal; Thou shalt not bear false witness; Honor thy father and thy mother; and (summarily), Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." To interrogations on these moral duties the young man replied, "Master, all these things have I observed from my youth." Jesus accepted his confession cordially, and, beholding his simple, sincere, honest manner, "loved him." Few men in our day, I think, would stand such an examination before the Lord with higher commendation. Was he not, as far as he understood it, living up to his duty? And are not many persons asking today, whether more can be expected of any man? Yes, not unreasonably, more must be expected of every man. Because the measure of duty is not the measure of our perception of it. Our duty, beyond the light of the present hour, is to be asking, "What lack I yet?" seeking more light, a better knowledge and understanding of all duty. By such quest and endeavor an earnest man comes to know that God's commandments are "exceeding broad." He finds that duty is an ever-expanding circle. His daily doings and endeavors never fill its circumference. When he has done his best it remains a fact that he is an "unprofitable servant." Moral goodness as a basis or claim for eternal life is a delusion.

The Savior told this young ruler that there was nowhere to be found such goodness as he was thinking of but in God. None is good, in the perfect and absolute degree, but God. MSS. so vary upon the text here that it is difficult to decide upon the precise words the Savior used; but it is evident he checked him for applying the term "good" to himself. This interesting inquirer had not come to him as God, nor even as the Son of God, but simply as a "master," a "teacher." The reply he received was substantially this, "Stop you rank me with the rabbis, scribes, and lawyers of the Jewish schools and synagogues, why do you call me good? for good in the sense you mean it belongs exclusively to God." Here is no formal, nor virtual, disclaimer for himself of the divine nature or essential deity; but simply a check word applied to the young man's conception of moral capacity in human nature. The "goodness" he inquires about is not to be found in any man.

This truth most men are slow to learn. They cannot fully accept it apart from bitter experience, experience of the weakness of their own hearts, and the futility of their best endeavors. They must discover their own inherent and non-irradicable self-love, their recurring coldness and indifference to the claims, the happiness, and even bare well-being of feeble and necessitous people about them. What man on earth ever loved his neighbor as himself? We feel, at times, and for short seasons, some lively interest in a few of our fellow-creatures—in here one and there one who have been brought into contact or special relation to ourselves. But such interest seldom, while it lasts, amounts to an unfaltering and self-denying emotion. While the masses of the poor and needy; the widows and fatherless; the outcasts, fallen, and homeless; the waifs and strays, the sick, miserable, aged, and dying! how much of sympathy, of [illegible] help, and self-regarding benevolence do we bestow upon them? Let no man boast that he loves his neighbor as himself while wretchedness, sorrow, and hardship lie about him that never win his attention, and in search of whom he seldom, if ever, crosses the threshold.

This young man was strong in the conviction that he loved his neighbor as himself: yea, he [illegible] upon the accumulated credit of having done precisely that from his youth. Unless he can be convinced of his delusion and made to feel that he is utterly wrong in heart and life, he will never gain all he covets. "What lack I yet?" said he. Could true kindness withhold from him an actual revelation of his state? The Savior's love must take the practical form best adapted to enlighten him. Though the course prescribed may seem as hard to sentimental realists now as it did to the disappointed youth himself, yet there was no help for it. This lesson sent from God must deliver its message, must throw light into the world's darkness by proclaiming to us self the sole dispenser of eternal life. He was bound to concentrate the facts of truth upon this interesting and worthy young man; since it was a question of life or death for him: and not for him only, but for every succeeding inquirer who should come to him (through the Scriptures) with the same question.

"If thou wilt be perfect," said he. Not, let us note, if thou wilt obtain "eternal life." "If thou wilt be perfect:"—a different thought. Every variation of language from the lips of Jesus must be allowed its own meaning, and ought not to be passed over as a thing of rhetoric. The inquirer sought 'perfection,' absolutely as a means to an end. The Savior rightly down the condition of that perfectness which he sought. "Go, sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow Me." Do these seem hard terms for the young man? Let us remember, Jesus asked of him no more than he had accepted for himself. He was among men more destitute than the foxes and the fowls of the air. To the last degree he had "emptied" himself that he might befriend mankind. He could not help guilty men without coming down to their level, standing at their side, bearing their sorrows, accepting their stripes, pulling their curse. He did not [illegible] himself. No [illegible] his followers [illegible] depths than he went before [illegible] us. Why do we demur at this [illegible] fice, or consecration? Why did the young man hesitate? and decline the surrender with so much grief? There is but one answer. He did not and could not love his neighbor as himself. But one man in the world has ever done that duty. If to some splendid and exceptional act a person now and then will play the hero and forget his own interest and honor, it is by some isolated and rare deed, and may not be taken as an index to the staple of his whole life. It was, perhaps, the generous impulse of the moment, and not the prompting of calm and uniform benevolence, not a simple, settled regard to the wants and woes of other men. Self, we must remember, has many by-ends; yea, and many by-methods and subtle processes of compassing its own gratification.

This young man was confounded, struck dumb, by a prompt demand admitting neither of delay nor compromise. "Go, sell all that thou hast and give to the poor." Where, I may ask, in the man on earth prepared to do this. It can't be done? At least, human nature cannot do it without the renewing of the Holy Ghost; much less can human nature do it when pampered and flattered, as this youth was, by great riches. Hence, the Lord moralizing upon the typical and mournful case before him, said, "How hardly shall a rich man enter into the kingdom of God?" "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God!" A statement which drew from the astonished disciples the natural but despairing question, "Who then can be saved?" indicating a correspondence which might have gathered over all men if the Master had not replied, "With men it is impossible; but with God all things are possible." Clearly, there is no inheriting of eternal life by the way of merit, or on the ground of loving one's neighbor as one's self. In respect of that duty every man has sinned, missed the mark of God's perfect rule.

Jesus did not lay down a severe condition of present sacrifice without proposing a substitute in full recompense of it. Though of an opposite nature, it was real. "Thou shalt have treasure in heaven," better treasure than you now abandon; enduring treasure when this is all spent, treasure adapted to the eternal life you now crave. But the man lacks faith, and a spiritual taste for heavenly things. He cannot see the new treasure. It is no marketable commodity on the earthly exchange. Though a pearl of inestimable price, it has no value for him. The great promise, even from the lips of the "Good Master" before whom he was kneeling, and [illegible] weighed against his riches, is light in the balance. He cannot part with gold for the treasure in heaven! He cannot give his earthly wealth to the needy poor, even in exchange for the Father's house, the mansions, the incorruptible inheritance! No [illegible] it has, he is quite sure that he loves his neighbor as himself, and has done so from his youth!

No. We must pause a little and modify our last remark. He does not seem to be sure of it just now. An arrow of conviction has pierced his heart. God's command [illegible] have I come to him all [illegible] of. Or if [illegible] says, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," he feels that he does covet, even at this great moment, for himself, more than the wants and well-being of his neighbors. He becomes sorrowful for he was very rich. The good claim of wealth held him in a miserable captivity. Jesus would emancipate him from such thralldom, and win him into the number of his followers. Dissolve that burden of worldly goods upon the poor. They can bear it: but it is too heavy for thee. Come thou and take up the cross, the Messianic cross, with Me. Join My disciples. So shalt thou have eternal life. Thou canst never obtain it by the way of law and moral goodness. Already failure is upon thee, witnessed by the very wealth. Behold! Thou dost not love thy neighbor as thyself.

But what was impossible to him was possible to God. He sees men perishing under a burden of guilt, crushed; some of them, by their very wealth; and he sends about them the [illegible] cry, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." "God so loved [illegible] that he gave his only [illegible] whosoever believeth [illegible] perish, but [illegible] kind. He could not help guilty men without coming down to their level, standing at their side, bearing their sorrows, accepting their stripes, pulling their curse. He did not [illegible] himself. ### THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Some who teach that the church is the kingdom, insist that it was established during Christ's ministry: others say that it was established at the Pentecost. But in such statements there is something unaccountable. If the kingdom was established at either of those periods, how it is that the apostles did not know it, but still preached it as future? How is it that it was not specially made known to them, that they might make known the matter to all the disciples and all their hearers? Is it a credible thing that the kingdom should be set up, and they be kept in ignorance of a fact so important, and in which they were so much interested? And how is it, if this was the case, that it was not found out by the Christians in the first and second centuries, and a good part of the third? When this theory is not set up till the latter part of the third century, it has a very suspicious look. For ourselves we would rather follow the inspired apostles and the early Christians in this matter than Origen and his followers.

The modern view of the church being the kingdom is so wide spread and popular, so many ministers and writers, learned and pious, array themselves on the side of this theory, and opposition to those who hold the view of the primitive church is so strong, that we fear nothing will cause a general awakening on this subject till the translation of those who are looking for the appearing of Jesus Christ, and the dreadful persecution under the Antichrist.

Then, as a consequence of this error, the glorious descriptions of the kingdom in the prophets are sadly misapplied by writers and preachers. They apply them to the church; but they do not belong to the church; they do not belong to the same period as the church. They cannot be so applied, therefore, without frittering away the true meaning of the words, without doing violence to the grammatical sense. And we are not at liberty to read into Scripture language a foreign meaning. It is not our own sense that we are to put upon Scripture, but we are to take the true sense of the language as we find it in the Scriptures.

There are also some who teach that Christ is reigning now with his people in heaven. That Christ is not reigning now with his saints, or the overcomers, is very clear, for when he reigns with them he sits upon his own throne, and they share it with him; but through this dispensation he sits on the throne of his Father as our Advocate: hence if he is still on the Father's throne, his own throne cannot yet be set up.

Then others err by thinking that Christ's kingdom is simply a spiritual kingdom. It is true Christ reigns now spiritually, in the hearts of all believers; his Spirit dwells in them, controlling and guiding their desires and emotions; and when he reigns over the nations as King in the Millennial period, he will still reign spiritually in the hearts of all who obey him; he will be enthroned in their affections. But the kingdom proper, the kingdom so much spoken of will be a literal kingdom on this earth. Now, as we have shown, during the early proclamation of the kingdom, it was preached only to the Jews, and the disciples were forbidden to preach it to the Gentiles; but if this kingdom was a spiritual reign, the enthronement of Christ in the soul, such a prohibition was unreasonable.

But not only have erroneous statements been made, and false arguments been used, against the doctrine of the kingdom, some passages of Scripture have been urged against it; but we are fully persuaded that this arises mainly from the influence of early training in the belief of man-made creeds, and the consequent partial examination of the word. The truth is not discovered even when searched for, if the search is made with the mind biassed, if men look for it through a false medium. In our previous remarks we have already thrown light on a number of misunderstood passages: much that we have said will also help to the elucidation of the following; but as the following are chiefly relied upon as teaching the popular view of the kingdom, we will notice them separately.

John xviii. 36: "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence." With this passage there is no difficulty, though it is so often paraded by believers in a spiritual kingdom. Christ did not mean that his kingdom would not be in this world, but that it would not be of worldly origin. It would not be of the world. It would not originate in worldly wisdom, or be established by worldly power, nor would its laws be of a worldly nature. The kingdom will be divine, not carnal, of heaven, not of earth; of God, not of man. It will be the kingdom of heaven on earth. This is what the Savior meant, and there is not a word in the passage in favor of the common theory of a spiritual kingdom. It will not be of earthly but of heavenly derivation. "The import of the passage," as one writer observes, "is transparent. Christ's kingdom, in its origin, form, spirit, economy, nature, and object, is not in any of these respects like the kingdoms of earth, such as Cæsar's." Still the kingdom will be on the earth. Earth will be the theatre of a glorious and peaceful reign. Speaking of the redeemed, John says, "And they sing a new song, saying.....for thou wast slain, and didst purchase unto God with thy blood men of every tribe, and tongue, and people, and nation, and madest them to be unto our God a kingdom and priests; and they reign upon the earth," Rev. v. 9, 10.

THE WORD OF TRUTH. MORTAL OR IMMORTAL EMPHASIS.

"But that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob."

Paul says that, "Death passed upon all men for that all have sinned." From this multitude of dead ones Jesus has saved a "little flock" from sinning, but only by the process of a voluntary consummation of the sentence upon themselves, that they might enter into perfect fellowship with him in his work of reconciling the world unto God, thus they have been baptized into the precise relationship of the Savior to the world, that its antagonism might be perfectly shared by them, that all that is involved and included in the sentence of death might be equally participated in by them. "You shall indeed be baptized with the baptism with which I am being baptized." That is you shall share equally with me all that leads up to and consummates my death. This is called a burial into the Christ's death. A crucifixion with him, a "putting the old man to death," and consequently a consummation of the sentence in ourselves, or a conformity to his death. The result, however, to those whose faith leads them into this absolute submission, is expressed in these words: "Now if we be dead with the Christ," the union is consummated, "He that is joined to the Lord is one Spirit." Hence "We know that we shall live with him." So the apostle said to the Roman Christians, "Likewise reckon you also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." How has this been effected? hear the apostle. "But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with the Christ, (by grace are you saved): and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in the heavenlies in the Christ Jesus," Who shall persist in predicating the continuation of the death state to those, the Christ's brethren, in those who constitute the complement of his own person, the members of his body, the fulness or perfection of himself, and without whom he cannot act officially in the judgment of the dead? They "having" already "passed from death unto life shall not taste death" again.

He or she must be reckless indeed, who dare predicate death of them, who dare to claim for them the common lot of the race? They who have voluntarily anticipated the sentence in themselves. Shall the blind, the reckless legalist be permitted to put these back into the common lot of the fallen race? Never, no never.

If we are to believe James in the council of the apostles, the separation and perfection of these constitute the work of this age, hear him. He says, "Simeon hath declared unto you how God hath first visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." That is a company of sons and daughters. None other can bear the name of a father. Neither a friend or a servant can bear a father's name. Nor can they occupy the peculiar relationship which gives to the children their advantages. The child is the object of the grace of the Father. The friend and the servant is subject to the law of the Father. The judgment is for those only who are subject to law. Hence the judgment is not for the children, and that for the simple reason that "the law of the Spirit of life in the Christ Jesus hath made them free from the law of sin and death."

If it be inquired how this was effected, we may trace it from its inciptency in the testimonies of the word. In the parable of the Sower, Jesus declares "the word of the kingdom" to be "the good seed" that the Sower sowed, that human hearts constitute the soil into which it was sown. That it is the seed sown which vegetates, and not the soil into which "the word of the kingdom" was sown. Thus the good seed grows and feeds upon the soil, appropriates and assimilates it, till the mortality of the human heart is "swallowed up of life." The product is called "the children of the kingdom" and in the parable of the tares these "children of the kingdom" are called "the good seed." These constitute the promised "seed of the woman." Hence written "not unto seeds, as of many, but unto thy seed which is the Christ," not one member, but many. The body, the Christ, cannot say it has no need of any member, each and every one are required to its perfection, and to the consummation of its work. If as James said, the present dispensation shall result in separating "the seed" and perfecting them for the righteous judgment age, when the tabernacle of David shall be restored and all its ruins built up, surely it will have accomplished the most difficult task allotted to fallen humanity. To lift fallen humanity out of its depths of sin and degradation, amid all its contaminating influences to the plane of holiness, to the plane of Divinity, is the work of the gospel in this age, that in the ages to come the exceeding riches of the grace of the Father may be manifested, thus the present is but initial work, preliminary work, "till we all come in the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of the Christ."

Let us look into Paul's great argument for the resurrection of the dead. He says "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is the Christ not risen. And if the Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up the Christ; whom he raised not up if so be the dead are not raised: and if the Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; you are yet in your sins. Then they also who have fallen asleep in the Christ are perished." Thus we see that those who have been raised up from the voluntary acceptance of the Christ's death, when they rest from their labors fall asleep in the Christ. These are no longer dead ones, but saved ones sleeping in Jesus, they having "passed out of death into life" can never taste death again. Hence what can be truly predicated of dead ones, cannot be predicated of them.

G. B. STACY.

Beware of the beginnings of sin in the heart. A spark may kindle a great conflagration, and an evil thought harbored may lead to great wickedness. The oak was once an acorn, and the largest rivers grow from little beginnings. Take heed to your thoughts and words, for, whether good or evil, they are like seed which multiply and always reproduce their own kind.—Methodist Recorder.

"FOR YOURSELVES."

"Be ready to distribute, willing to communicate, laying up in store for yourselves a good foundation against the time to come."

The time to come:—What is it, and what do we want when we get there? A good foundation, something to stand on. How are we going to get that foundation? By laying up something in store, something for ourselves, that will be kept safely by our Lord and Master, until he returns from heaven.

"For yourselves," did you ever think about the expression, dear brethren and sisters?—That when you distributes of your means to relieve the necessities of the saints and to forward the cause of truth, you are but laying up something in store that is to be yours by and by; "treasures in heaven where neither moth nor rust can corrupt, and where no thief can break through and steal?

"There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

"He that hath pity on the poor, lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will he repay." It is safe to trust the Lord, to trust his promises, to believe him faithful

The world's way is "to get all we can, and keep all we get;" the Lord's way is, "to love not the world," "to set not our affections on things on the earth," but to "give," trusting that it shall be given unto us again. Good measure, heaped up and pressed down. That is the way the Lord repays. He does not give six, nor ten per cent, but a hundred fold.

We have trusted him, and have found him faithful; he has given us "new clothes for old," "dollars for cents;" bright hopes and happy hearts, for worthless dust.

Lay up, "lay up for yourselves a good foundation against the time to come." It will soon be here, your treasures be above.

Editor Restitution:

I have taken THE RESTITUTION for quite awhile. Have had them read, and had different ones read them, and also the extra numbers you sent me. I mailed them to different parts in Iowa, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, and Ohio, where I thought they might do the most good. The reading matter is so good in them, that I cannot bear the idea of one being destroyed. Sister Carrie Williams' articles in the paper are very interesting to me, and also Mrs. E. Coffman's are also full of spiritual food. Sister Roxana Wince writes good letters, and always to the point. I am confined to a wheel chair in the house, am blind and have to trust to others to do all my writing and all my reading, so you see that I am worse than dust and ashes, but, thanks be to God, he enables me to work at the head work, which I sell to visitors in the summer time. That gives me a little money to appropriate to the cause of Christ. I claim nothing on this earth, for I am bought with a price even the blood of Jesus, so all that I have and am, life and labor belongs to him. Yours in the hope of our soon coming Lord.

JAMES ALKIRE.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed I send two dollars to renew my subscription for THE RESTITUTION another year, from the first of Jan. 1887 to the first of Jan. 1888. I send this mite in time so that you can make your arrangements accordingly.

I am glad that you are spared to manage THE RESTITUTION as Editor awhile longer. May God bless you with strength and wisdom to manage it in the future as in the past, to the honor of God, and for the edification of his people. I am watching closely the movements in the East: surely they are momentous; has not the return of Israel commenced? it looks to me as though it had; for they are returning quite fast. Also other signs are thickening around us; such as riotings, earthquakes, pleasure lovers, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, covenant breakers, and so on, which we have to contend with daily if we do any business. My brethren, is not this the characteristic of these days. O, may Jesus soon come and take to himself his great power and reign, is my prayer. C. P. ALKIRE.

Youth's Column.

What is Faith?

Little Mary stood on the kitchen floor,
Gazing down at the old trap door
Into the cellar dark and damp.
She could only see a step lamp
At her papa's side: she knew he was there.
For she saw him herself go down the stair,
And now and then she could hear him speak,
Though the voice seemed far away and weak.

"Papa," she called in her baby tone,
"Are you there, dear papa? I'm all alone."
"Why, yes, little daughter, be sure I am here, Jump, and I'll catch you, do not fear."
"Papa, it is dark, I cannot see.
Where are you, papa? Do come for me."
"No, daughter, jump: I will hold you fast,
Come now,"—and Mary jumped at last.

He held her trembling in close embrace,
And pressed a kisson her baby face,
While a simple lesson the child he taught,
A lesson she never in life forgot:
"My dear, that's the way to obey the Lord,
Though you cannot see him, believe in his word;
He will say, 'Here am I,' to every call:
Trust him, he never will let you fall."

Praise the Boy.

It often costs one quite a struggle to do his simple duty; and when one does his simple duty, in spite of his temptation to do differently, he deserves credit for his doing. One has no need to live long in this world before finding out this truth. A bright little boy about two and a half years old recently showed that he apprehended it. He was on the eve of doing something that was very tempting to him.

"No, my son; you must n't do that," said his father.

The little fellow looked as if he would like to do it in spite of his father's prohibition; but he triumphed over his inclination, and answered resolutely, "All right, papa; I won't do it."

There was no issue there, and the father turned to something else. The boy waited a moment and then said in a tone of surprised inquiry, "Papa, why don't you praise me, 'That's a good boy'?"

The father took the hint and said an encouraging word. Perhaps some other father may need the same hint, and may profit by the suggestion. It is not well to keep all the kind words till our friends are dead, and then put them on the grave stones.

Principles.

As the foundation of every house that stands firmly is laid deep in the earth, far out of sight, the foundation of an upright life is generally laid in the forgotten past, during the years of childhood—in earlier childhood, perhaps, than many are willing to believe; for the wisest mother I have ever known once said in my presence, that she believed that a child's character for truthfulness and honesty was generally formed by the time it was five years old, and my own observation has confirmed her views of the subject.

Some time ago, as I walked up the street behind a handsomely dressed child, about four years old, who was led by a colored "mammy," I saw the little fellow, as he passed a fruit store, reach out his hand, and seize an apple, and with a quick motion drop it into the pocket of his overcoat.

A moment afterward, I heard the old woman soliloquize aloud, as is often the habit of her race.

"Laws a me! I do believe the child's done gone an' stole an apple," and that was all the notice taken of the offence.

I looked sorrowfully after the pretty boy, but felt no liberty to interfere. I have often thought of him since, however, and the thought has troubled me.

Do you smile and say that a child so young was not accountable? I well remember the one theft of my life, committed when I was perhaps even younger than he. Left by myself in a room, I stole one strawberry from a plate of the luscious fruit. I had been well taught, and the deed was no sooner done than the most overwhelming sense of guilt overpowered me, and it was not difficult for my watchful mother, who read the trouble in my face, to draw from me the confession of my fault. She did not dismiss it, as many another mother might have done, with a "Well, I see you are very sorry, and mother will forgive you this time," but she talked to me gravely and kindly.

"My darling," she said, "how much you blamed Eve, the other day, when I told you how she disobeyed God, who had placed her in the beautiful garden, and now your sin has been the same as hers:" and then she said that she could no longer trust me, as she had been in the habit of doing, and that it must be a long time before her confidence in me could be restored.

I can remember still the shame and mortification with which that thought filled me. You will say, perhaps, that it was cruel to thus burden a baby's conscience, but surely it was the truest kindness; never again was I tempted to appropriate or meddle with the property of another.

A bright boy, the child of a friend of mine, laughingly told in his mother's presence of what he called a good trick: "Ned Brown and I," he said, "went into Mr. B.'s grocery store, and Ned asked him to give him some samples of sugar for his grandmother. We did not tell a story about it, for he did not say that his grandmother sent him, but the man thought so, and wrapped him up several parcels, and when we came out we ate the sugar." Some mothers would have smiled at the boyish prank; others might have administered a reprimand, and told him he had been "a very naughty boy," and there the matter would have ended. This mother adopted a different course.

Gently and affectionately she explained to her little son the sin of getting goods on false pretences, and that the unauthorized use of the grandmother's name was forgery, a crime for which many a promising young man was languishing in prison.

The boy listened with a sober face. His judgment was convinced; moreover he saw that his mother was genuinely distressed that his own sense of honor and right had not withheld him from such a course of conduct. The lesson proved a salutary one, and as a boy and man he was distinguished ever afterward by his perfectly upright walk.

Dear mothers, watch your babies. When your little tisping child, unable to distinguish right from wrong, makes a false statement, never let it pass unnoticed. Say, "No darling, it did not happen in that way. This was what happened. Try and remember."

Of many a man upon whom the shadow of disgrace has fallen, it may be said:

"The want of his life,
Was the great want, in fact, of a principle,
Rather than power to act upon principle."

Remember, as I said above, if the superstructure is to stand firm, the foundation must be carefully laid, and never forget that they are laid in your nurseries, and you are building upon them now.—Parish Visitor.

Selections.

The Jews and Science.

The height of Hebrew scientific glory was in the tenth century, under the Moors in Spain. Twelve thousand pupils attended the Jewish schools in Toledo. No European Academy could then compete with them, particularly in mathematics and astronomy; and they formulated the celebrated "Alphonsine Tables," established by Alphonso the Tenth, king of Castile. By the works which they published, it appears that allusion is made to the system of Newton on the attraction of celestial bodies; and Aben Ezra is allowed to be the inventor of the method of dividing the celestial sphere equatorially. The glory of the Spanish schools redounded to the Israelites of Portugal and Italy. "To the Jews," says an historian, "we owe our first knowledge of philosophy, botany, medicine, astronomy and cosmography; also the elements of sacred languages." Germany and France did not remain inactive in the promotion of science. In France especially, the Jewish schools of Beziers, Narbonne, Lunel, and Montpellier acquired a high reputation.

But it was not only to the study of law and the progress of literature that they applied themselves; they also zealously cultivated a knowledge of medicine, and for several centuries they were the repositories of that science. Despite the opposition of the Councils, they supplied physicians to nearly all the kings of Europe, and to several Popes, and, amidst the most violent persecution directed against the Hebrew nation, the public physicians, paid by numerous cities, were of the Jewish faith. At the revival of letters, the Israelites showed that the ancestral fire yet existed among them. Their physicians, philosophers, and learned men held distinguished rank among the celebrated names of scientific Europe. Germany is noted for the number of literary men—poets, musicians, and physicians—who are Israelites by birth. The efficiency of asses' milk in relieving consumption and diseases of the lungs was discovered by a Jew. A Jew of Rotterdam introduced vaccination into Holland; and a Jew, named Pereire originated and proved to the Academy of Paris that there existed means to make the dumb speak. At the present day, when liberty reigns in the domain of science, and when the merit of almost every work is investigated, rather than the question from whom it emanates, the Israelites of all countries furnish their proportion to the scientific, artistic and literary world.—Jewish Messenger.

Knowledge and Humility.

True knowledge depends upon two special helps to the acquisition. These are intelligence and humility. Without humility knowledge is often no more than conceit. Humility teaches us reverence for knowledge; she shows us that knowledge is for service, not for display. She animates our sincere desire for truth; she drives out the sad weakness of love of things for the sake of ostentation. Without reverence there can never be any genuine advance in sound wisdom. Humility, on the other hand, will never achieve wisdom by itself. Thus are these two fine properties, intelligence and humility reciprocally indispensable.

The Jewish communities in the four Holy Cities, viz.; Jerusalem, Hebron, Safed, and Tiberias, are about to come into possession of valuable bequests, amounting in the case of the first named city to 300,000 francs, and in that of the three other places to 25,000 francs each. These gifts are legacies bequeathed by a well known Turkish Jew, Count Nissim Samama, who died at Leghorn thirteen years ago, leaving property to the value of 20 million francs. Owing to dissensions among the heirs, brothers and sisters of the testator and their children, the will was disputed, and litigation was protracted until the present year. The Italian Probate Court found for the will, the provisions of which will now be carried out. The interest of the 200 000 francs destined for Jerusalem was intended by Count Samama to be employed in the maintenance of a new Yeshiba in that city, and the 25,000 francs for each of the other three cities were to be spent in assisting students of the Law and the Talmud, and local poor Jews generally. Trustworthy persons should be appointed who will take care that no irregularities are permitted in the administration of these large sums, and that the disbursements are properly accounted for. The administrators of the Chaluka in Jerusalem, have at length been roused by the force of public opinion in Europe, and have for the first time issued a balance sheet of the receipts and outlays for which they are responsible. This is a step of very great importance, and without pronouncing at a moment on the details, we thankfully welcome the public admission thus made of the duty imposed on those who make this time-honored distribution. The persons entrusted with the employment of Count Samama's gifts should recognize the same necessity. Untold sums are lost to charity owing to well grounded fears that many charities are misapplied.—Jewish Chronicle.

Above all thing, avoid strong words and weak actions. Ever let thy words be the gentler of the two; therein is wisdom. But be temperate in both, and there will be the less contention. Loud words and rash actions do but increase the strife.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months in proportion.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the doctrine of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the literal destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion are pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life are essential to final salvation.

RENEW TODAY.

To our correspondents we say that we are working in articles of an original character as fast as we can.

THE year is now drawing toward its close. We are by so much nearer the end of our pilgrimage journey, as well as by so much nearer the glorious consummation than we were one year ago. We are nearer the end of all our labor, and nearer the termination of all our sorrows. We are nearer the jubilant hallelujahs of the redeemed. O Christians, let us be faithful to our Lord; let us be like those who have gone before us, whose end has been triumphant in view of the coming glories of the coronation restitution day—the day of re-creation and resurrection. If spared let us work more faithfully for our risen glorified Lord, that we may share in his future glory and kingdom.

As the holiday season is now only a few days distant, and as this is a time chosen by many to visit friends and relatives, to renew that happy social intercourse with those that time and distance temporarily sever, we take pleasure in saying to our subscribers and others, that the Pennsylvania Company has reduced its fare on certain days one-half on all its lines West of Pittsburgh—or to one full fare for a round trip between all places on these lines—to all who choose to avail themselves of this liberal offer. ### WILL THE DEAD ARISE FROM THE GRAVE IMMORTAL?

A Discussion in which Carrie Williams affirms they will, and the Editor denies—claiming the dead will emerge Mortal and be Judged before they receive Immortality.

"How are the dead raised? and with what manner of body do they come?"—1 Cor. xv. 35. R. V. This very important question is asked but once, in the entire range of Scripture. Paul the apostle to the Gentiles presumes that it has arisen in the minds of some of the church at Corinth, and he himself propounds the question that for their enlightenment, he may give the answer. It is a plain direct question, and Paul gives a corresponding answer when he says: "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." 1 Cor xv. 52. This answer was sufficient to satisfy those to whom Paul then wrote; and, as our years have rolled on and he amongst the saints, and his epistles among the various churches, it seemed to be sufficient for all who received the Scriptures, before their compilation, as well as since, for church history gives no record that this subject ever came to be disputed among Christians till within the last half of the nineteenth century. Since then it has been a subject of dispute—some very strenuously holding to what is termed "mortal resurrection," while others are in doubt, not knowing what to believe—and others still who take Paul at his word, that "the dead shall be raised incorruptible. It is solely with the hope of helping those who doubt, that I now write; and not for "the mastery of words," for it I sought earthly honor, my pen would be tilted on other subjects, than Bible religion.

"How are the dead raised?" Same dispute that Paul here had any reference to the dead who are in their graves. But by carefull; reading the preceding verses of this chapter, it will be seen, that it is the dead who were in their grave that are here referred to, for the whole argument is based on the fact, that Christ had been raised from the dead, and that those who are his, will at his coming be awakened out of that same death state in which he had lain. Paul could have had no reference to those who were dead in trespasses and sins; for Christ knew no sin, and he declares in verse 23 that Christ was the "first fruits, then they that are Christ's at his coming." If Christ be truly the first fruits," the harvest must of necessity come from the same field; not from another field, under altogether different circumstances; for there there could be no resemblance between the first fruit and the harvest which follows.

That Jesus Christ was raised from the dead to life immortal, in which condition he possessed the powers of an endless life is very plainly taught in the Scriptures, Rom. i. 3, 4, "concerning his Son who was born of the seed of David according to the flesh—who was declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection of the dead." His first birth introduced him into mortal life as the seed of David. His second or birth from the dead, introduced him into life immortal as the Son of God with the power of an endless life now no more to return to corruption. His ministry in the flesh, as the seed of David ended when he said on the cross: "It is finished." Then came the rest in the tomb, from which condition he was brought forth by the Father, who would not suffer his holy one to see corruption. He did not call him back to a corruptible, mortal state. There is no such thought found in the entire Word. He always was the Son of God—his only begotten Son. But the fact of his resurrection, declared, or marked him out as the Son of God with power. I ask, what power? and the Scriptures answer, "With the power of an endless life," and no more to return to corruption.

It is asserted that Christ was "begotten in the dust of sheol," but the Word will not sustain this view. There is no mention there that he was begotten a second time. When the angel visited his mother, as recorded in Luke i., is the only time. David in Psalms ii. 7, refers to this time when he says by the Spirit: "Thou art my Son this day have I begotten thee." In the preceding verse we read: "I will declare the decree." The word saphar here translated declare, signifies to recount or repeat, and the word choq rendered decree, signifies the thing marked out. The Scriptures unfold to us that the thing marked out to which the Psalmist here refers, as the decree, is the fact, that though the heathen may rage and the kings of the earth hold counsel together—his son, God's Son shall yet be established upon the holy hill of Zion. Paul in Acts xiii., in his address to the people of Antioch refers to this event in verse 33; "And we bring you good tidings of the promise made unto the fathers; how that God hath fulfilled the same to our children in that he hath raised up Jesus;" as also it is written in Psalm ii., "Thou art my Son this day have I begotten thee." By reading the following verses we see that it is not the raising him from the dead that is here referred to; but the manifesting or bringing him into the world as his only begotten Son. In verse 33 he speaks of his resurrection, not of his manifestation in the flesh.—"And as concerning that he raised him from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he hath spoken on this wise, I will give you the holy and sure mercies of David." Verse 35. Because he saith also in another Psalm, 'Thou wilt not give thine holy one to see corruption." R. V.

Paul in his discourse alludes to three separate prophecies referring to the raising up of the Christ. First, that he was raised up, or manifested in the flesh, as the Son of God; second, that he raised him from the dead that he might fulfil in him the promises made to David, which promises reached out beyond this mortal life into the the eternal ages; and third, that he raised him from the dead into that incorruptible condition—wherein these promises could be fulfilled through him before he had seen corruption.

John xx. 17, "Jesus saith unto her, touch me not—or take not hold of me—for I am not yet ascended to the Father." This text affords no proof that Jesus was at that time, in mortal life. The law forbidding to touch a dead body, could not apply here, for Jesus was then alive; and there never was a law given regarding bodies which had been raised from the dead; neither was there a law forbidding to touch immortal bodies, as we read of the angels taking hold of Lot and his family, etc., therefore we must look for other reasons why Jesus said, "Touch me not." " " Mary is here represented as alone with the risen Lord, and very much exercised by the deep sorrow she felt for his absence. She knew not what to say when she really and truly heard and recognized his voice. Jesus always knew the frailties of human nature—and I doubt not I do know that had he permitted her to take hold of him she would have been quite overcome by her feelings, and thus be unable to bear the message he wished to send by her to the disciples. In Matt. xxviii., it is recorded that the women went to the sepulchre at day dawn, and when they found that Jesus had risen they ran to bear the glad news. Jesus met them saying, All hail, and they took hold of his feet and worshiped him.

There is no Scripture evidence that there was any charge wrought upon Jesus after he rose from the dead. He was the first fruits of the resurrection to an incorruptible life. Others, many others, had been raised to mortal, corruptible life, and if he too had been raised to only such a life, he could not truly have been called the "first fruits"—while Paul's testimony is, that "Christ is the first fruits, afterward they that are his at his coming. The whole scope of Paul's reasoning with the Corinthians seems to have been, to convince them of the resurrection as an absolute necessity to a future life, when he says, "Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." His argument with them was, that it was either resurrection or eternal death. There is no ground for the assumption that Paul was contending with the Corinthians against the immortality of the soul, for he gives no intimation that they had imbibed that error. If he sought to expose that heresy he very strangely avoided giving them any Scripture evidence that man was not a dual being, but wholly of the earth, earthy—in the absence of faith in Christ.

Paul reiterates a fact well known to hundreds of living witnesses, viz: that Christ had been raised from the dead,—and on this fact already accomplished he based another fact yet in the future, viz., that those who are his, will be raised incorruptible at his coming.

D. V., in my next I will show that Paul did not attempt to illustrate the resurrection by grain raising, or any of the visible works of nature. Limited space forbids me saying more now.

EDITOR'S REPLY.

A careful perusal of the foregoing, shows it to set forth the following, viz:

1. The question is an important one.

2. Paul's answer is that "the dead shall be raised incorruptible;" and that some take him at his word.

3. Some dispute that Paul had reference to the dead in their graves, but there is no ground for such dispute.

4. That Jesus was raised from the dead immortal is plainly taught in Rom. i. 3, 4.

5. That his (Jesus') first birth introduced him into mortal life, and his second birth introduced him into life immortal.

6. There is no mention that Jesus was begotten a second time, and therefore he was not, as some assert, begotten in the dust of sheol.

7. Paul applies three prophecies to the raising up of Christ. (a) That he was raised in the flesh. (b) That he was raised from the dead; and (c) that he was raised to incorruptible nature.

8. That John xx. 17, affords no proof that Jesus was in mortal life, when he said "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended."

9. The reason why Jesus did not permit Mary to touch, or take hold of him, was because he knew she would be overcome and be unable to bear the message he wished to send to his disciples.

10. Paul was not contending against the immortality of the soul.

Upon propositions one, two, five and seven, as the writer has expressed herself, there is no issue; but she has avoided stating explicitly what she means. Propositions three and ten, are entirely foreign to the point, and why Mrs. Williams introduced them, and said so much under those headings, is hard to see. Numbers four, six, eight and nine foreshadow some of the points which are relevant, and will be dealt with.

The writer commences with the quotation found in 1 Cor. xv. 35, and then passes over, without notice, all the apostle says in fifteen verses of the chapter, and quotes verse 50 as though it were the only direct answer to the question. Is it to be supposed that all that is said in the intervening fifteen verses is foreign to the question? Rather, we think, should we look immediately following the question put, for the direct and detailed answer; and then for the summing up by a brief one which would comprehend within it all that had been set forth in the details leading up to it. This certainly is the course pursued in the chapter. As we have said, there is no issue as far as the words: "The dead shall be raised incorruptible" are concerned. I will quote that text just as freely as Mrs. W. will, but as words are but the vehicle of thought, we must see that the words of the texts carry to our minds just the thoughts the apostle intended. To do this, we must allow the terms used, to be Scripturally defined, and when the word "raised" is taken as Paul uses it (and as Mrs. W. uses it too in some cases), it will be seen that instead of being confined merely to the emergence from the grave, it embraces all the details of the previous part of the chapter; and also leaves room for the teachings of Paul, viz: that everyone will stand before the judgment seat of Christ to receive in body, according to that he hath done whether good or bad." This, we claim, is the sense in which the word "raised" is used in the verse, while Mr. W. claims it simply means the emergence from the tomb. Both take Paul at his word," but which takes the correct view of the thought he intended to convey? Leaving, for the present, the meaning attached to the word "raised" in this chapter, let us notice its common use. We say such an one raised his children [illegible] was good grain raised. He was raised to be a doctor, etc. Many such illustrations will readily occur to the mind, showing the use made of the word given as the translation of [illegible] the word Paul used. Take Mrs. Williams' use of the word in the following, viz: "Paul alludes to three prophecies referring to the raising up of Christ. First, that he was raised up, or manifested in the flesh." Here she makes the word reach from the conception of Jesus to his manifestation in the flesh. This is Scriptural also, as seen in the following: "God is able of these stones to raise (egeirai) up children." Matt. iii. 9. "Hath raised up an horn of salvation." Luke i. 69. "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." John ii. 19. Illustrations may be multiplied, but this will suffice for the present. Now let my friend accept the commonly made of the word; [illegible] use she makes of it herself; and the sense in which it is frequently used in the Scriptures—by Paul himself, and we shall not only take Paul at his word, but we shall be able to take him at what he means by the words he uses.

We have said there is an issue on proposition four. There too the word raised is used by Mrs. Williams to mean simple emergence. Taking the word according to the use before given there would be no difference in the meaning of the expression: "That Jesus was raised from the dead to life immortal." The fact is, if I were to take Mrs. Williams at her word here, the discussion would be settled, for she says (but does not mean it), that Jesus was raised from the dead to life immortal. This is just what we claim; and it is also the very position Mrs. Williams stumbles into when she says: "First, that he was raised up or manifested in the flesh, as the Son of God; second, that he raised him from the dead, that he might fulfil in him the promises made to David.... and third, that he raised him from the dead into that incorruptible condition wherein these promises could be fulfilled." The matter could not be better put than it is here in the first, second and third. But does not our worthy friend see the scope she is giving to the word raised? And does she not see that she has given three stages here? The second of which is the coming forth from the rave and the third of a being raised "now" immortal life? Let me ask you, Mrs. Williams, does your "first" precede the "second"? To which you must answer, yes. Then does not your "second" precede your "third"? Do you not therefore see that you have first, Christ born and manifested? Second, Christ emerged from the tomb, and third, Christ immortalized? Here we are in perfect agreement; let us stay here and our disputes will end.

You say: "There is not mention that he was begotten a second time." That "when the angel visited his mother is the only time." Yet you say "His first birth introduced him into mortal life," and "His second or birth from the dead, introduced him into life immortal." Here you have two births, surely. Why then do you stultify yourself by denying two begettals? If there was a second birth, must there not have been a second "begetting"? A little logic and thoroughness would be quite useful here, my friend. Before there can be a natural birth there must be begettal to life—with the being "born again" of the spirit. The worthy will be born of the spirit, and then be Christ when they are changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. This change is the birth of the spirit. So in the case of Jesus. He was first begotten of the dead, Rev. i. 5, and then born of the spirit to immortal life. I think if you re-examine Acts xiii 26 34, your doubts will forever, you no doubt that Paul here applies the words: "This day have I begotten thee" to the resurrection of Christ. Without comment I leave it for your consideration, and for our readers to peruse for themselves.

Mrs. Williams says that John xx. 17 affords no proof that Jesus was in mortal life when he said: "Touch me not for I am not yet ascended;" and that the reason why Mary was not permitted to touch, or take hold of him, was least she be overcome by her feelings. Now it seems very strange that our friend should volunteer to give a reason why he forbid Mary touching him, when the Savior gives the reason himself. Read what he says. Does he say or hint that he means, Touch me not least you be overcome by your feelings, and be unable to bear the message to my disciples? I urge Mrs. W. to show from the text or context, any such an idea. Pause and think, my friend. Is not this a pure little invention of your own? What is the reason Jesus gives? "Touch me not for,—" Why not touch you or take hold of you? Because of your feelings? No. Why then? "Because I am not yet ascended." Whatever these words mean, they contain the reason why she was not to touch or take hold of him, and it is useless to invent any other. The whole question hinges on the meaning of the words: "I am not yet ascended." They cannot mean that he was not to be touched because he had not yet ascended to heaven, for the reason he did not ascend to heaven for forty days after, and he permitted himself to be handled, before then. Whatever the reason expressed meant when it was given, it had ceased to exist as a reason for not touching him when he met Thomas eight days after, John xx. 27, which was thirty-two days before he literally ascended to heaven.

These being the facts in the case, does it not follow that he had ascended to the Father, in some sense, between the time he forbid Mary to touch him, and the time he invited Thomas to do so? In the interval, he did not ascend to heaven, but he did "ascend to the Father." Seeing he said to Mary: "Touch me not for I am not yet ascended to my Father," would it not be logical to reason that it could have been said to Thomas, "Touch me not for I am now ascended?" We speak of men ascending to power, ascending to office. Webster says under the word ascendancy: "Superior or controling influence; authority; sway; control." Now there are two natures. The one is mortal and the other immortal. The latter is superior to or higher than the former. Christ was first in the mortal, inferior—lower nature. In order to reach the immortal, superior—higher nature, he had to ascend from the one to the other. This he had not done when he met Mary after his coming forth from the tomb, but he told her to go and tell his brethren: "I ascend unto my Father and your Father; to my God and your God;" and because I am not yet ascended, "Touch me not"; but when he met Thomas, he had so ascended, for then he allowed himself to be touched and handled.

Now that our readers may thoroughly understand my position, and see that I am not entering into this controversy for no important reason, let me say, that the Scriptures clearly teach that Jesus will judge the quick and the dead at his appearing. 2 Tim. iv. 1. That the judgment is to seperate the good from the bad; and that the former will not receive the reward of immortality, until they are judged, nor the latter their punishment before they are judged. Before this discussion ends we shall show this to be abundantly set forth in God's word. This being the case, it follows that the Scriptural resurrection must have place for the judgment between the emergence from the grave and the giving of the rewards or inflicting the punishment. It is because Christadelphians believe these two doctrines, viz: resurrection and judgment, and deem them to be of vital importance, and do not believe the one conflicts with the other, that they earnestly contend that the dead will first—good and bad—be brought forth from the grave mortal, and with the living—good and bad—stand before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive in body according to that he hath done, whether good or bad.

Having noticed all that Mrs. Williams has said relevant to the question, we now invite attention to Romans viii. 11; after which we will ask Mrs. Williams to come up to us through the fifteenth of First Corinthians, and see if Paul does not give a direct answer to the question she has quoted, before he reaches the words she has given from verse 52. "But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his spirit that dwelleth in you. Here Paul declares that those he wrote to shall have their mortal bodies quickened (made alive.) Now, Mrs. Williams, have these words ever been fulfilled? If not, then are those to whom Paul wrote yet to have their mortal bodies quickened? If so, seeing their mortal bodies do exist, must they not be reorganized in order that they may be quickened. This being so, will they not have mortal bodies at the resurrection?"

I am being asked occasionally, by those who read with interest my former letter about Delaware, whether there is any malaria here. I take this means of answering all, as I have answered some by letter. Yes, we have some malaria here, but not so much of the more fatal diseases, such as pneumonia, typhoid fever, consumption, pleurisy, asthma, etc., as in the North and West. We have been here almost seven years, and have not had a touch of it. Myself and wife have enjoyed better health since we came here than before. Such is the case with many others. Malaria, when it does trouble any one, is easily controlled and cured, as a general thing. But those more fatal diseases are dreadful and difficult to cure. There is more or less malaria in most places and countries of late years. Not as much here as in some places. It has been frequently remarked, that there is an unusually large proportion of old people here. But people die here as well as in all other countries. But I rejoice to be able to say there are a few here who are looking for the time to come when this will be "a better country, that is, an heavenly, when there shall be no more curse, no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." My prayer is that it may come speedily. Yours in hope. L. C. THOMAS.

Enclosed you will find $2 50 to pay up my arrears and extend my subscription to THE RESTITUTION. I am thankful to you for your kindness in sending me the paper after the expiration of my subscription. It is a great comfort to me as I am entirely alone in the faith. Times are so dull that it seems hard to get the necessaries of life for myself and five children, and I hate to be a drawback to the paper as I felt that I was when I was behind with my subscription. I have 160 acres of good land which I am trying hard to improve. I live within ten miles of what is supposed will be the western terminus of the Chicago & Northwestern R. R., Yaquina City, Oregon. There is a railroad in operation between Yaquina City and Corvallis, and the Albany extension will soon be completed. Newport, or Yaquina Bay, is becoming quite a popular summer resort. I live between Yaquina Bay on the north and Alsea on the south. It is a rough, hilly country, but very healthy. I should like very much if some of the brethren would come out here and get homes near me. Please excuse this disjointed and illy spelled letter. I was raised in Oregon in an early day when the chances for an education were poor. I have been in Oregon since 1846, and have been twenty years a Bible student, and pray it to be the remainder of my life.—Your brother in hope of eternal life through a resurrection from the dead. H. ### The Sunday Book.

THE BIBLE is read on Sunday in all the many thousand pulpits of our land. In all the temples of Christendom is its voice lifted up week by week. The sun never sets on its glowing page. Thirty years have multiplied pulpits and Bibles at such a tremendous rate, that it seems as if all the carpenters of the land had been busy building churches and putting in pulpits. And there the book is, wherever the pulpit is; and the increasing thousands that gather to the preaching hear the Bible read first, and would not be satisfied if the preachers omitted it. The Sunday book on the first day of the week is in the hands of seven million pupils and teachers in the American Sunday schools, where the book is not only read, but memorized and studied. No other book that ever was, or will be, written can claim such honor as that.

A very wonderful volume is this Sunday book. It is the oldest book ever written and the newest. Ancient as the pyramids it is less subject to decay. It is a small book, but the volume of literature it has originated is great beyond comparison, and never so vast as at this day. There is no such literary marvel as this, and Sunday is a good day to examine it. Within the century there have been over one hundred and sixty millions of this book printed in some two hundred and fifty languages and dialects. And the printing presses were never put to their topmost speed as now to supply the demand. So does the greatness of the book grow in the estimation of the world.—Elmira Advertiser.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jay" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jay6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1886. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

IN THE TWILIGHT.

As we grow old, our yesterdays
Seem very dim and distant:
We peep as though in darkened ways
Through all that is existant.
But far off days seem bright and clear
With sunshine that long have faded,
And faces dead seem strangely near
To those that he has shaded.

As we grow old our tears are few
For friends not lately taken.
But fall as fall the summer dew
From roses lightly shaken.
When some chance tones of bygone strain,
The chords of memory sweeping,
Unlocks the flood-gates of our pain
For those who taught us weeping.

As we grow old, our smiles are rare
To those who greet us gladly:
Or, if some tenderer favor wear
The look that beamed so gayly
From eyes long closed, and we should smile
In answer to their wooing,
'Tis but the past that shines the while—
Our present is its ruin.

As we grow old, our dreams are not
Are never of the morrow:
They come with hoarded pleasures for the
Or dark with olden sorrow:
And when at eve we wake the same we say
Are not of any morrow.
But those who in years long, dead by
Passed through life [illegible]

THE PARABLE OF DIVES AND LAZARUS EXPOUNDED.

The parable of "the rich man and Lazarus" demands more space and further exposition than a hasty review can afford. But the position it has acquired in this controversy on the state of the dead until resurrection, has invested this—and two or three other texts—with a relative importance, perhaps beyond their intrinsic merits. To some this passage seems to have all the clearness and authority of a new revelation; as though Christ had lifted the veil, and told of a state of the dead, altogether different from what is given in any other portion of the Book of God. If this is the fact, we are bound to accept it. But this of course will require the clearest proof. In entering this controversy, we open up the still wider question of Biblical psychology; and the position that our honored fathers and brethren have taken up within the last forty or fifty years. While agreed on certain fundamental truths of Divine relation, viz., that death is God's revealed penalty for sin—that the finally impenitent will perish utterly in the second death, rather than suffer eternal torments in Gehenna—holding with sacred confidence that eternal life is the free gift of God, through Jesus Christ, to the believer in him, and that man has not, and never had, any natural immortality, I say, holding these and kindred truths with the full assent of conviction that they are the clear, plain revelation of the truth of God, they separate us very widely from our orthodox brethren. I sometimes think that, in a very humble degree, our position resembles that of the apostles and early Christians (would God we were equally united) when they went forth to preach the Gospel of both the grace and the glory of God, concentrated in that pregnant text of Paul, "Jesus and the resurrection." The orthodox Jews presented an unbroken phalanx of opposition, fortified by Rabbinical commentaries and traditions of the elders; as did the Pagan world, with its idolatries and stories of the gods and goddesses and its subtle and fascinating philosophies. Wherever the servants of Christ went, they were met with opposition: they had to pull down before they could build up. So with us, the traditions of the Fathers, the Platonic dogma of an immortal soul, and the love of speculation on that which is unseen and future, together with a natural conservatism for the views of the good around us (and these venerable authorities are legion), these and other things make the simple testimony of the Word of God of only diminished weight and authority. Add to this the love of religious teachers for imagery, and play of rhetoric and imagination, and the transmitted vice of Origen, a fondness for so-called spiritualizing of the Word of God, at that fancy, rather than judgment and the lexicon, fixes the meaning of God's Word; take into account also the subtle influence of Egypt, Greece, and Rome, through classic literature, for thousands of years, and the affinity of our nature for the mysterious and spiritual (which modern spiritualists so well know how to utilize), also the firm conviction among Christians that, without resurrection, their dead friends have gone to heaven, grant these, and we have the conditions for accepting with almost unquestioning faith this parable of our Lord as a faithful picture of the death-state. Who are we, the best and noblest of our number, to dare to question the faith of ages? Yet, with our Father's word before us, we dare so take our stand.

First, we ask, is this discourse of our Lord a parable? To this inquiry various replies are given, betraying the scorer they would like to give. That it is part narrative and part parable. This we cannot accept. Others again would like to make it a parable or story founded on fact—a kind of historical tale, with a little drapery to fill up and embellish it. Dean Alford expresses in his notes on this subject what many no doubt, believe. He says, "Though it is unnatural to suppose that our Lord would in such a parable for easily recast any new truth respecting the state of the dead, yet in conforming himself to the ordinary language current on these subjects, it is impossible to suppose that he, whose essence is truth, could have assumed as existing anything which does not exist," notes on Luke xvi. 22. I think we may fairly gather from this quotation three things, as believed by the Dean. first, that Christ in this discourse gave no new revelation as to the state of the dead. second, that Christ adopted in this parable, and used as his own, the ordinary language current among the people on these subjects, viz., the state of the dead; chiefly, these current ideas and language must be true in all essential details, for to assume that anything existed that did not exist (though, mark, even in a parable) would be to cast a reflection on his own character as the truth. In reply to this we first ask those who sympathize with the Dean's views to give us (outside of parable) a single parallel text as to the state of the dead. Next, if these parabolic utterances were the real views and belief of the Jewish people, where did they learn them? Certainly not from their own inspired Scriptures. And, lastly, if our blessed Lord could not in the language of parable assume what did not literally exist, then he, the master of parabolic teaching, was precluded from using parables at all. A parable is a story, a fable, a piece of fiction, in which to wrap, in some cases, an unpleasant truth. Nathan's parable, with which God sent him to David, was of this kind, see 2 Sam. xii. 1–14. Jotham's, of the trees, was symbolically true; but, tried by the rules of literal narrative, was of course false, see Judges ix. 7–21.

Most Bible students admit this discourse of our Lord to be a parable, the series commencing in the fifteenth chapter with the lost sheep, piece of money, the prodigal son, and the unjust steward. In this parable Christ asserted the principle (ver. 13), "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." Covetousness and godliness could not exist together, and these "Pharisees, who were covetous, heard all these things and they derided him."

Here, I think, we find the reason why Christ gave the following parable. These money-loving Pharisees justified themselves in the sight of men; they were in their own estimation the very examplars of the Jewish religion; their fastings, tithe-paying, and apparent sanctity were designed to justify them in the sight of men; and this love of wealth, was it not natural? say, to be wealthy, was it not a mark of Divine favor, and a proof that their righteousness had been rewarded with the blessing of God? For the Nazarene, therefore, to preach this gospel of pure mercy to prodigals, publicans and sinners of every class, and to have them among his followers, was contrary to their cherished ideas of the respectability of the Jewish religion. But to go even further than this, and condemn the hoarding-up of money, bidding them spend it with a view to the eternal state, was too much even for their sense of propriety, "and they scoffed at him." Then came those soothing words of Christ: "Ye are they that justify yourselves in the sight of men; but God knoweth your hearts: that which is exalted among men is an abomination in the sight of God," etc. There are two things upon which the ministry of Christ, in fact, the whole teaching of the Scriptures, bore very hard: first, the love and hoarding-up of wealth; second, the corrupting of the pure truth of God by traditions, or as Christ put it "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Of both these the Pharisees stood convicted; and with them there Christ deals in our parable.

First, we contend that Christ drew this parable on the lines of the traditional belief that obtained with these Pharisees. They had accepted the Pagan idea of Hades, with two separate compartments, one of light and comfort, the other of darkness and anguish; and also the pagan idea of judgment taking place at death. Now if our orthodox friends are willing to relegate all this to the armory of the parable, we can then heartily join with them in collecting the great and important truths Christ teaches in what, after all, we are ready to confess a difficult parable. But loyalty to Christ and to the authority and inspiration of the Scriptures of both Old and New Testaments forbids our entertaining the thought that the Christ of God would, in a rebuke to these money and tradition loving Pharisees, go in direct variance to the clear, plain teaching of the entire Bible. Our reasons for regarding the Platonic philosophy of the parables as mere drapery are; (1) that the dead need to be raised before they are capable of either happiness or misery; (2) that the Scriptures teach that judgment precedes the righteous sentence that the Son of man will pass upon the ungodly. Christ taught this truth, John v. 25–29, and this is in accord with all his other teachings, if we accept the pressing of a literal sense on this parable. Paul and the other apostles taught the same grand truth, see Acts xvii. 31, and the Revelation sets the final scene before us in the twentieth chapter regarding the great white throne.

Among the great truths taught in the parable are to us the following:

1. That this is a death scene; all the three persons are in the state and place of death, and the solemn truth Christ teaches is, that death sets up the entire record of human character: the saint remains a saint; the ungodly are the ungodly still. Prayers and personal relationships can effect no amelioration either for themselves or others. The very first stroke of Christ's pencil in this picture reverses the hopes of the Pharisees; the rich man is found in anguish, and the poor man is blessed.

2. In our next point we feel we must accept one of two hypotheses: either resurrection is anticipated, and life and physical organs restored to the dead; or, what to us is most probable, the license of the parable is claimed by Christ, and the dead are assumed to live and converse with each other. Let us then listen to this instructive conversation. First, we have the rich man's prayer, addressed, not to God, but to Abraham, the patriarch and the father of the Israelitish nation. Dives claims his Abrahamic descent by calling him "father," which is acknowledged by his being addressed as "son" or "child." This prayer is one for mercy, on account of physical suffering: "Send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, to cool my tongue; for I am in anguish in this flame." Why is this? No special crime is recorded against Dives. It is no sin to be rich, nor is there any virtue in being poor. But wealth has its duties and responsibilities. If it is used to nurture pride and self-dependence, and made to minister to the lusts of the flesh, then it may well bring the Divinely pronounced woe; and Christ here shows the position into which unsanctified riches bring their possessor. Dives seems still to retain his position of superiority: "Send Lazarus," etc. But the refusal implies that the relationships of life terminate at death: "In the grave the servant is free from his master." The rich man's wealth has been left behind, and the fastidious fullness it gave him; moral qualities are what live after death. Christ uses Abraham's reply to set forth some very solemn and important truths. The first refers to the providential dealings of God with these two persons, and of course with myriads of others. Perhaps the love for wealth in these days, and the success of so many speculators, has to many made the doctrine of God's providence all but obsolete; yet it is still in the Book, and our God is Sovereign in every department of his vast empire. Now to Dives God had given, and there had been no miscarriage: he had received his good things; likewise Lazarus his evil things. To the casual observer there appears a strange scramble for the good things of this life, and the world accounts those happy who succeed. But there is a wonderful system of equalization that God is carrying out, of counterbalancing one lot with another. Wealth has its advantages, but also its mighty drawbacks and powerful temptations. Yet it has power for good and for blessing, both to the owner and to multitudes of others. Abraham was rich, but he was the friend of God, a devoted saint. He believed God, and endured as seeing him who is invisible. But Dives seems to have been like the rich fool in another parable: he lived and died to himself; he was not rich toward God. So with the adverse or evil things that, as in the case of Lazarus, are the lot of the vast mass of mankind. These have their advantages, drawbacks, and peculiar temptations. But poverty's lowly vale may become a safe road to eternal life and the Kingdom of Heaven, as in the case of Lazarus and myriads of others. "Son, remember," strikes a solemn note. The mysteries of Divine Providence may be perplexing in this present imperfect state; the good and evil things are often as complicated as the wheel within a wheel of Ezekiel's vision. But, in the grand revision, both saints and sinners shall acknowledge the awful rectitude of the Supreme Ruler, and the eternal fitness of all his arrangements.

We hasten now to gather up the last grand truth taught in our parable, viz., the supreme sufficiency of the sacred Scriptures, both to warn the ungodly and to teach God's plan of mercy to our lost and guilty race. Men may indulge in theories, and philosophize about the state of the dead and final destiny of mankind, and even long for visions, dreams, or even wish for an apparition to banish their doubts and destroy their scepticism; but depend upon this, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." This kind of evidence was not likely to weigh with those self-satisfied Pharisees who sought to put to death again the Lazarus of Bethany, whom Christ had raised from the dead. This great lesson was worthy of him who told both them and us, "The word that I have spoken unto you, the same shall judge you at the last day." We close our remarks by saying that this parable is dead against the fashionable doctrine of "the larger hope." No evangelizing of the dead, whatever Hades may be as matter of fact. Both saints and sinners are so conditioned and environed that, until resurrection, they must so abide.—Thomas Viney in Rainbow.

MICA PEN-NOTES.

What is truth? and what is present truth, practical, precious, present truth, good, clear, sweet, guiding, guarding, heavenly truth? The sweetest truth I ever knew or ever heard, is this, "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." That truth is a key of truths, a king of truths. I have heard it said, we must not pluralize the word truth, but as separate threads compose and complete a strong cord, so truths compose truth, and all truths go to certify and complete proof of the everlasting truth, that God dearly loves all the world of rational creatures, and Christ is the head of humanity.

But see what a labyrinth and wilderness of opinion [illegible] world! There is no end to voices. I am sometimes half afraid to speak in such a maze, and think there is peace and comfort and safety in silence, and that silence may be better than speech, amid all these exclamation of teachings, doctrines, dogmas and every species of obtruded or articulate phase and phrase of faith and affirmation.

Silence is grand, while at the same time it is true, the right thing-to-said at the right time, are also good and grand. However we think or speak, this is true and towering and blessed, God is love: God loves; God is good; God seeks, intends and determines good; God is light and light is sweet and effusive and diffusive, and light must conquer its opposite. Many such things there are, most uplifting to ponder, most precious to understand, most blessed to appropriate.

What a melancholy and regrettable pall of shadow over the world this very day! And I am glad in the heart of the imperial and Omnipotent Father there is an endless heaven of the sunshine of loving intention and determination, endless, boundless, cloudless heaven! Let us interrogate the destroying potencies of nature. Let us speak to the sea and say, O seat rash, unutterable, tumultuous! What millions lost than entombed in thy dreadful immensity! What athletic men, what tenderly nurtured woman, what helpless, innocent children, has thy insatiate rage devoured! O, dreadful, restless, greedy sea, art thou still unsatisfied? When shall thy hunger be appeased, and thy remorseless force be mastered? Let us speak to the lightning and say, O, shaimless spirit of the storm cloud, rousting and volleying, hast thou not slain thy many ten thousands, and is not thy javelin content with the breath it has stifled, and the life it has extinguished?

And O, winds! art thou not weary of thy havoc and rioting? And earthquake, that with thy fare hast confounded expectation, and with thy distended jaws has taken an uncounted and despairing prey into thy dread abyss, hast thou not yet wearied of thy work? And first in thy polyglott fury yet unsatisfied, that with some new frenzy of supereous rapacity riot, never sparing or forbearing, out of any pity in thy front billows that in their wrath are ever hurrying to devour? And famine, art thou insatiable, that following pestilence, and poverty, and when will thou cease to enlarge thy desire as hell? And funeral bells, are ye not sad and grieved and ashamed? And O, earth, is not thy bosom tired of being thus into myriad cells for the dead? Is there not a cessation of unrest that thou hidest within thy stony breast the unreckonable host once alive now lifeless, once vocal now speechless, once active now motionless, once erect now prone in darkness, once knowing and known, now mutely unknown and forgotten? Thanks for the grand day, the abrupt and irrevocable address. "O death, I will be thy plagues. O grave, I will be thy destruction!" When death itself is precipitated into an abyss prepared, there will be one grand funeral anthem, not a dirge, celebrating the death of death. In these thoughts, in these hopes, in this future, in this goodness of God that flames forward in one great universal glow and glory of restitution, my mournful mind is rested and refreshed, my heart feels a blessed ease of its long and unrelished burden. I think that of all eyes, one eye is purest and best of all, that sees in all the affliction and uproar, one undeniable thing. God is good; means, purposes and infallibly determines good, and as good is determined, so shall it come to pass. Let my eye, without obstructing speck, or erring obliquity, behold the recuperative, restitutive aim and power of the Most High and Great; behold the love, bright and immutable as the one star in the polar heaven, pointed at, and revolved around by other tributary or coronary stars. The love of God, center of all celestial constellations, around which revolve all the nebulæ of lesser lights of doctrine or revelation. To this center all things else are tributary.

I have been thinking a thought, and I will speak it. Is it not reasonable to believe, that the joy of God in the consummation of redemption will be as great as all the aggregate of delight of all the thronging myriads that are saved? I see no reason to doubt it. His heart will feel the exquisit happiness of completed conquest of evil, beyond all the experience of finite creatures. The children will rejoice in God, even more than in their own deliverance. The deliverance indeed will be pre-eminent in its preciousness, because in the love and knowledge and presence of him who loves them so wonderfully, they find the very essence of most rare and refined delight. I am thinking another thought.

A blessing it will be for every one to remember, that God so truly cares for him, as if he were the only living, breathing and thinking creature on earth. It is uplifting and curative to realize God's personal and never-failing love. Let us have done with wavering of mind. But, if we think God's love wavers, then to us the whole universe of light and blessing wavers. There is no foundation that does not tremble. But to consider that God loves once and forever, is to put a strong hand of peace and unity around all things, it is to give trembling to the winds to be dissipated, and to vanish away. It is this faith in God that is the mother of growth in goodness. I am weary of appeals to cowardly fear. Let those do it who can do no better. Goodness and not damnation, is the birth ground of regeneration. Think of the hallowing to psalm-concerts, with pulpit sketches, and vivid pictorial dashes, of clouds rolling and aflame with the red glare of an utterable and bottomless yawning deep. Think of the troops of people really moved to escape the intolerable heat of the flame that roars underneath them, rather than moved by the sober need of a better nature, and a better life, and of the God that gives both. With sin regretted, let faith rise to God. But it is absolutely needful to see that the God we desire and invoke is the essential good, and that in him is no evil, cruelty or hate, but love universal and eternal, love unreasoningly and persistent, as well as pitiful and tender; that even its harshness (for one moment, as compared with eternity) is as the roughness of the mother tongue that vigorously licks the hour-old calf to life and strength. Though the trembling thing tumbles to the ground with the force of the faithfulness, it raises again, a new creature.

I would like to tell you of Eastern Massachusetts, of people and places I have seen, of the poet Whittier, of the deeds and sufferings, the evil and the good of the people of two hundred years ago, and the kindness and hope in the hearts of men and women now living, that I know, but how can one write a half that he sees and thinks?

The Honors of Relationship.

The official dignities that were enjoyed under the ordering of "the old covenant"—the kingdom of Israel and the temple worship,—were designed to pre-figure, foreshadow and exemplify that which is to be realized under the New Covenant, in the kingdom of "the age (world) to come."

1. "Moses, the man of God," was king in Jeshurun, the mediator of that covenant. He was called up into the mount with God to receive his orders and endowment for the service assigned him,—all familiar to believers.

Note. Aaron, his own brother, became his spokesman and then high priest, with all its distinctions in the blessed service of the sanctuary. Furthermore, his tribal brethren of Levi were substituted for the honors of the first born from all the other tribes.

True this was "in or after the flesh;" but it was "the high calling—the honor that then came only from God!"

2. But Christ, the Son of God, having come, "the Mediator of the New Covenant, the Prince of the kings of the earth," in the order of the ages, we reach the revelation of "the high calling of God" that pertains to the honors that are coming to the official dignities that belong under "the new, everlasting covenant, in the kingdom to come."

Note. They are made to belong to the relation that "the called, the chosen and the faithful" sustain to "Jesus, the one begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Amen.

Peter and Paul on "the right and left hand." (D. V.), the twelve apostles on twelve thrones, judging (ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel, Matt. xix. 28, and believers associated "priests and kings—princes in all the earth." Psa. xlv. 16.

"God's ways are equal" consistent in all ages. Jesus' name is above every name. All the promises are in him, yea and amen, and aside from him there is no future inheritance or honor.

3. As it was with Moses and the Old Covenant in Canaan, how much more will this order apply to the New Covenant by our Lord, as to the great Sabbath that remaineth to the people of God. Heb. iv. 1–9. "One over ten cities, one over five cities," according to zeal, capacity and their improvement. Luke xix. 15–19; Matt. xxv. 30; 1 Cor. iii. 12–15.

Moses, the faithful servant, was directed to share the sympathy of his brother Aaron, and the fellow feeling of his tribal associates in the sanctuary service. He needed it all.

So Jesus will share the government with his twelve apostles on their twelve thrones, and those who believe, obey and confess him before men are to be constituted his "fellows, the sons of God, immortalized, and joint heirs in the restitution of all things spoken," in the paradisaic world to come, the New Jerusalem, its metropolitan city, for the unfolding "age of ages," without end.

4. The wisdom and love divine shine out in all this. We see economy here as in all his ways. The capacities of man to receive wisdom and strength for good, in unfolding the great moral problem of the universe, are all appropriated. No man could co-operate with Moses, like Aaron! No class could "work together" with Aaron and Moses like the tribe of Levi! Hence they were his very best "yoke fellows," to draw together and aid in carrying out the incipient stage of good government, the worship of the only Lord God Almighty, and furnish a "pattern of good things to come," Heb. viii. and x.

It is on this line that "the holy twelve—the martyrs and saints of God—take the kingdom!" Dan. vii. 14, 18 and 27, under Christ.

There is a natural and moral affinity recognized, there is a social and religious sympathy associated, that aids as oil in complicated machinery, to operate easily! Amen.

What a mighty motive to "believe the gospel," to connect with Christ and live for "the honor that comes from God only."

Editor Restitution:

I received sample copies of your much esteemed paper some twelve or fifteen days ago, and would have written my thanks before, but waited till I could distribute to parties where I thought they would be likely to do the most good; to give them to many parties in this country would be like "casting pearls before swine," therefore I have given them to those who I knew most favorable to the doctrine of our Lord and Master Jesus the Christ. I also received a letter certifying that you had added my name to your list for three months; may God bless you, and lead you, and keep you in all truth, is the best reward that I can offer just now; accept sincere and hearty thanks.

I will do all I can to induce those to whom I have given sample copies, to give your paper at least a three months trial. I must say, however, that this country was visited last season with drought, and also that our best seasons yield but small returns, and cash is a scarce article. We especially who lean toward the truth as it is found in Christ Jesus are invariably of the poorer class, the rich cleave to the larger and grander church organizations.

I am and have been for some time very much interested in the events transpiring all over the world and especially in the East, but for the lack of the means to pay for a paper giving the proceedings of those foreign powers and world disturbances generally, I have not been able to keep myself posted in such a manner as it is necessary to apply prophecy to the events that are now following each other in such quick succession. As to these events they are certainly the signs of the Son of Man in the heavens (i. e., high places), and we as a people of God ought to "keep our lamps trimmed and burning" and also "live the more humble and Godly as the day approaches," for to some he will come as "a thief in the night," but "to those who watch and wait (this is the lamp that is trimmed and burning) for his coming shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

Brethren then let us watch (the signs) and pray, for we truly see the signs (as foretold by the prophets and Jesus and the apostles) of the Son of Man in the heavens, and now that the signs are come and coming one after another, and by notice you will also find another coming that is not a sign, but is the literal Son coming in his glory and all the holy angels with him. Then (and if then not till then) shall he sit in the throne of his glory. Matt. xxv. 31. Be therefore not ashamed of him or his words. Mark viii. 38. But remember that he is coming to reign in the earth and God will give to him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob (Israel) forever. Luke i. 32, 33. Hoping to meet all of God's children in that kingdom, I subscribe myself yours in hope of eternal life.

We are reminded most forcibly, because the source of our reminder is so closely connected with certain pleasurable personal memories, that the holidays are once more almost upon us.

It has been said, and truthfully so, "that the anticipation is often more pleasant than the event;" we think, however, and believe it to be generally so conceded, that the holidays form an exception to that saying. Who is it that does not enjoy the Christmas Holidays? It is not the poor, and most certainly not the rich. All have some joys, while all, for some unknown reason, seem to forget for the time being what sorrows they may have. It is indeed, and in truth, a festive season.

Our reminder is a fitly worded bill, the Official Proclamation of the Vandalia Line, to which we would call the attention of all our friends. The Vandalia officials evidently realize that we, the people, appreciate a liberal policy, and so continue the pursuit of the one adopted on our appreciatory call. The bill referred to declares that Friends Should Visit Friends. We all know from past experience how much we enjoy visiting our friends, or having a visit from them, during Holiday week, so we can appreciate fully the declaration mentioned. The rate offered is One Fare and a third between all stations. Tickets are to be on sale and good going on December 24th and 25th, and on Dec. 31st and January 1st, all good to return including Jan. 3rd, 1887, allowing the liberal limit of eleven days.

I walk a lonely pilgrim here,
Over life's uneven way;
My weary heart keeps hoping for
A brighter better day;
A glorious home, a goodly land,
The blessed heavenly rest,

A Christmas Carol. Grace and Salvation. A Grave Misapprehension of God's Character. All the Result of Poor, Scholarship and Poorer Theology.

What is grace? Only another name for good will. What is good will? Only another expression for the spring of love. If love is present you may be sure that it issued from pre-existent good will as a source. But God is love and always was, because he is unchangeable in his attributes, "the same today, yesterday and forever." What an enormous thing it is then to suppose that an angelic host came announcing to some shepherds at the nativity God's "good will to men," as though it were a new thing, to be commemorated ever after by spasmodic Christmases of good will among men. To how little purpose has any one read and pondered upon God's word, if he has this view of God's character.

In the first place, the gospel call is as old as Adam, and God's love that inspired it is as old as his first thought of man. For the gospel is one of God's "works" and "all his works were complete from the founding of the cosmos," and the cosmos was founded long before man came upon the scene. The key-note of it, "today if ye will hear my voice harden not your hearts" has been sounding down through the ages wherever and whenever God's voice has been heard—only specially emphasized in "Moses, David and the prophets."

Any of you who read this, if you will take the trouble to inquire into and learn the difference between the words in the original which mean "grace" and "satisfaction" will see the point of what I am saying. Translators have translated the word in the "song of the angels" as though it was the same word that is elsewhere translated "grace" or "good will," and theology has accepted this as good Scripture, and so inferentially drawn false and pernicious conclusions in regard to God's character as manifest in his wisdom and love. Look up the two words in their meaning and use and a flood of heavenly light will flow into your "shadow of darkness" where you are sitting.

The two words are pistis and eudokia. The latter is the keynote and burden of the "Song of the Angels" at the nativity; the former is the grand, creative theme of all God's word and works. The Christ comes to emphasize and give full expression to this pre-existent good will. "Lo I come to do thy will (in a chapter of a book—Israel) hath it been written of me, etc," and we are also told in this connection that "in this will have we been sanctified." In accord with this important announcement of the angelic host, we hear God's voice further on proclaiming with a voice from heaven for our further assurance that the burden of the "song" was correctly stated as "satisfaction." "This is my Son, the beloved, in whom I am satisfied. Hear ye him." There is a polar difference between "well pleased" and "satisfied." Satisfaction is a legal term as well as an expression of moral approbation. A man may be very well pleased with me personally in some respects and not find me satisfactory to lend money to. And when God says that "in the Christ" he is satisfied, that expression covers every possible ground of obligation and requirement, whether moral approbation or release of legal debt.

And this is the meaning of redemption. Every son of Adam is legally redeemed. Why is he not saved then, I hear you ask? What good does one's redemption do a person if he does not believe the fact, and accept the new conditions adhering to the fact? Tell me first though what sort of a character a man can have or exemplify who has no free will or power of choice? Does not all character inhere in this power of choice? If a man chooses to be a bad man will he not have and exemplify a bad character, and vice versa? Therefore every appeal of the gospel is not to look back and be trying to patch up an old record of bad deeds, but to make a new record from the new starting point of redemption. And so the Scriptures saith that every one who is in Christ Jesus is a new creation—is, though alive according to the flesh, accounted dead to all that precious life in the flesh.

God is "satisfied" to wipe out the old record and not count it. All this life in the flesh has been mere soul life, or natural life, and profitless when compared with the spiritual or higher life. Therefore the necessity of regeneration and the new birth or resurrection which is another name for the new birth. When regenerated, and from that time on you and I are accounted dead and rest assured that it is only a question of time when we will die, unless Christ should return for us and we be changed" from the natural to the spiritual perfected state by "translation." One of the phenomena accompanying regeneration is the removal of spiritual blindness, and so the Scriptures saith, "whereas I was once blind, now I see;" and again, "I see wondrous things out of thy law." Another phenomenon of regeneration is the removal of disabilities.

And so in the Scripture we hear the exultant cry of faith saying, "Christ Jesus enabling me I can do all things." Always distrust the faith of a despairing Christian. Faith is assurance, and its full utterance is, "If God be for us who can be against us?" "Who shall bring anything against God's elect?" And if the gospel of Christ invites us, yea, goes out into the by-ways after us, we may be sure that God has elected us. It simply remains for us to elect him through the way of his appointment, namely, through "the beloved Son" or "the Son of his love" "in whom he hath become satisfied to have all the fulness dwell."

Until the heavenly phenomenon of "the nativity," so called, it was a profound mystery to thinking men and to deeply interested angels, how God could be just and at the same time justify (pardon) the irreverent. We are told "that angels desired to look into these things" (this was one of "these things") and were not permitted up to this point in the development of God's plan and purpose in grace. ("In grace are ye saved through faith, and not of yourselves.") But now this great mystery becomes an open book to the angels and they are sent to announce it to fallen men. "Lo I have come not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance.")

Is it any wonder that there is joy in heaven, and that the heavenly choir sing glory to "God among highest ones?" We know before that he was a God whose name was Love, and supremely good in all his works, and that he could make the crooked straight and darkness light, but we could not see how he could make a saint out of a sinner and make him so glorious as to outshine our glory; how he could as "The Judge of all the Earth," sweep away like a cobweb all the maliciously woven sophistries of hate and envy on the part of heaven's State's Attorney, "the Accuser" of man and his brethren, familiarly known to apostates under the Gentile name of "the Devil."

Is there any wonder that in heaven there was the silence of awe and wonder for a brief space? Yes, this will bring "peace upon the earth," "not as the world giveth," but such a peace as God giveth, his peace, eternal peace. Well may the grand finale of this heavenly hallelujah be called "Satisfaction." If God be satisfied who can bring aught to bear against the creature of his hands? When God finished his creative works and pronounced them all to be "very good," he meant just what he said, but only he who stands in God's hypostasis has ever been or ever will be able to fully see this. And so the Scripture saith that "faith is a hypostasis," a foretaste of the great reality, a glimpse of the great and glorious sight, "when we shall see as we have been seen, and fully know as we have been fully known," and we also "be satisfied because we have been awakened in his likeness."

God grant that we may be able now to think of God in his ineffable character of unchangeable love, of wisdom that never stumbles nor errs, of an eternal good purpose that never slumbers nor sleeps, of a beneficence expressed in his works and his word to man "that shall not return unto him void," but shall accomplish that for which it was sent forth. Then at all we also be able to do that for which we were created, as were his angels, namely, "to glorify him and enjoy him forevermore."

Then "peace on earth," our earth, will flow like a river whose source is in the high mountain of exalted love, and whose mouth is the boundless ocean of eternal satisfaction; "yeneto, yeneto" amen.

CHAS. GARDNER.

ARE YOU SURE?

We may "be careful and troubled about many things:" we may "take thought for food and raiment;" we may "pull down our barns and build greater," but after all "there is but one thing needful." Have we got it? Are we Christ's?

Sinner! must you come to God's terms, or must he come to your's?

Must your will bend, or must the word of Omniscience be broken?

Are you to be saved by getting into the fold or by staying outside?

God has opened a door; he has said "come by Christ into my fold;" have you done it? Have you said, "Father! you have promised to forgive me, if I will come to you with simple child-like faith, and be buried in water?" "I trust you!" "It is but a little thing to do, I will do it?"

Can you be saved any other way? Are you sure? Are you sure?

You don't want to make any mistake about it. Your death-bed is coming pretty soon. And "surer than surest," the judgment is coming.

Sinners will not be able to stand in the judgment. Dying men can not give themselves "a living sacrifice to God." You cannot get the bad things out of your life. You can never square accounts with God.

Pardon must come in. Have you received pardon? Are you sure? Eternal life is a gift promised by a loving Father to his children; are you a child? Are you sure you are a child?

The alien cannot have the gift; the unadopted, cannot have the gift.

If you want life, "make your calling and election sure."

"We are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." "As many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." Oh, that I might be the means of causing one dear soul to think of these things, and to so think as to make sure work against the time to come. S. ROXANA WINCH.

Infidelity.

Humanity is left hopeless and helpless by infidelity. If we are in sorrow, it has no comfort; if we are in sin, it has no deliverance; if we are in perplexity, it has no message; if we are in darkness, it has no light. The virtue it preaches is without foundation, the heroism it inculcates is without inducement, and the immortality it whispers is without evidence. Its loftiest sentiments are borrowed from the religion it affects to despise; the liberty which it claims to champion, it has sacrificed but little to secure; and the sweet charities it commends, it has done nothing to obtain. The garland of eloquence wherewith it clothes itself is the adornment of a corpse, every flower sheathes a worm in its bosom, and every breath of fragrance is mingled with death. Its oratory smells of the tomb, and the symbol of its hope is an eyeless, tongueless skull, grinning in mocking insolence at everything that dignifies and ennobles life. It brings no benefaction, it pronounces no benediction, but casts its baleful shadow on all that is fair and sacred. From its cold lips there comes no grand and full-rounded "Yea" to match its piercing, blighting and destroying "Nay." It is simply a huge negation, seeking with one hand to stop the mouth of religion, and with the other to write on human aspirations and beliefs a bitter and derisive "No." It has no gospel of salvation even for this world, but only an evangel of destruction. Let us then turn from it, and proclaim him in whom is life, and who came "that we might have life, and have it more abundantly." Let us, in realizing the insufficiency of all other answers, repeat to those who ask, "What must we do to be saved?" "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved"—saved from sin, save from despair, saved from uselessness and misery, saved forever more in the kingdom of his glory.—C. O. Lorimer.

A reason why many deceive themselves is because they do not consider how far a man may go, and yet be in a natural, or, as best, a legal state. He may be meek, patient, feel many desires of shaking off all vice, do much good, attend public worship, read devotional books; say, he may have a deep conviction of sin, desire to fulfil all righteousness, have frequent rejoicing; but these do not prove a man under grace, unless the Spirit of adoption abide in his heart.—Wesley.

God's Commands.

God's commands are final. When he commands there is no mistake about what ought to be done. It does not lessen our duty if we do not fully understand what he intends to accomplish, or if it seems to us that the means are inadequate to secure the ends. God knows the mechanism of the universe and the laws of cause and effect much better than we do. There is nothing humiliating in admitting that the Creator knows some things which the creature does not know. In fact this should be a most comforting thought. The horizon of our knowledge is so limited, the great universe of existing realities is so largely veiled from our view, and we are so constantly plunged in doubt and error, that a necessary condition of man's happiness and contentment is an Omniscient Being to direct his footsteps. God's commands are our directions. God knows all things; man disobeys at certain peril. What though the way seems dark; what though we cannot see the end from the beginning; what though we think we cannot obey; is it not God who has commanded? Is not all knowledge his? Then rest assured that every command of his is for your welfare—that no requirement of his is unreasonable. Man may make mistakes, but God cannot. Against his decisions there is no appeal. Whether his commands are written in the universe, whether they be spoken in the Book of books, or whether they be revealed by the Holy Spirit, they never contradict one another, and are final. Disobedience means loss, pain and death.

THE COMING AGE,

—ITS—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. WEETJEN.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It deals with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exercising the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are crying: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these, and many similar terms, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in politics, history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of unscriptural interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the inspired Word, excerpted by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of bygone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great unseen Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Uncomprehensible Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

—By SILAS HENN.—

NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS:

The book is truthful, fervent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Review.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Certainly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Sydney Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry.....The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the catechism of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a wealthy, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

THE TRADITION OF THE MEHDI.

Oddly enough Mohammedans are the most stubborn of adventists, looking forward with full assurance of faith to the second coming of Christ. Closely connected with this article of Moslem belief is the doctrine of the Mehdi, who is to prepare the way for the coming of Christ and is to assist him in conquering at evil world. The universal acceptance of this doctrine by all Moslems is the source of the attention now paid in the Moslem world to the claims of any adventurer who calls himself a Mehdi.

Since the fame of the rebel chief of the Soudan has extended to the ends of the earth, it may not be amiss to group together the principal traditions accepted among Moslems as to those last days of the earth of whose approach the coming of the Mehdi is to be a sign.

The Koran forms but a small part of the basis of the Moslem faith. It is explained and extended by a vast array of reputed sayings of the Prophets. These traditional sayings are authenticated by a long chain of evidence, and have among most Moslems equal force with the Koran itself. It is in these traditions that one must look for the full details of the prophecies by which Moslems are taught to forecast the approach of the end of all things. It is true that the traditions are often conflicting and abound in wonders. A Moslem divine once said to me frankly: "I am ashamed to speak of these things; for when men set about making a religion, they always forget that their work will be criticised." But the traditions are accepted by the masses in Turkey; and he who should openly reject them would be accounted as worse than a blasphemer. The traditions are the main source of the Moslem religion as expounded in Turkey.

Mohammed is reputed to have said that the world was already in its last period when he entered upon his ministry. "Comparing your times with the times of past revelations," he said, "your epoch is the time between mid-afternoon and sunset." The Jews had the morning, the Christians the noon, and to the Moslems was given the perilous period of the decline of light. The duration of the Moslem era is fixed by tradition at more than one thousand and less than fifteen hundred years.

These signs of the end are to be of gradual development. There will be an increase of ignorance among the people. The exposition of the holy law will decline and cease. Doctors of the law will be wicked and oppressive. The people will drink wine. Ignorant men will sit in high places and be accounted wise. The fool and the son of a fool will become a ruler of the people, and men will give bribes to be delivered from his wickedness. Men will obey their wives and disobey their parents. It can easily be seen that the time of the end cannot be far off if these are its signs. New Yorkers had best look around them as they read among other tokens that "very high houses will be built, and love for musical instruments will increase" in the wicked last days!

There will be so great a scarcity of honest men that every trustworthy man will be famous far and wide, and those who are accounted wise and brilliant will not possess the smallest atom of faith in God. The people will have and try to destroy all who speak the truth, and missionaries of Anti-Christ will preach, in all the world, lies acceptable to men. Finally most terrible of all, women will become rebellious, and will begin to put various sorts of various things on their heads, and will begin to wear tight-fitting dresses. We may, perhaps, agree with the pious old Moslem, who, long years ago, grouped these "signs" together. "My brethren, the most of these evil customs are already in full vigor among you."

But these lesser tokens only lead up to the greater signs, without which the end of the world will not come. Prominent among these greater signs is the appearance of the Mehdi, or "Guide." He will be of the family of the prophet and his name will be Mohammed, son of Abdulla. He will be a perfect man, full of holy knowledge, and he will come at a time when there is no longer a Caliph. This provision, by the way, the Soudan Mehdi avoids by declaring that the Turks are not true Mohammedans, and that, therefore, their Sultan cannot be recognized as Caliph. The Mehdi will become the centre about whom all true believers will be grouped. He will himself believe that which is true in the faith of all religious sects, and all true people of God will be united in him without sectarian differences. All these people he will lead to Jesus Christ. For about the same time with the coming of the Mehdi, Moslems believe that Dejjal (Anti-Christ) will appear. Some seem to regard him as a beast, but the best authorities among the Turks declare that this Dejjal will prove to be a one-eyed Jew from Khorassan. On his forehead will be written the word Kafir (blasphemer) in letters which all true believers—and they alone—can read. Seventy thousand Jews will follow after him, and he will go through the whole world, visiting all countries during a space of forty days. It should be remarked, however, that of these forty days the first is to be as long as a year, the second as long as a month, the third as long as a week, and the rest each twenty-four hours long. During the time of this Dejjal Moslems expect that Jesus Christ will descend from heaven for a period of forty years. He will slay Dejjal with a javelin, and then the whole earth will be filled with righteousness. Neither man nor beast will any more know hate, but everywhere happiness and equity will reign. So shall begin the last stage of the earth's existence. Then other great signs and wonders will occur. Gog and Magog will overrun the earth, and by their oppression of the people of God will usher in the last day. Then they will be miraculously destroyed, and God's true people will be translated in the twinkling of an eye, so as to escape the horrors of the age of fire.

Such is the tradition of the Mehdi and its chronological importance to Moslems. In Turkey, pious souls point out that the demoralization of the people is fully up to the mark that has been foretold. Lumberbility is rife. Men are crushed for speaking the truth. The one fixed rule for business is fraud. Ignorant men are put to high places. Courts of the holy law sell their decrees to the highest bidder. Women are discontented with their state of subjection, and they hate the uncouth envelopes which the law forces upon them in the place of a graceful dress. The year 1300 of the Moslem era has passed. According to the traditions, the world has less than two hundred years to live, and it is high time for the Mehdi to come. With an eagerness that arises from sincere faith in these prophecies the Moslems of Turkey watch every obscure man who seems inclined to rise up and become a leader of the people. Any such man they are ready to hail as the Mehdi if they can find for their faith the shadow of an excuse.

There is something pitiful in the sight of these multitudes, conscious of hopeless corruption, so enervated that they have no hope of renewal only in a direct intervention of God and yet so convinced that this intervention can only be through some visible agency that they are content meekly to drift along just as they are rather than risk taking steps that might be disapproved by him that is to come. But pitiful as the spectacle is, there is it is much to stir the Christian's heart. The followers of the false prophet are at last arriving at an epoch in their history when they are taught to expect enlightenment through Jesus Christ. Discount, because of their wrong idea of Christ, all we choose from this expectation of the Moslems, allow for their supposition that Christ will come to enforce the Koran upon the nations, remember their firm hope that Christ's first act on earth will be to put to the sword all the Christians of the present day, modify the picture of the faith of these people by all such considerations, and still you have the fact that the waiting millions of Islam believe the time to be drawing near when Jesus shall teach them the truth. To the Christian there is something thrilling in the thought that even now the Moslem nations are anxiously watching for a "guide" to lead them to Christ.—*H. O. Dwight, of Constantinople, in N. Y. "THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

THE POISON AND THE REMEDY.

"Take heed lest there shall be any one that maketh a spoil of you through his philosophy and vain deceit after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ; for in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and in him ye are made full, who is the head of all principality and power." Col. ii. 8-10. R. V.

The poison is indicated in the words "Take heed lest there shall be." The construction implies that it is a real and not a hypothetical danger which the apostle sees threatening.

"Any one"—perhaps the tone of the warning would be better conveyed if we read the more familiar "somebody;" as if he had said—"I name no names—it is not the persons but the principles that I fight against—but you know whom I mean well enough." Perhaps there was even a single "somebody" who was the centre of the mischief.

"That maketh a spoil of you." Such is the full meaning of the word, and not "lure" or "rob," which the Authorized Version suggests to the English reader. Paul sees the converts in Colosse taken prisoners and led away with a cord round their necks, like the long strings of captives on the Assyrian monuments. And he fears lest a robber horde, making a raid upon their peaceful homes, may sweep them away into bondage; and the instrument—the cord—whose fatal noose will be tightened round them, if they do not take care, "philosophy and vain deceit."

If Paul had been writing in English, he would have put "philosophy" in inverted commas, to show that he was quoting the heretical teachers' own name for their system, which was really a chaos. The form of the expression in the original shows clearly that "vain deceit," or more literally, "empty deceit," describes the "philosophy" which Paul is bidding them beware of. They are not two things, but one. In its lofty pretensions, it is a love of, and search after, wisdom; but if we look at it more closely, it is a swollen nothing, empty, and a fraud. The genuine thing he has nothing to say about here.

It is "after the tradition of men." A word of Christ's, applied to the Pharisees, whom he charges with "leaving the commandment of God and holding fast the tradition of men," Mark vii. 8. The portentous undergrowth of such "tradition" which, like the riotous fertility of creepers in a tropical forest, smothers and kills the trees round which it twines, is preserved for our wonder and warning in the Talmud, where for thousands and thousands of pages we get nothing but Rabbi So and So said this, but Rabbi So and So said that; until we feel stifled, and long for one Divine Word to still all the babble.

The fact that all this had no higher source than men's imaginings and refinings, seems to Paul the condemnation of the whole system. His theory is, that in Jesus Christ every Christian man has the full truth concerning God and man, their mutual relations, the authoritative Divine declaration of all that can be known, the perfect example of all that ought to be done, the sun-clear illumination and proof of all that dare be hoped. What an absurd descent, then, from the highest of our prerogatives, to turn away from him that speaketh from heaven, in order to listen to poor human voices speaking men's thoughts.

The lesson is as needful today as ever. The tendency to give heed to human teachers, and suffer them to come between us and Christ is deep in us all. There is, at one extreme, the man who believes in no revelation from God, and, smiling at us Christians who accept Christ's words as final and himself as the incarnate truth, often pays to his chosen human teacher a deference as absolute as that which he regards as superstition when we render it to our Lord. At the other extremity are the Christians who will not let Christ and the Scripture speak to the soul unless the Church be present at the interview, like a jailor with a bunch of man-made creeds jingling at his belt. Let us take heed of the empty fraud which lays the absurd snare for our feet, that we can learn to know God by any means but by listening to his own speech in his eternal Word. Let us go up to the pure spring on the mountain top, and not try to slake our thirst at the muddy pools at its base.

"For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and in him ye are made full, who is the head of all principality and power."

If he be the one sole temple of Deity in whom all Divine glories are stored, why go anywhere else in order to see or to possess God? It is folly; for not only are all these glories stored in him, but they are so stored on purpose to be reached and possessed by us. Therefore the apostle goes on, "and in him ye are made full;" which sets forth two things as true in the inward life of all Christians, namely, their living incorporation in and union with Christ, and their consequent participation in his fulness. Everyone of us may enter into that most real and close union with Jesus Christ by the power of continuous faith in him. So may we be grafted into the Vine, and builded into the Rock. If thus we keep our hearts in contact with his heart, and let him lay his lip on our lips, he will breathe into us the breath of his own life, and we shall live because he lives. All the fulness of God is in him, that it may pass from him into us. We might start back from such bold words if we did not remember that the same apostle who here tells that that fulness dwells in Jesus, crowns his wonderful prayer for the Ephesian Christians with that daring petition, "that ye may be filled with all the fulness of God," Eph. iii. 19. The condition of this conscious reception of a Divine life is abiding in Jesus. It is in him that we are "being filled full;" and only so long as we continue in him that we continue full.

Why should we go on a weary search after goodly pearls when the richest of all is by us if we will have it? Do we crave a stay for our spirit, guidance and impulse for our lives? Let us cleave to Christ, and we shall be no more lonely and bewildered. Do we need a quieting balm to be laid on conscience, and a sense of guilt to be lifted from our hearts? Let us lay our hands on Christ, the one sacrifice, and leave all other altars and ceremonies. Do we longingly look for some light in the future? Let us steadfastly gaze on Christ as he rises to heaven bearing a human body into the glory of God. We need more than creature help. We need the whole fulness of the Godhead to draw from. It is all there in Christ for each of us. Whosoever will, let him draw freely; "that we may be filled with all the fulness of God."—Alexr. Maclaren, D. D., in The Expositor.

A Neglected Work.

There is no work for the colleges to do which is half so important as the training of young men in the knowledge and use of their mother tongue; there is no work to which in fact the colleges give so little attention, and none in which their efforts are so generally misdirected. A very few of the colleges have shown signs of an awakening sense of their shortcomings in this respect of late, and some of them are beginning to do a little better than has been customary in the past; but in none is English taught as it ought to be at all, while in nine colleges out of ten there is no English teaching at all worthy of consideration.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Blessed are those happy natures who always look on the bright side! Their buoyancy of spirit lifts them above many of the ills and discomforts of life. Sorrow does not long press them down, for their native elasticity soon rebounds. For them the darkest cloud has a silver lining. They cheer and hearten the weak and despondent. They lessen sorrow, and increase joy. Sunshine, light, warmth attend them. Theirs is a beautiful world.

DOCTOR FRANKLIN'S RELIGION.

[From a letter written by Benjamin Franklin to a minister in southern New Jersey, dated June 6, 1753, which was published in the Christian Register of September 28, 1821.]

As to the kindness you mention, I wish it could have been of more service to you; but if it had, the only thanks I would desire are that you would always be ready to serve any other person that may need your assistance, and so let good offices go 'round, for mankind are all of a family. For my own part, when I am employed in serving others I do not look upon myself as conferring favors, but as paying debts. In my travels, and since my settlement, I have received much kindness from men to whom I shall never have an opportunity of making a direct return, and numberless mercies from God, who is infinitely above being benefited by our services. These kindnesses from men I can, therefore, only return to their fellow-men; and I can only show my gratitude to God by a readiness to help his other children and my brethren; for I do not think that thanks and compliments, though repeated weekly, can discharge our real obligations to each other, and much less to our Creator.

You will see in this my notion of good works, that I am far from expecting to merit heaven by them. By heaven we understand a state of happiness, infinite in degree and eternal in duration. I can do nothing to deserve such a reward. He that for giving a glass of water to a thirsty person should expect to be paid with a good plantation, would be modest in his demands compared with those who think they deserve heaven for the little good they do on earth. Even the mixed imperfect pleasures we enjoy in this world are rather from God's goodness than our merit; how much more so the happiness of heaven? For my part I have not really to think I deserve it, the folly to expect it, or the ambition to desire it, but content myself in submitting to the disposal of that God who made me, who has hitherto preserved and blessed me, and in whose fatherly goodness I may well confide, that he will never make me miserable, and that the affliction I may at any time suffer may tend to my benefit.

The faith you mention has, doubtless, its use in the world. I do not wish to see it diminished, nor would I desire to see it lessened in any man, but I wish it more productive of good works than I have generally seen it. I mean real good works, works of kindness, charity, mercy and public spirit; not holy-day keeping, sermon hearing or reading, performing church ceremonies, or making long prayers, filled with flatteries and compliments, despised even by wise men and much less capable of pleasing the Deity. The worship of God is a duty—the hearing and reading may be useful; but if men rest in hearing and praying, as too many do, it is as if the tree should value itself on being watered and putting forth leaves though never producing any fruit.

Your good Master thought much less of these outward appearances than many of his modern disciples. He preferred the doers of the word to the hearers; the son that seemingly refused to obey his father, and yet performed his commands, to him that professed his readiness but neglected the work; the heretical but charitable Samaritan, to the uncharitable but orthodox priest and sanctified Levite; and those who gave food to the hungry, drink to the thirsty, raiment to the naked, entertainment to the stranger, and never heard of his name, he declares shall in the last day be accepted, when those who cry, Lord, Lord, who value themselves on their faith, though great enough to perform miracles, but have neglected good works, shall be rejected. He professed that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; which implied his modest opinion that there were some in his time so good that they need not hear even him for improvement; but nowadays we have scarcely a little person that does not think it the duty of every man within his reach to sit under his petty ministration, and that whoever omits this offends God. I wish to such more humility, and to you health and fitness, being your friend and servant.—Benjamin Franklin.

HOW TO PUT ON STRENGTH.

How, then, shall we put on strength? We answer, on our knees! No man ever puts on spiritual strength except on his knees. It was there that Jacob found it when he had "power with God and prevailed;" it was there that the apostles found it. When Peter stood forth and preached to the multitude, that day of Pentecost was the day of power; it was the Spirit's power; but how did the apostles put it on? Upon their knees; in those days of prayer; in the upper chamber in Jerusalem. Oh, brethren! it is upon our knees that the Church must now put on its strength! "Awake! awake!" It is God's call. When we ourselves have risen to the consciousness of our need, we may then take hold upon God and cry, "awake, awake, O arm of the Lord!" Let us put on the strength of the word, as the apostle did when he shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God. Let us put on the strength of the ministry, as Paul did when he went forth in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of peace. Let us put on the strength of the Spirit, as the early Church did when it was endued with power from on high. Then shall our work be "mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strongholds." Then shall we return from the conflict as Israel did from the pursuit of the Midianites, exclaiming, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!" Then shall the Church be "a praise in all the earth," and men shall say, "Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as an army with banners!"—Dr. W. M. Paxton.

Communications.

A Glance Inward.

[illegible] who he was different, more like the divine Master," I said to myself, thinking of a friend, and then the swift rays of lighted thought flashed athwart my own heart, and "oh, I wish I was different, that I was more Christ-like!" was the next and better prayer.

We suffer when others go wrong; that is a part of the cup that Christ has left us to drink; but the sweet charity that "thinketh no evil," instead of turning our thoughts and words against the wrong doer, would have us look inward; "take heed to our own steps; make straight paths for our own feet; watch, lest we also fall, and by the better life, "the closer walk with God," win others to emulation, help the fallen to rise.

Christ says, "follow me!" and "my sheep hear my voice and they follow me!" "if any man serve me, let him follow me, and where I am there shall also my servant be."

Can we win the perfect self-control that is seen in the Savior's life? the self-control that will make us better, stronger than the mightiest of earth? In not a single instance does he let go the reins that govern passion. Calm in the assurance that "vengeance belongs unto the Lord and that he will repay," he goes about doing good, feeding the hungry, healing the sick, opening the blind eyes, and teaching to the multitudes the glorious gospel of salvation and inheritance in a coming kingdom.

He rebuked wicked men; he called corrupt fruit corrupt, but there was no hasty speech, no vengeful word, no turning away from work because his disciples went away and walked no more with him, and the carping Pharisees found fault with both deed and doctrine.

He conquered. He that rules his spirit has always the vantage ground. He can win souls to Christ, where the fretful, ill-tempered person has not the hair's breadth of a chance.

I want my friends to be Christlike: what is the lesson? It is that I must be Christlike; that I must not cut the pattern whereby I want them to fashion their lives. I must follow Christ if I would have them follow me.

I don't want to be one to "obscure" by my acts or words "the sunlight shining from the beautiful and perfect character of Christ." I would the rather reflect abroad some of that glorious light.

Let us be careful in all things; in thought, in word, in act, doing, saying everything as unto the Lord. There is the measure for our acts and speech—Scripture measure, whereby we shall be judged. Take that measure, oh heart of mine, and square your life thereby! Do all as unto the Lord.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months the same rate.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the "real" restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations: the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for all saved.

VOL. XXXV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 22, 1886. NO. 48.

The Standard.

The standard of "faith and obedience to the faith" is most distinctly and unmistakably given us by our Lord, and then repeated and emphasized by the apostles whom he sent for that purpose. The moral "necessity" for such a standard seems as obvious as for the sun to shine, or as his sufferings for us. Luke xxiv. 25, 26. Without a standard the Christian world is still at sea, and left to Roman, Russian, or other assumed authority, as varied as the shifting winds; "ever learning and yet not able to come to the truth."

This standard is given us in "The Comforter, the Holy Spirit of truth, and his teaching." John xiv. 16, 17 and 26; 1 Cor. i. 1-31. "That ye all speak the same thing." 1 John iv. 4-6. "We (apostles) are of God; he that knoweth (is taught) of God, heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the Spirit of truth and the Spirit of error." There are two spirits and two ways through the world, one to life, the other to destruction.

On this standard we may accept the record of St. Matthew, i. to iv., as to the genealogy and birth of Christ, and John the Baptist's mission. Also as to his statements of the apostolic mission for the gospel age, for baptizing into the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, ament Matt. [illegible] Beloved brethren, let us all [illegible] up within the veil! Heb. vi. 11-20. Who can anchor up abo[illegible] their divine standard, or one deep[illegible] more profound? The answer is, [illegible] [illegible] age and power of [illegible] ness" and striven to differ[illegible] but always to ruin! The greatest and mightiest, the meanest and weakest, on leaving God in his word, go to the devil. Through envy of the devil cometh death, and they who hold of his wile do find it. Wisdom of Solomon ii. 24. "A word in season—how good it is!" Lovingly for good.

The Joy of Victory.

Every battle fought and every victory gained over self, or the world, not only increases our strength, but brings with it, as a natural accompaniment, the joy of victory. Those who achieve victory in any line of service, experience the feeling of exultation which properly follows the triumph. And life may become a succession of victories, rather than a chapter of defeats. Then the joy, inseparable from successful achievement, will be our portion.

We see, then, how a Christian life should be a joyful one. Gladness should characterize it, since it is really the only successful life. That type of religion illustrated in the life of one who goes mourning all his days, lamenting that his career is one prolonged series of failures and defeats, and whose song, if it may be called a song, is rather a continuous wail, is by no means a true type of Christian life. The Christian lives by faith in One who has overcome the world. His Master is the greatest of conquerors. So a genuinely Christian life will afford a series of glorious triumphs. The royal followers of Jesus are fighting a winning, not a losing, battle. The cross may appear to many the symbol of defeat. But not only in the wilderness, but also on the cross, did our Lord gain a victory over the tempter. And by his cross we, too, may conquer. The joy of the Lord is the joy of victory. And the joy of the Lord will be our strength.

No Sunday-school lesson is properly taught by a teacher until the scholar has gained some thought from it, or some application of it, which is calculated to be of a practical value to that scholar in the duties of life before him. No Sunday-school lesson is properly prepared for by a teacher until some such point in the lesson is fairly in the teacher's mind as suited to the special needs of the scholar to whom that lesson is taught.

HOLIDAY MUSINGS.

The year designated in human annals by the numerals 1886, is lapsing; to its close. The anniversary day set apart by common consent in commemoration of the Redeemer's advent is now just at hand. Our thoughts wander backward over the tract of the times and ages that are lost in the past eternity, to roll upon the birth of that infant who was born about 1886 years ago in [illegible] village some six miles south of [illegible] birth place of [illegible] not only in the history of Israel. It was in this town and its suburban fields that those events occurred that are narrated in that beautiful Bible story contained in the book of Ruth. But while Hebron and Jerusalem become capitals, the place where the Psalmist King drew his first breath and passed his youth never rose to eminence. But the time came to raise that little city, older than the days of Jacob, to a height of renown beyond the exaltation, not only of "the thousands of Judah," but beyond the celebrity of all the capitals of earth's proudest empires.

In that conflux of the ages where the divinely ordained dispensations meet and blend, an edict from Imperial Rome had brought numbers to the city of David, as their own city, to be there enrolled for taxation. Joseph, being of "the house and lineage of David," must leave the city of his abode to be enrolled in the city of his extraction. Some unexplained circumstance compelled Mary to be personally enrolled with her husband. To so low a condition were these lineal descendents of the most royal line, that ever ruled on earth, reduced, that they, like all others, must submit to be assessed for tribute to the lordly Cæsar. The heir and heiress to David's throne were residing at Nazareth; but this was the wrong place for the birth of that one destined to be King of kings.

How wonderfully the purposes of God are interwoven with the unfolding events of this world's history. How true it is, as one has said, that "Every creature walks blind-folded; only he that dwells in light knows whither they go." A few days longer at Nazareth and Micah's prediction would have failed to be fulfilled, Micah v. 2. The Roman monarch unwittingly commands, and Joseph and Mary are in their own city just in time. After a journey, made slow and tedious by Mary's condition, the descendants of David and Solomon reach the ancient town to find the inn full and themselves compelled to seek quarters in one of the out-buildings where the beasts were sheltered.

For supreme royalty at its birth no palace had been decorated. A stable was where the infant, with whose existence the future destiny of worlds and ages was to be wondrously linked, was to be brought forth. For this new-born stranger no costly trappings had been prepared. Tradition says that his ancestor, Jesse, the father of David, was a weaver and "wove the veils of the sanctuary," but no finely woven material had been wrought into goodly raiment for the heaven-descended babe. No skilled artisan had fashioned a cradle from priceless woods, and elaborated it with costly ornamentation for the First-born of creation. God's only begotten Son. The dames of high rank and lineage were not there to soothe the lone mother in the hour of maternity's supremest need. The hands of the foster-father performed the indispensable offices at the Redeemer's natal hour and maternal hands were strengthened to swathe the Divine-human form with the bands that mother-love had carved and folded away for the advent of the tiny child. No human tongue was ready to herald to the multitude the advent of the grand heir of the universe. None dreamed or imagined that Israel's Hope and Earth's Deliverer was cradled in a manger in Bethlehem—Ephratah. Had it been ours to have looked upon that infantile countenance of surpassing beauty and loveliness, and to survey that diminutive form procreated by the energizing vivification of that Holy Spirit that overshadowed the virgin mother with the "power of the Highest," could we have conceived what marvels of Divinity were enwrapped in that little miniature of man? Could we have conceived that those puny hands would one day sway the scepter of universal empire, and that on those temples of most beautiful innocency would be placed the crown of superlative and everlasting glory? Could we have imagined that the same hands of infantile weakness would become omnipotent enough finally to hold the keys of death and gloomy Hades? Could we have been persuaded that RESTITUTION, RESURRECTION, and ENDLESS LIFE, were in dormant energy in that baby-form asleep in that manger bed swathed in such humble habiliments? Despite appearances there lay the Child of Destiny—predestined to be the death of death, and the grave's destruction—the one through whom God will ultimately remove all sin, anguish, sorrow, suffering, sickness, and death from his universe, so as to leave its boundless infinitudes without speck or stain of evil. In his humiliation, this Son of Man was not known in his true character as the Lord from heaven. His entrance into the world, that he came to redeem, was like his after life; "to be despised and rejected of men." "He came into his own possessions, and his own people received him not." Only a few in the lowly ranks of life were "waiting for the consolation of Israel." That God, who conceals his deep and everlasting counsels from the wise and prudent of this world, reveals them to babes. He passes by the noble and princely, and condescends to man of low estate. Among those whose minds and hearts were made ready to receive the glad tidings that Jehovah's salvation was incarnate in human form were some humble shepherds keeping night watch over their flocks, perhaps on the same pastoro-grounds where David had kept his father Jesse's flocks more than one thousand years before. When earth came from its Creator's hands in its finished perfection of world-wide bloom and beauty contesting round a celestial paradise of unspeakable delights, the Morning Stars sang their anthems, and the Sons of God, in rapt voices, shouted their hallelujahs of joy. So when the Head of the New Creation is born the midnight sky is suddenly illuminated over these shepherds, with a noon-tide radiancy of the Divine glory, and an angel announces unto them, in their great consternation, the "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." Though no master of song awakened psaltery or harp in gladsome strains; though no daughter of music sang sweetly responsive choral melodies; yet a celestial choir came to hymn the evangels of praise. The stillness of the midnight air and the blue dome of a star-spangled Syrian sky were made resonant with the heavenly voices of a multitude of the heavenly host singing—"Glory to God in the Highest; and on earth peace and good will toward men." O brief but transporting hymnal; sweet evangel song of incipient redemption. Beautiful Hebrew parallelism that contrasts and still connects God, and the highest heavens, with fallen man, and the ruined earth, in those tunable clauses. How heart-thrilling to the shepherds must have been these melodies, when they heard the first parallel clause float out on the still midnight air, as the one part of the heavenly choir chant—"Glory to God in the highest heavens," responded to by the other band of the celestials singing the second parallel clause—"Peace and good will toward men on earth." How sublime the contrasts and how wonderful the connections. God and fallen man—the highest heavens and earth in its depths of ruin, in contrasted opposition, coming into a connection of "peace and good will." In that manger, too, is another contrasted connection of like wonderful and mysterious character. Son of God and Son of Man are in connection of natures, and contrasted relations, made to inhere in the newly born One who comes as Christ the Lord to be the Savior of the world. But the angels went back to heaven, and our space and time permits us only to say concerning the life of the Son of God in this world, that after passing thirty years of obscure retirement in Egypt and at Nazareth, he entered upon his public ministry for three years and a half, he then passed through crucifixion, death, the resurrection, and then ascended to his Father's right hand. In our Holiday Musings we now look forward. That same Jesus is coming back to our earth once more. We are near, if not already in, another confluence of ages when the expiring "times of the Gentiles" are blending with "the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." The heavens have only received our Lord to retain him till the ages of decay shall join on to the "times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." To finish and complete the incipient redemption commenced at the first advent the Christ of God must return to our world to consummate human salvation and effect the earth's restoration.

In the regenesis of earth, and in the resurrection of the different orders of the redeemed, will be heard the new song of the princely priesthood elected of God to wear the crowns of the eternal ages. Next comes the song of Moses and the Lamb sung by the palm-bearing multitude who come out of the great tribulation and get the victory over the beast and over his image. And somewhere beyond the songs of the crowned princes, and beyond the song of the innumerable palm-bearers—when death is dead, and the grave destroyed—when all things are made new—when there shall be no more sorrow, nor crying, neither any more pain—when God's tabernacle shall be with men—when the devil and the last vestige of evil shall have forever disappeared from the universe of God, will the song of the myriads of myriads, and thousands of thousands of angels be heard to say with a loud voice, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and power, and glory, and blessing."

Responsive to this acclaim will be heard from every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." O babe of Bethlehem, to thee, as to thy Father upon the throne, shall the elected royalty, and the angels, and the multitudinous palm-bearers, and universal creation living beyond the day of judgment,* yet ascribe psalms of praise as sweet as sung by morning stars or choirs of angels at Bethlehem-Ephratah. O for the advent-time of final redemption. Will it be ours to list to the songs of the coming ages of glory? Shall we one day attune golden harps—shall we one day join in the sublime and glorious symphonies of the ages to come?

With the compliments of the season the Editor wishes such a happy destiny to all the dear readers of THE RESTITUTION. May we all meet in the sweet by and by.

*Incorrigible sinners and the devil will all be destroyed in the judgment age. Beyond, God's universe is all obedience.

SCIENCE AND FAITH.

It is very common to hear it said at the present time that, while science is a matter of knowledge, religion is a matter of faith; and hence the inference that the former is clear and certain, and the latter vague and uncertain. Now this is not only a very superficial way of talking, but involves a pernicious fallacy which I desire in this article to expose.

First of all, let us understand what we mean by science and what we mean by religion. The words, both in Greek and Latin, from which the word science is derived, mean to know. Science, therefore, signifies knowledge. But in its original sense, we generally understand by a science, knowledge arranged or formulated into some system that is all positive or certain knowledge pertaining to facts: how facts exist, or forces operate, or, in the language of the schools, the quo modo, is a matter of opinion about which scientists and philosophers are often not only widely apart, but frequently in direct antagonism. Both in physics and metaphysics there are various schools of thought, and manifold are the theories held by scientists and philosophers, from Plato, Pythagoras and Aristotle, down to Darwin, Tyndall, and Spencer.

When men speak of religion as a matter of faith, in contradistinction to knowledge or reason, in view of science, they mean Christianity," and in an objective sense; for religion, in a subjective sense, is, of course, a matter purely of personal individual experience, and in this respect could not be contrasted with any scientific system.

But now observe that Christianity is a religion of facts. All its great doctrines rest upon historical facts—as the Incarnation, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, and the Ascension. So, too, the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, the establishment of the Church, and the conversion of the nations by the preaching of the gospel, are facts of history, just as susceptible of proof as any other facts; and, what is more, the existence of Christianity these nineteen centuries as one of the most important factors in the civilization and progress of the race, nay, as the mightiest moral force in the world, is evident to all intelligent persons.

The Christian religion, therefore, is a matter of knowledge and of reason as well as of faith, just as much as any science or philosophy. Faith is not opposed to knowledge or reason; indeed, there can be no true faith without knowledge. It may not be the knowledge of sight or of absolute demonstration, but the knowledge of testimony; that which comes through reliable witnesses, whose witness is subjected to a discriminating judgment, a reasonable analysis. Hence to say that "where faith begins reason ends," as did David Hume, is simply absurd. A far wiser saying, or aphorism, was that of Richard Hooker, that "Faith is the highest exercise of reason." And this is as true in science as in religion, because there are mysteries in both which the finite mind cannot grasp or solve, which lead the true philosopher as well as devout Christian to acknowledge his own ignorance and insignificance, and to adore a Being of infinite wisdom and power. The circle of absolute knowledge of the wisest, even as far as scientific facts are concerned, is exceedingly contracted; and when you come to causes and effects, nature and laws, forces and operations, the scholars and savans are in the dark as much as the unlearned. Outside of this circle, so far as positive knowledge is concerned, all is unknowable, and hence all are agnostics. Still, theories, beliefs, or creeds, are held, and have great influence upon the world, because in nearly all the transactions of life men act upon probabilities, and walk by faith and not by sight. Prof. Virchow, of the Berlin University, one of the most distinguished evolutionists in Europe, admits that faith is as necessary in science as in religion. Prof. Wm. Pierce, the author of a book on mathematics, which it has been said not more than three persons in the United States were able to understand, utters these significant words: "Faith in the supernatural is as necessary in science as to the conduct of life; and the ripest scholar is not wise if he ever leaves behind him the filial spirit which cries at every stage, 'Our Father, which art in heaven.'" Prof. Grey, of Harvard College, says: "Faith, in a just sense of the word, assumes as prominent a place in science as in religion. It is indispensable in both." Prof. Cooke, of the same College, in his admirable work, entitled, "Religion and Chemistry," uses these words: "Moreover, faith is not peculiar to religion. All our knowledge, not the result of personal observation and investigation, is held in faith, that is, on trust in other men; and absolutely all knowledge is held on trust in the authority of our own powers. Much of the knowledge that we hold without question is utterly beyond the capacity of our own intellects to verify; and moreover, no one doubts the existence of truths which now lie beyond the scope of the most glorified genius, but which hereafter may be attained by man."

Now the admissions from such men are exceedingly weighty, and ought to put to silence those small philosophers of our day who prate so much about science as something positive and certain, and sneer at religion as simply a matter of faith; who only boast of their knowledge because so ignorant. For men of real learning and great ability are the first to concede how little they know either of matter or spirit. "Science," says Pascal, one of the master-minds of the seventeenth century, "has two extremities to which we tend; and the pursuit of knowledge is but a course between two ignorances, as the human life itself is only a wayfaring from grave to grave. The first is pure natural ignorance, in which all men find themselves at birth. The other extremity is the conclusion to which all great minds come, when, having run through all that men can know, they find that they know nothing, and meet in the same ignorance whence they set out. But it is learned ignorance which has become conscious of itself." A philosopher of a much later date, of great distinction, Sir William Hamilton, gives expression to almost the same thoughts, in these words: "There are two sorts of ignorance: we philosophize to escape ignorance, and the consummation of our philosophy is ignorance. We start from one, we repose in the other. If, as living creatures,

> "We are such stuff
> As dreams are made of, our little life
> Is rounded with a sleep."

So, as cognizant intelligences, our dream of knowledge is a little rounded with darkness. The highest reach of human science is, indeed, the scientific recognition of human ignorance. "Qui nescit ignorare, ignorat scire."

And, asks Mr. Huxley, one of the great lights of modern science, and a leading evolutionist: "For, after all, what do we know of this terrible 'matter,' except as a name for the unknown and hypothetical cause of states of our consciousness? And what do we know of that spirit over whose threatened extinction by matter a great lamentation is arising, like that which was heard at the death of Pan, except that it also is a name for unknown and hypothetical cause or condition of states of consciousness? In other words, matter and spirit are but names for the imaginary sub stratæ of groups of phenomena."

But now, if savans are so ready to confess their ignorance, what shall we say of the common people; nay, of ordinary scholars? What do they know even of the truth of the most familiar facts of science, to say nothing of laws and operations? They receive all the facts of astronomy, chemistry, and geology, at second-hand—on the testimony of others—and hence all their knowledge is most emphatically that of faith. What, for example, do they know of the sun's distance, or that of a fixed star, from the earth? Or of the size and weight of a planet? or the velocity with which it moves? or the velocity of light or electricity? Or what do they know of the almost Omnipotent powers of oxygen? or the conservation and correlation of force? or the formation of the rocks and the fossils imbedded in them, which indicate the various epochs and ages of the world, save what is told to them by scientific men? Suppose I were to ask a man of ordinary intelligence, "Do you believe that the sun is ninety-five millions of miles from the earth, and that light comes from it to us in eight minutes—hence, travelling about two hundred thousand miles in a second?" He would no doubt say, "Yes." But why? Did he ever prove it? No. Could he, if he tried? Probably not. It is a matter of faith, then, is it not? Yes. In whom? Scientific men; men who have the mathematical ability and the time to give to such problems. And yet they have only approximated to the truth; for it is not yet positively settled what is the exact distance to the sun from the earth.

If we now turn for a moment from nature to man himself, we shall find problems and mysteries still harder to solve. For who can tell how the body and soul are connected? or how the mind and the brain, or the will and actions, are related? or explain the manifold phenomena of sensation and reflection?" Or who shall decide between such philosophers as Descartes and Leibnitz? one holding that the mind at first is a tabula rasa or a blank, the other to innate ideas. Then hear what Pascal says: "Man is to himself the most marvellous object of nature, for he cannot conceive what body is, still less what is spirit; and less than all, how body can be united to spirit." There is, therefore, very little that is certain or positive in mental philosophy or psychology. We make the same still stronger, so far as natural science is concerned, when we consider the changes that have taken place, which show how unreliable, after all, are the deductions of learned men, who, in the age in which they lived, were regarded as almost infallible.

Take, for example, the science of astronomy. For two thousand years the Ptolemaic system of the universe was held as true; a system which held this earth the great centre over which the sun, stars, and planets revolve.

Again, in Natural Philosophy, for many centuries it was an axiom that "Nature abhors a vacuum," and this accounted for the rising of the water in a pump. This error was not exploded until Torricelli, in 1608, demonstrated his theory of atmospheric pressure. In geology there has been no end to changes within a century. There is scarcely a geologist today who holds the theories put forth as science by Dr. Buckland, in the "Bridgewater Treatise," not much more than a half-century ago; and there are those at the present time who regard even Hugh Miller mistaken in some of his deductions. But in nothing has there been a greater change of views than in regard to the distinction between the animal and vegetable kingdoms. A few years since these were held as entirely distinct, so far as their life and functions are concerned, but now as identical. "The fact is," says the very able Professor of Harvard College, already quoted, "that a new article has recently been added to the scientific creed; the essential oneness of the two kingdoms of organic nature." Such facts as these ought to make men a little more modest who talk about the certainty of scientific and the uncertainty of religious knowledge. There have been so such changes as these in the Christian religion. It, indeed, like its Divine Founder, is "the same yesterday, today, and for ever." There may be erroneous interpretations of Scripture, and theological systems may be far from the truth, yet the Word of God itself is infallible: just as there may be mistakes of scientists and philosophers, and wrong hypotheses and theories as to the real facts and laws of the natural world, yet the truths of that world are unchangeable.

In regard, then, to the teachings of both science and religion, we see that faith is necessary. True faith, however, is never antagonistic; nay, more, never separated from right reason; a belief without reason is credulity, and credulity ends in fanaticism and imposture. It is quite important, however, to understand what is the province of reason in religion. It is to discriminate as to witnesses, to sift testimony, analyse evidence in regard to a revelation which it is claimed comes from God, but not to decide what that revelation shall be. "Or, as Dr. Mansel says, in his very able work on the "Limitations of Human Thought:" "Reason is to judge of the evidence whether the revelation is Divine, but not of its substance. When the revelation is accepted, then the doctrines are received, though they involve mysteries far above human reason to solve." And when men say that they cannot receive in religion what they do not understand, then I reply that they do receive a thousand things in sciences which they do not understand; and faith and reason go together here as well as in religion. I cannot make my meaning clearer, or close this article better than with the following beautiful illustration of Prof. Henry Rogers:—

"We should represent faith and reason as twin-born: the one in form and feature the image of manly beauty; the other of feminine grace and gentleness; but to each, alas! is allotted a sad privation. While the bright eyes of reason are full of piercing and restless intelligence, his ear is closed to sound; and while faith has an ear of exquisite delicacy, on her sightless orbs, as she lifts them toward heaven, the sunbeam plays in vain. Hand in hand the brother and sister, in all mutual love, pursue their way through a world on which, like ours, day breaks and night falls alternately; by day the eyes of reason are the guide to faith, and by night the ear of faith is the guide to reason. As is the wont of those who labor under these privations respectively, reason is apt to be eager, impetuous, impatient of that instruction which his infirmity will not permit him readily to apprehend; while faith—gentle, docile—is ever willing to listen to the voice by which alone truth and wisdom can effectually reach her."—Geo. H. McKnight, D. D., in Rainbow.

FROM JERUSALEM.

I have seen buildings going up in other cities; but I was not affected by it. I have seen improvement in roads and farms as common affairs. I have seen reform and improvement in various departments of human events, but no special rejoicing was caused thereby. But the new and improved buildings going up within the walls of Jerusalem; the new city which is springing into existence outside of its walls; the increase of population, the improvement of lands, the building of roads, the returning rains, the bountiful harvests, and the enterprising spirit manifested among the people generally, speak in thunder tones to me of the coming kingdom of God in all its glory.

The clattering of axes, saws and hammers in erecting these buildings are echoing the glad tidings, "Behold he cometh!" "Blessed be the kingdom of our father David that cometh in the name of the Lord!" They say to me, "The shadows of the dark night of sorrow are passing away, and the golden light of the morning of an endless day of joy is piercing over the hills."

There has been a rich Jew here from New York for three weeks. He came to visit his father whom he has not seen for sixteen years. I cannot describe to you what this man expresses in his astonishment at seeing the improvements which have been made in Jerusalem. He was greatly excited about it, and resolved to return to America, dispose of his property there and come back to the Holy Land.

We need a new order of things. There is already a change. The mission which was established here in Jerusalem has done its work in the past and is simply useless now. I am told that the English mission is paying out hundreds of dollars every day for the support of clergymen, hospitals, officials, etc.; at present there are about twenty proselytes. You can judge of the expense of one.

But the expense would be a thing if turning a Jew to the present faith of Christianity was what they claim it to be; but it is not. In the first place their converts are not converted. And if they were converted fully to their faith they would have to be converted over again for the new age, the religion of which will be neither Protestantism nor Catholicism, but pure and undefiled religion—pure as he (Christ) is pure.

One proselyte to Christianity—popular Christianity—told me but yesterday that he tried hard to become a Christian, but could not honestly admit that he believed any thing he said. He said—"When Christ was here upon the earth and did many miracles, if the people could not believe then, how can they believe now when nothing is done?" I thought, "Surely how can they?"

I find the Jews as a race desire occupation. To sit down in idleness is to them a living death. Now it is evident that whoever would benefit these people must provide labor or capital. Set them to work. When the Lord opens his eyes upon the house of Israel, they will turn to him, the God of Israel, their own true God.—Alice E. Davis, in New Age, Dec. 17, 1886.

DIED.

BUTTON.—At Oak Glen, Cook Co., Ill., Monday, Dec. 13, 1886, Asa Watson Button, aged 74 years.

While crossing the railroad track, near his home, Brother Button was instantly killed by an express train. He was born in the town of Meredith, Delaware Co., N. Y., Dec. 23, 1812, and was married Oct. 16, 1836, to Phoba Stewart. Twelve children have been born to them, ten of whom are still living, five sons and five daughters. Brother Button came to Illinois in 1837 and to Cook County in 1845, where he has since lived.

Many of the readers of THE RESTITUTION will remember the able articles of Brother B. which have appeared occasionally. For sometime he was a Baptist minister, but when he learned the truths concerning life only in Christ, and those relating to the kingdom of God, he left the Baptist Church, and ever since has faithfully proclaimed the truth as he understood it. His life has been a consistent one, and he had the pleasure before death overtook him of seeing the most of his children in the fold of Christ.

Being well and widely known, many attended his funeral. The services were held in the Methodist church, and the writer endeavored to present the truth as far as possible, basing his remarks on 1 Thess. iv. 13-18. Good attention was paid by all, and let us hope that some of the seed sown fell into good ground.

THOS. WILSON.

RAILSBACK.—At Manitou, Ind., Dec. 14, 1886, of scarlet fever and inflamation of the brain, Harvey V. Railsback, aged 9 years, 8 months, and 20 days.

We took our darling boy over to the cemetery at Argos, Ind., and buried him by the little sister Nora, there to quietly sleep till the resurrection morn. Our home is now very lonely and our hearts are sad, but our trust is in God and his promises and we will patiently wait till the resurrection morn when we hope to meet our loved ones again.

THE SPRINKLED BLOOD.

The blood is on the lintel,
The feast table is spread—
Our Paschal Lamb, with bitter herbs,
And bless'd unleaven bread.
With sandaled feet and girded loins,
And traveling-staff in hand,
We eat the lamb, the herbs, the bread,
In haste to leave the land.

The blood is on the door-post,
The Father sees it there;
He passes by in judgment,
While we are now secure.
In us there is no merit;
The only claim we plead
Is, "Lord, thou know'st the Lamb was slain—
The Lamb that came to bleed."

The Lamb is now in heaven,
And in his power we live;
We know ourselves forgiven
By him who can forgive.
No charge is now against us,
While all things work for good;
We know ourselves accepted,
Because of Jesus' blood.

The Result of Ephraim's Sin.

"I will cast you out of my sight as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim. Therefore pray not for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me for I will not hear thee." Jer. vii. 15. "And chose not the tribe of Ephraim." Psa. lxxviii. 67. "For many are called but few are chosen."

There is a wonderful interest to the prophetic student, centering in the Holy Scriptures, as he gradually discerns and learns to understand the unfolding and fulfilment of prophecies in "all the words of this life" concerning the only begotten Son of God, Jesus of Nazareth,—"concerning me" says Jesus.

These truths are made plain by the Spirit of truth of whom Jesus promised that he should bring all things and all his words to the remembrance of his disciples while he was gone. "The Comforter, the Holy Spirit whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you," "for all things that I heard from my Father I have made known unto you." "But this cometh to pass that the word may be fulfilled that is written in their law, They hated me without a cause." Their cause was, he blasphemed, because he makes himself the Son of God. "But when the Comforter is come whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of Truth, which goeth from the Father, he shall bear witness of me, and ye also bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning. These things have I spoken unto you that ye should not be made to stumble. These things will they do because they have not known the Father nor me. But these things have I spoken unto you that when their hour is come ye may remember them how that I told you. And he (the Spirit of truth) when he is come will convict the world in respect of sin and of righteousness and of judgment. Of sin because they believe not on me.....Howbeit when he the Spirit of truth is come, he shall guide you unto all the truth, for he shall not speak from himself, but what things soever he shall hear, these shall he speak, and he shall declare unto you the things that are to come. He shall glorify me for he shall take of mine and shall declare it unto you." John xv. and xvi.

Truth hidden in the law and testimony, bound and sealed among his disciples, has, in this last hour been revealed through the Spirit of truth by a searching of the Scriptures and comparing spiritual things with spiritual, (or margin N. R.) interpreting spiritual things to spiritual men. 1 Cor. ii. 13. Paul unlocks many of the mysteries of prophecy when he shows that the true order of fulfilment is in "that which is natural is first, then that which is spiritual." He makes it plain that Israel was first naturally described then became allegorically, figure or shadow of something else. The apostles all agree in this, as note in the seven churches of Asia in Revelation, the teaching of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel; their doings were typical of a doctrinal error that some held in the church of Pergamos. Peter in his second Epistle, ii. 15, with Aaaaaaes to the same. So also Jude describes this teaching and says "they cast themselves away through the error of Balaam for hire, and perished in the gainsaying of Korah."

Discerning the natural and the spiritual, we find that literally Ephraim was a tribe in the church of God in the wilderness first, and afterward was a type of the doctrine of a sect of followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. "The watchman of Ephraim was with my God but the prophet is a snare of a fowler in all his ways and hatred against the house of his God; they have deeply corrupted themselves as in the days of Gibeah, therefore he will remember their iniquity, he will visit their sins. I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness, I saw your fathers as the first ripe in the fig tree at her first time, but they went to Baal-peor and separated themselves unto that shame and their abominations were according as they loved." "They joined themselves unto Baal-peor and ate the sacrifices of the dead. Thus they provoked him to anger with their inventions." Psa. cvi. 28, 29.)

So the prophet Hosea, in proclaiming the word of God declares, "When I would have healed Israel then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered and the evils of Samaria, for they commit falsehood, and the thief cometh in and the troop of robbers strippeth without (see margin) and they consider not in their hearts that I remember all their wickedness; now their own doings have beset them about, they are before my face. they make the king glad with their wickedness and the princes with their lies. Though I have redeemed them yet they have spoken lies against me. Because Ephraim hath made many altars to sin, altars shall be unto him to sin. Ephraim shall be desolate in the day of rebuke; among the tribes of Israel have I made known that which shall surely be."

Turn now to Revelation and note the sealed servants of God in the tribes of Israel," Judah, Reuben, Gad, Asher, Naphtalim, Manasses, Simeon, Levi, Issachar, Joseph and Benjamin; twelve is there, but neither Ephraim or Dan is among the 144 thousand of the first resurrection. These sought for immortality and obtained it, for on these the second death hath no power. Hearken to the sure word of prophecy which ye do well to take heed as unto a lamp shining in a squalid place until the day dawn and the daystar arise in your hearts. "As for Ephraim their glory shall fly away like a bird from the birth and from the womb and from the conception. I have written unto him the great things of my law but they were counted as a strange thing. For the wickedness of their doings I will drive them out of mine house, I will love them no more, all their princes are revolters."

"When Ephraim spake trembling, he exalted himself in Israel, but when he offended in Baal he died, and now they add to sin more and more and have made them molten images of their silver, and idols, according to their own understanding, all of it the work of the craftsmen; they say of them, let the sacrificers of men kiss the calves. (the holy command is to kiss the Son.) Therefore they shall be as the morning cloud and as the early dew that passeth away, as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor and as the smoke out of the chimney. Though he be fruitful among his brethren an east wind shall come, the wind of the Lord shall come up from the wilderness and his spring shall become dry and his fountain shall be dried up; he shall spoil the treasure of all vessels of desire Samaria shall become desolate for she hath rebelled against her God Ephraim feedeth on wind and followeth after the east wind; he daily increaseth lies and desolation. And Ephraim said, Yet I am become rich, I have found me out substance; in all my labors they shall find none iniquity in me that were sin."

"Ephraim shall receive shame and Israel shall be ashamed of his own counsel. Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone. I have seen a horrible thing in the house of Israel, there is the whoredom of Ephraim; Israel is defiled." "Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit; though they bring forth yet will I slay the desires of their womb. My God will cast them away because they did not hearken unto him and they shall be wanderers among the nations. I have also spoken by the prophets and I have multiplied visions and used similitudes by the ministry of the prophets; by a prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt and by a prophet was he preserved."

Ephraim provoked him to anger with bitterness, therefore shall he leave his bloods upon him and his reproach shall his Lord return unto him. "The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up (among my disciples), his iniquity is hid, (there is nothing hid that shall not be made known). The sorrows of a travailing woman shall come upon him; he is an unwise son for he should not stay a time (see margin) in the place of the breaking forth of children." I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death. O death I will be thy plagues, O grave I will be thy destruction, repentance shall be hid from mine eyes. Ephraim shall say (then), What have I to do any more with idols, neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods, for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy.....Who is wise and he shall understand these things, prudent and he shall know them, for the ways of the Lord are right and the just shall walk in them, but the transgressors shall fall therein." "The children of Ephraim being armed and carrying bows turned back in the day of battle. They kept not the covenant of God and refused to walk in his law, and forgot his works and his wonders that he had showed them, because they believed not in God and trusted not in his salvation." Psa. lxxviii.

The errors of typical Ephraim as made known through the prophets are plainly the errors of the church of God, in this "time of the end," made known in this hour of trial. There are many doctrinal points touched upon in Hosea's prophecy. Ephraim made a molten image to worship, while Dan took a graven image in his house as an idol; both are cast out of the house of God and do not obtain the prize of the high calling, which is immortality. Ephraim lost the crown by "fleeing from the birth, the womb and the conception" of Jesus of Nazareth, the only begotten Son of God Many other sons are his, in promise the number is 144,000, but they become sons by the spirit of adoption whereby we cry, Abba, Father. "For what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of flesh of sin, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the requirement of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus made me free from the law of sin and of death." "And if ye are Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, heirs according to the promise. When the fulness of the time came God sent forth his Son, born of a woman, born under the law that he might redeem them which were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons, and because ye are sons God sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts crying Abba Father."

Herein is shown the superiority of the birth of Jesus of Nazareth over the sons of Adam, he was the second Adam, born the Lord from heaven. "Ye have believed that I came forth from the Father. I came out from the Father and am come into the world." "I am the living bread which came down out of heaven; if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." "Doth this offend you to stumble, what then if ye should behold the Son of man ascending where he was before." Remember Ephraim "ate the sacrifices of the dead." And the sons of the first Adam were born of the earth, earthy, nothing heavenly about them, save the Spirit of promise that God in his great love for a lost world promised through the house of David of "a child is born a Son is given." "I will be his Father and he shall be my Son. They who reject the words of the prophets and refuse to walk in his law discard true doctrine, and make a fatal mistake for themselves, as they virtually deny the Father and the Son.

There is also another true doctrine shown here in this prophecy. It is the truth of the resurrection of the dead. "I will ransom them from the hand of the grave, I will redeem them from death." The sealed servants of God shows the number belonging to the first resurrection, they gain immortality, for over them the second death hath no power. They shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years. "And behold the Lamb standing on the Mount Zion and with him 144,000, having his name and the name of his Father written on their foreheads.....These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. (Follow me, said Jesus to his disciples, and they arose and followed him.) These were purchased from among men to be the first fruits unto God and unto the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no lie, they are without blemish." (They believed in the Father and in the Son and in the precious blood of the Passover Lamb)

John tells us that "no lie is of the truth." "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; over these the second death hath no power." This is the resurrection of the just. There is also a resurrection of the unjust. Says Paul, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." Says Jesus, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word and believeth him that sent me hath eternal life and cometh not into judgment, but hath passed out of death into life. Verily, verily, I say unto you the hour cometh and now is when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself even so gave he to the Son also to have life in himself, and he gave him authority to execute judgment because he is a son of man. Marvel not at this for the hour cometh in which all that are in the tombs shall hear his voice and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life and they that have done ill unto the resurrection of judgment."

"Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Here is plainly taught two classes of resurrected ones, the just and the unjust; the just have done good, the unjust have done ill; one receives everlasting life, the other, judgment, shame, contempt, but they are all resurrected ones. Now when God leaves Ephraim's blood upon him and yet ransoms him from the power of the grave, he must have what is generally termed a mortal emergence to come under judgment. "It is appointed unto man once to die, and after this the judgment;" judgment follows death to all but the sealed servants of God; there was no lie in them. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." But there is also a "second death" after the thousand years are finished, for "God willeth that all men shall be saved (ransomed from the grave) and shall come to a knowledge of the truth." "He that overcometh shall inherit these things and I will be his God (not Father as with the first resurrection) and he shall be my son." "But for the fearful and unbelieving and abominable and murderers and fornicators and sorcerers and idolaters and all liars, their part shall be in the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death."

It behooves us in the hour of trial to have a sound doctrine in Jesus Christ who is the way, the truth and the life, if we would inherit with the only begotten Son, heeding John's warning that "no lie is of the truth." Jacob's prophecy to his sons of what should befall them in the "last days," says, "Dan shall judge his people as one of the tribes of Israel; Dan shall be a serpent by the way, an arrow snake in the path, that biteth the horse heels so that his rider shall fall backward. I have waited for thy salvation O Lord." Turn to the wisdom of Solomon and read, "God made not death neither hath he pleasure in the destruction of the living." 1. 3 God created man to be immortal and made him to be an image of his own eternity. Nevertheless through envy of the devil came death into the world and they that do hold of his side do find it." Look up the Scriptures concerning Dan whose name means "judgment or he that judges."

"Dan shall judge his people as one of the tribes of Israel" and Dan loses the prize. "Judge not lest ye be judged." How often have our modern churches judged men to be lost, eternally lost, not seeing that judgment came after death was conquered, and after a knowledge of the truth during the day of judgment. But Dan did more than judge, "Dan shall be a serpent by the way." We know full well the serpent's teaching. "Ye shall not surely die. For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil." Ye shall not surely die even the second death is being taught during this last hour of trial for the elect. Satan is ever on the alert to deceive, and we must heed that we make no portion of God's word "void" in our doctrine and faith in Christ. This Gentile age is to "take out a people for his name," "a chosen people, a holy priesthood" to make up the number of the 144,000, in whose mouth was found no lie," see Rev. xiv. 1-5 inclusive, for judgment must begin at the house of God. Through the death of Christ, the head, the mystic Christ body are judged during Gentile times. The faithful and martyred Paul "feared lest by any means he might become a castaway." He knew what the influence and the power of the early teaching that he received at the feet of Gamaliel, holds over a person; this early traditional teaching must be largely discarded and the word of God must be held in its entirety. Alas for Ephraim when he came to the passes of Jordan he could not say "Shibboleth" which means "burden, ear of corn." "By their fruits ye shall know them."

LIQUOR AND WORKINGMEN.

Adalbert Beach, a Chicago Evening Journal compositor, makes the following sturdy contribution to the liquor question in the Rawlins (Wyo. T.) Laborette:

However large wages are earned by a workman, in whatever trade, profession or employment, he will not improve his condition materially if he patronizes the saloon. Many workingmen (including some Knights of Labor) spend more money for liquor than for bread. What is the use of earning large wages if the money is wasted for liquors that do the drinker no good? Every Knight of Labor should be a knight of saving. No liquor saloon has a right to exist on the patronage of workingmen. This saloon question is the great question, for with the money he spends in the saloons many a workman could in four years pay for a fine home, and his manhood would be preserved intact besides. The Knights of Labor should deal with the liquor problem. It is a question which vitally concerns them. Let the Knights of Labor and all the toilers shun the saloons and liquors of every kind. Let the proclamation go forth throughout the United States that the saloon no longer thrives by hard-earned money, and that odious institution is doomed.

What benefit do the saloons and saloon-keeper confer upon the community? Honest workingmen should not join with the gamblers, thieves, desperadoes and loafers to continue saloon-keepers in business. The liquor traffic never conferred one solitary benefit upon the laboring man since creation's dawn. The worst enemy of workingmen is the demon drink. Every saloon is a drunkard factory. Every place that sells liquor is sure to rob scores of men of everything which enlightened mankind holds dear; among which are purity, honor, character, talents, manly vigor, friends, position, wealth, home.

He is a true Knight of Labor who is in favor of a higher and better life in every sense of the term. Let there be a general advance along the line of all the manly virtues. Does a life of sensualities pay? That which is grossly sensual can not be for the good of the workingman. Liquor drinking, the use of intoxicants as a beverage, is a form of mere sensuality. Why? Because such indulgence is not necessary to man's happiness, and because, on the contrary, it brutalizes a man, steals away his brains and reduces his capacity for real happiness. It is not all of life to live. Happiness depends on the quality of life as well as on the quantity. A drunken or gluttonous or impure life is a just subject of reproach to any workingman. Boycott the saloon and all its allies.

INTERESTING JEWISH NOTES.

Arabia.—At the Geographical Society of Vienna, Dr. Edward Glaser delivered a lecture on Arabia. He asserted that the Jews living in Southern Arabia are descendants of the lost ten tribes, as Dyor and Hobar of the Bible, whither Shalmaneser carried the Jews, are to be found in that region of the world.

Africa.—Six months ago, Barberton, in the Transvaal, was a mere collection of Kaffir houses and mud huts; it has now a population of eight thousand, including some seventy Jews. Mr. Isaac Jacobs, a former resident of Mershyr, organized divine worship for the recent festivals, the services being well attended, although the gold fever is at its height at present.

Palestine.—Several roads of Palestine are at present under repair and will be put in good order, namely, from Akka along the shore to Beyroot, from Akka over Tiberias to Hauran, from Haifa to Nazareth, from Nazareth to Akka, from Nazareth to Yenin, and from Safed to Akka. The warm baths of Tiberias receive new walls, and a new building, and at Haifa a new iron landing, the only one on the Syrian shore.

England.—Speaking to a very large audience, the Bishop of Manchester, England, said that he dearly loved the Jewish race. If he had to select the race from which to be born, he would have selected to be born a Jew, cheerfully taking part in their reproach for the high honor of belonging to the blood of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, of Peter and Paul, and above all, of one who was greater than either.—From the Occident.

Thomas Guthrie, in speaking of home says: "Oh, how sweet is that word! What beautiful and tender associations cluster thick around it; compared with it, house, mansion, palace, are cold, heartless terms. But bound that word quickens the pulse, warms the heart, stirs the soul to its depths, makes age feel young again, rouses apathy into energy, sustains the sailor in his midnight watch, inspires the soldier with courage on the field of battle, and imparts patient endurance to the worn down sons of toil. The thought of home has proved a sevenfold shield to virtue; its very name has a spell to call back the wanderer from the paths of vice."

"The Gospel of Our Salvation and Kindred doctrines—as Life only through Christ—Resurrection of the dead—Second coming of Christ—The Kingdom of God, etc., will be faithfully preached every Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m., to which services we heartily invite the seeker after divine truth. This service will close at 11:30, after which the church will meet for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers." 178 Grand st., on first floor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

We must insist on our friends heeding these directions, for our mutual protection. Three Postal Notes have been wrong within a short time, and one of them for $2.50 is lost entirely. Two Money Orders have contained errors also, causing much annoyance and delay.

We are reminded most forcibly, because the source of our reminder is so closely connected with certain pleasurable personal memories, that the holidays are once more almost upon us.

It has been said, and truthfully so, "that the anticipation is often more pleasant than the event;" we think, however, and believe it to be generally so conceded, that the holidays form an exception to that saying. Who is it that does not enjoy the Christmas Holidays? It is not the poor, and most certainly not the rich. All have some joys, while all, for some unknown reason, seem to forget for the time being what sorrows they may have. It is indeed, and in truth, a festive season.

Our reminder is a fitly worded bill, the Official Proclamation of the Vandalia Line, to which we would call the attention of all our friends. The Vandalia officials evidently realize that we, the people, appreciate a liberal policy, and so continue the pursuit of the one adopted on our appreciatory call. The bill referred to declares that Friends Should Visit Friends. We all know from [illegible] experience how we enjoy visiting our friends, a visit from them, during Holiday week, so we can appreciate fully the declaration mentioned. The rate offered is One Fare and a third between all stations. Tickets are to be on sale and good going on December 24th and 25th, and on Dec. 31st and January 1st, all good to return including Jan. 3rd, 1887, allowing the liberal limit of eleven days.

Remember that by paying for THE RESTITUTION till Dec. 31, 1887 between now and Jan. 1887, you will receive free a Cabinet Photograph of Elder S. A. Chaplin, Editor of THE RESTITUTION, with his Autograph attached.

GOD KNOWS HIS OWN.

Today we meet with those we love,
Tomorrow place them with the dead;
But O, we hope to meet them soon
Where farewell tears will ne'er be shed.

Our friends in life, they seem so dear,
'Tis hard to bow beneath the rod;
But O, the stroke seems less severe,
The nearer we approach to God.

Who would not cry, O Jesus come!
Come, put an end to grief and pain!
O speed the time when friends shall meet,
Meet, nevermore to part again!

To those who now in Jesus sleep,
A song of triumph he will bring,—
"O grave, where is thy victory?
O mourner death, where is thy sting!"

O blessed thought, God knows his own,
If in the depths of sea or land,
And when the last fond tramp is flown,
They will appear at his right hand.

WILL THE DEAD EMERGE FROM THE GRAVE IMMORTAL?—No. 2.

A Discussion in which Carrie Williams affirms, they will, and the Editor denies—claiming the dead will emerge Mortal and be Judged before they receive Immortality.

Before entering upon the ground indicated in my last, I wish to call attention to a few items you failed to notice in your reply.

1. Why there is no mention of mortal resurrection in church history, either sacred or profane.

2. Why have you passed by unnoticed, the fact, that Christ was the first fruits of them that are asleep; and that he was declared to be the Son of God with the power of an endless life, by or through the act of resurrection from or out of the death state—not by a progressive growth during a second mortal life into a higher life? The angel said: "He is not here, he is risen." The verb (is risen) as here used in the passive form, expresses the action of resurrection as completed; and this was said of him before he said to Mary, "Touch me not."

3. Propositions three and ten were noticed because my attention was called to these points by leading Christadelphians in private letters, and they were presented as objections to my writings.

4. I [illegible] intend to pass by those [illegible] Cor. xv. 1–32. Be patient.

5. Why do you vainly endeavor to show that I admit "three stages" in the resurrection of Christ? You leave off the last clause of the middle paragraph on page 204, and thus quite alter the sense of what I say. Please reader, turn to the paragraph—last clause "and, third (prophecy not stage) that he raised him from the dead into that incorruptible condition wherein these promises could be fulfilled through him, before he had seen corruption." He was raised from the dead, and this clause merely tells in what condition that resurrection placed him, before he saw corruption. You utterly fail here to make a much desired point. There are no "three stages," we are simply told here that he was taken out of the grave, or death state, before corruption had taken hold of him. You and also your readers well know that there is no such phrase in the Book as "three stages." I believe the Word, but cannot such an unscriptural theory.

6. Yes, I say there is no mention that Jesus was begotten a second time, and you have not given proof that he was. You quote Rev. i. 5, as proof, when you must know that the word prototokos here translated begotten, signifies born. He was born from the dead, the first fruits of them that are asleep. We are begotten by the word of truth, his words, and we are (or will be) born from the dead into an incorruptible life, by resurrection. Christ at the first was begotten of the spirit; we are begotten of the flesh. Then, when we hear and believe his words we are begotten of the spirit. Christ knew no sin, we do. And the first step necessary for us to take, to get out of the sinful condition in which we all find ourselves, is to accept his words by faith. This is our spiritual begettal. He did not require this, for he always believed; he was always at one with the Father.

7. I only offered an opinion as to why Jesus said "Touch me not." Opinions have no weight come from whom they may. But note here that the word "gar," translated for, has not (according to Young) the sense of because, and therefore all your interrogative reasoning based on this assumption falls to nought. And too, all your speculation about Jesus ascending to a higher nature within eight days is wholly unwarranted, and without a shadow of Scripture evidence. Yet this seems to be the only Scripture you cling to, to try to prove that Jesus was raised to mortal life.

8. Why do you not explain how it was that the women held him by the feet at a very early hour that morning? If there was an "interdict" not to touch Jesus on account of his nature; it was removed very early that morning; not eight days after. See Matt. xxviii.

9. You say the whole question hinges on the meaning of the words, "I am not yet ascended." The first four pass without criticism. Let us look into the true original meaning of the fifth, ascended. By reference I find that the word "anabaino," here translated ascend, signifies "to go up or to come up," and every instance where the word occurs, it refers to some certain definite object, changing places, changing from a lower to a higher locality. But, nowhere has it the sense of the object, resolving or changing within itself into a superior nature. Mr. Williams, this is the undeniable testimony of revelation, and this turn of the "hinge" leaves you outside of inspiration. See a few of the many references I might give, John i. 51; xx. 17; Acts ii. 35; xxv. 1; Rom. xx. 6; Rev. vii. 2; Luke xiv. 28 and Eph. iv. 8.

10. 2 Tim. iv. 1; "I testify in the sight of God and Christ Jesus who shall judge the quick and dead, both of his appearing and his kingdom." It. Y. This one text ought to be sufficient to silence every mortal resurrectionist on their assumed theory. Jesus will judge the quick and dead. Here are two classes distinctly spoken of, by the inspired penman. One is the quick—the then living who shall by him be judged worthy to be changed from mortality to immortality: and the other class is those who are asleep, the dead in Christ whom he shall then judge worthy of being called forth to incorruptible life. They are not called forth to be wrought up by stages into an incorruptible condition; they are called forth in that condition. They come forth incorruptible. Now, sir, please tell your readers where you find divine authority to resolve these two classes into one? and this you certainly do, when you assert that all shall be living and assembled around the throne before they are judged. Will you please attend to these points as I have noted them. They all bear directly on the subject under discussion. If you cannot sustain your position by the written word give it up honorably, and your adherents will soon follow you. But do not try to pass by these items in silence. Romans viii., I will look at in due time, I must now return to 1 Cor. xv.

Paul in this chapter recapitulates what before he had preached to the Corinthians, as the gospel, by a knowledge and obedience of which they would be saved if they continued therein. The first leading thought presented by Paul is, that the Scriptures were fulfilled in the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ; as testified by hundreds of living witnesses, himself included. Down to verse 20 he reasons with the Corinthians both negatively and affirmatively, on the resurrection of Christ. Then he boldly affirms the fact that Christ hath been raised from the dead and become the first fruits of them that are asleep. Then he shows them that death came through Adam; and as all that are in existence through him, their progenitor, die; so, all that are in Christ (by faith, as this is the only means of getting into Christ) shall be made alive. Here Paul impresses the thought of order. Christ the first fruits, then (or next) they that are his at his coming. This is God's order; and who shall dare lift their voice against the Most High?

First, Christ's resurrection, and second, they that are his, his chosen ones for whom he comes, to whom he appears the second time without sin unto salvation. In this order there is nothing said about any one coming forth who was not asleep in Jesus, and it is written: "There is, therefore, now no condemnation, or judgment, to them that are in Christ Jesus," Rom. viii. 1. You cannot get away from this testimony. It stands. From verses 24 to 29 Paul takes a prophetic glance through the vista of the ages down to the time when all things shall have been subdued by the Son, and he himself have become subject to the Father. Then in verse 29 and 30 he argues, that if these things, i. e., the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ are not facts, to be believed, why are they then baptised for the dead? i. e., for the benefits to be derived from the death of Christ, and why do we—with the same hope of resurrection through him if it be not true that he rose—stand in jeopardy every hour? Then Paul soliloquizes. If these things are not so, my faith, and suffering on account of that faith, amounts to nothing, and so "Let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die."

Again he turns to the Corinthians and says, verse 33, "Be not deceived, evil companionship corrupts good morals." He knew how they had been led astray, and how stupefied they seemed on account of the errors they had imbibed from false teachers: he exhorts them to "awake to soberness and sin not." Evidently the sin here alluded to was that of overlooking God's wondrous and Almighty power, as manifested on every hand through the visible creation, and like a competent teacher, Paul takes them step by step from almost the lowest tracings of the divine hand, up to the gorgeous solar crown of the visible creation. The question contained in verse 35, doubtless suggested to Paul's mind this mode of reasoning. To these doubting Corinthians it seemed a thing impossible that that which had ceased to live could be brought again to life. Paul very wisely does not attempt to tell how this work is accomplished; for it is not revealed. But he endeavors to lead their minds gradually up, through the visible creation, to that sublime truth he had been advocating—the resurrection of the dead—and as it were, he selects ten stones, stepping stones, hewn and polished by Omnipotent power, each stone bearing on its face the indisputable impress of an Almighty hand. And with these stones Paul erects a pyramid, in vindication of him whose power to raise the dead is called in question. The first stone in the structure is the sowing and raising of grain; and here I assert on the authority of divine testimony, that the operations of nature in this branch of her work is not taken to illustrate the resurrection of the dead; but the Almighty power of Jehovah.

EDITOR'S REPLY.

1. In reply to the first question in the foregoing, we will say:—Church history, outside the New Testament, is useless in the settlement of doctrinal subjects. Even if church history, written by men, were full of accounts of discussion upon the question under consideration, that would be no more of a criterion than the endless disputes on the doctrine of the Trinity are in the settlement of the Scriptural truth that there is but one God. We must therefore ask to be excused from wasting our limited space in talking about church history, and request that "the law and the testimony" be the only standard in this discussion. We will say this, however, that Mrs. Williams' statement that "there is no mortal resurrection in church history" shows that she is not as well informed in that branch of literature as she pretends to be. But why does Mrs. W. take so much consolation in her supposition that history never mentions mortal resurrection? It must be that she thinks it a strong argument against that doctrine. She does not see that in her eagerness to pull the string tight enough to choke the view she is contending against, she struggles one in which she herself believes. Let me ask you Mrs. Williams, do you think that because mortal resurrection is not (as you suppose) mentioned in history till "within the last half of the nineteenth century" that therefore it was never known or taught? If so, then what about the resurrection of the unjust? Did the apostles teach the resurrection of the wicked? If so, as you will admit, then did they teach that theirs will be a mortal resurrection? Tell us then in your next whether the Scriptures teach the mortal resurrection of the wicked; and if so, please give chapter and verse. When you have done this, we will show you that the very text you quote will also apply to the just as far as their emergence from the grave is concerned.

2. There is no issue upon Christ being the "first fruits." That is, if Mrs. Williams understands that he is the first fruits of the new creation—the immortal state. The question is, when did he become immortal? and will the dead emerge from the grave immortal? I notice that Mrs. Williams says, in speaking of Jesus becoming the first fruits that it was "not by a progressive growth," but this is only her assertion. Emergence from the grave, as we have shown, is one thing, immortalization—becoming the first fruits, or the after fruits of the new creation is another. Many emerged from the the grave before Christ, but they did not become the first fruits of the new creation. The unjust will emerge from the grave—will have a resurrection, but it will be to a second death. Let us stop and think a little here now. The Savior says that two classes shall "come forth," John v. 29, one to life and the other death. What death do the wicked come forth to? Eternal death. What life do the good come forth to? Eternal life. So far Mrs. Williams will say yes. Do not the words "come forth to," imply in the case of the wicked that they emerge from the grave in a nature capable of being punished with death? and is not the receiving of the punishment, after the coming forth? The only answer that can be given is, yes. Then do not the words "come forth to," in relation to the good, upon the same principle show that the receiving of the life eternal is after the emergence also?

Hard pressed must our friend feel before she would snatch at the words "he is risen" to prove that Jesus was immortalized. In other cases, such as in the word ascend, Mrs. ——, she has manifested a fondness for going to the originals, but seems to have passed unnoticed in this case that the words "is risen" are from the Greek egeiro, which is applied to cases where it would be very straining to Mrs. Williams' eyes to read between the lines the idea of immortalization as she seems to have done in the one case alluded to. Take for instance John xi. 23, where Jesus says: "Thy brother shall rise (egeiro the same word rendered is risen in Mark xvi. 16) again." Supposing our worthy friend had gone to the grave of Lazarus after his resurrection, and heard an angel say, "he —Lazarus is not here—he is risen," would she have understood that Lazarus was raised to immortality? Certainly not. Why then, does she attempt in the case in hand to load down these two little words with a burden they are not intended to carry. Is it not because she finds herself short of words in the Scriptures to bear the clumsy theory she is trying to support? The words "is risen," are applied to Jesus before his death, where not the remotest idea of immortalization is found. Notice the following: "And there came a fear on all; and they glorified God, saying, that a great prophet is risen among us," Luke vii. 16. We are sorry to waste time in replying to such trifling with words, but have dealt with this case in the hope that Mrs. W., will improve in the future.

3. Please do not, in this discussion, answer these "private letters," but keep to the point, and answer these public letters.

4. We are pleased to learn now, that you do not intend to pass by the fifteen verses in 1 Cor. xv. 35–52. If you did it before without intending it we will pitifully excuse you and be "patient."

5. Of course we do not claim that the phrase "three stages" is in the Bible, but what of that? It is not a question of mere words. Let the reader turn and see if your statement suffers in the least by leaving off the last clause. It matters not whether we use the words "three prophecies" or "three stages." You have "First, that he "was raised up, or manifest in the flesh," which is one prophecy fulfilled, and therefore one stage in the raising up. You have "Second, that he raised him from the dead that he might fulfil in him the promises made to David, which promises reached out beyond this mortal life into the eternal ages," which is another prophecy fulfilled, and therefore the second stage in the raising up of Christ towards the pinnacle of the power and glory to which he has attained; and you have "third, that he raised him from the dead into that incorruptible condition wherein these promises could be fulfilled through him before he had seen corruption." Christ is therefore first born into the world. Second, raised from the dead, and third, raised into the incorruptible nature. Now as we said in our last, if you will stay here, our dispute so far as Christ is concerned is at an end.

6. It matters not whether prototokos signifies born, or begotten. We will not quibble about mere words. You certainly will not deny that Jesus was begotten from the dead, neither will I deny that he was born from the dead. Mrs. Williams talks about Jesus being born first of woman, and second born from the dead, or that there are two births which certainly implies in some sense two begettals.

7. Yes, I know you only offered an opinion; and that opinion which substituted another reason for the one the Savior gave why Mary was not to touch him was what we complained about. You say the word rendered for has not the sense of because. Let us notice a few instances where the word for is from the Greek word gar: "Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Spirit," Matt. i. 20.. "And thou shalt call his name Jesus for he shall save his people from their sins," verse 21. Take the first seven instances given by Young, and see if the because cannot be substituted and still the same ideas expressed. When Jesus said, "Touch me not for, it certainly means because, or for the reason, "I have not yet ascended."

We have scarcely commenced to give our texts yet. We are "clinging" to this and others to which you call our attention, because you being in the affirmative, we are following you to show that you cannot vindicate the theory of immortal emergence from the texts you quote.

8. There is nothing for me to explain as to "how it was that the women held him by the feet." It is you that have made the mistake in supposing that I claim that Jesus ascended to the divine nature eight days after his resurrection. I have not said so. What I said was that his ascent must have been between the interview with Mary and that with Thomas. Grant that the reason why Mary was not to touch him "was removed very early in the morning," my position still stands that after he saw Mary he was the subject of what was meant by the message she was to bear to the brethren, viz: "I ascend unto my Father."

9. The ascent could not have been his bodily ascent to heaven because that did not take place till forty days after. We claim no more for the word anabaino than we do for the word ascend as it is commonly used. It has the meaning of rise up. The context must always decide whether it means to rise up from a lower place to a higher, from a low state to a higher, or from a low nature to a higher nature. In the case in hand, it cannot be made to apply to anything but to the ascent from the mortal to the immortal nature.

10. Mrs. Williams thinks 2 Tim. iv. 1, ought to settle the question. Well let us see how it settles it. The text declares that the living and the dead are to be judged at Christ's appearing. This fixes the time when the judgment is to take place. Now the Mrs. Williams, when Christ comes, the quick or living will consist of good and bad, will they not? and therefore in the case of the good, will they not also be judged before they are rewarded? This being the case with the living, will not the same be true of the dead? Do they not stand before the judgment seat before they receive the reward? Paul declares: "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ that every one may receive the things in body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad." If this teaches anything, it is that there will be a standing up of the dead in bodies capable of receiving good or bad. What can the bad be but death? Therefore they will stand in mortal bodies. What will the good be but eternal life? Therefore the good will appear not in immortal bodies before they are judged, but in bodies in which they will "receive," after judgment, the reward, which is eternal life, Romans ii. 6, 7, 10.

With reference to our affirmative argument last month, on Rom. viii. 11, all that Mrs. Williams says is that she will notice it in due time. One would have thought that "due time" would have been in her next reply. So we again call her attention to the fact that those to whom Paul wrote were to have been their mortal bodies quickened—made alive. His words have never been fulfilled. Their mortal bodies do not exist. In order therefore for their mortal bodies to be quickened they must stand again in mortal bodies, and so by this text to start with in our affirmative argument, we prove mortal emergence.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath.

—By L. C. Thomas.—

Title page.—"The Law, the Covenants; and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various Other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead to its authority. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lucidly examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 320 pages, Cloth bound. Price $1.00. Orders may be sent to THE RESTITUTION Office.

THE COMING AGE,

—ITS—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. Westbrk.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of fulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand is the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Omnipotent Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in cloth. Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

Or, A Scriptural View of the Second Coming of Christ, with the Wonderful Signs that will Precede it, and the still more Wonderful Things that will Follow it.

—By Silas Henn.—

NOTICES AND RECOMMENDATIONS:

The book is truthful, reverent and instructive, every way worthy of the attention of those who prefer calm argument to sensational speculation.—The Rainbow.

We are desirous to express our sympathy with the general scope of the book, and to bespeak for it a wide and cordial reception.—The Messenger.

The volume before us is evidently the product of a thoughtful mind, and deserves the careful study of every Christian, being of a very comprehensive character, and based on Scripture. Certainly it is the best work on the subject which has come under our notice.—The Lydney Observer.

The treatment shows that the author has studied well and patiently digested his theme before writing upon it, and we feel as we read page after page, stimulated rather than clogged in our inquiry..... The aim of the volume before us is to set the truth clearly before the mind, and so restore to its place in the consciousness of the church the hope that was once so dear to God's suffering saints, and is still so to many, but which is always unwelcome to a wealthy, cold and formal church, and hated by the world. This little volume will be received and read with pleasure by all who take interest in prophetic subjects.—Rev. Nathaniel West, D. D.

A Glance Inward. No. 2.

It is hard some times to tell what is right, what is the best and the safest course to pursue: we look at the difficulties in the way of Christian endeavor, at the environment of circumstances that surround us, and then up to God, crying, "Father! what wouldst thou have me to do?"

"Do all that your hands can do,"—"hasten the coming of the day of the Lord," "help prepare a people for his name," "call out those who are to rule with Christ in the coming age," "keep the scattered ones awake," "do with your might, whatever your hands find to do"—is the answer to our prayer.

If it is hard to tell what is right "do the hard thing and wait on me;" "in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength," says Jehovah!

If circumstances are against us, they were against Christ; he did not find the road an easy one, nor did Paul. Heroes are only made by the winning of many battles. Dealing with cross and selfish people, and being patient with them, is our dealing in what Master Christians; not only of them, but of us. God puts us into hard places that we may show what it is to be Christians, "The soft answer, turneth away wrath." The grace of patience can never be won, where there is nothing to be patient about. It is not very pleasant to be caught in a storm or storm even of words, but if endured, it cannot do us any harm. It gives one robe to wear on such occasions. And on all occasions.

Patience and kindness long persevered in, will even the most stubborn human heart, in time. And we, we are not half as gentle and kind conduct as words, if we bear all patiently and give good deeds and pleasant answers in return.

I have read of disagreeable people being "killed by kindness" such a victory, were well worth the trial of a life time. There is one thing certain, we can never "kill" such people "by giving as good as they send." "Angry words stir up strife." Blows provoke blows in return.

In "the good fight," we can "take our own part" best by "bearing all things; enduring all things." We never cure other people, by making ourselves as disagreeable as they are. It is only by doing right ourselves that we can get other people to do right.

Make a beautiful picture of your life and some body will want to be like you. Leave the untoward circumstances and difficulties of life in God's hands and go ahead.

There must be no standing still, when the restoration of Israel is being accomplished before our very eyes, and the Master just at the door. If God thought an easy place would best fit us for the kingdom he would give us an easy place. The very difficulties, and unpleasant things in life, are the things that are to school us, until we are educated into the possession of the calmness of Christ,—"the meek and quiet Spirit," that is worth more than Vanderbilt's millions.

It takes men and women who have been schooled in the pinching cold of Arctic affliction, to be instruments in God's hands for rescuing others from the wrath about to be poured out on an ungodly world.

It is thus that he "sweetens the waters," "before we stoop to drink," and when our "Marahs must be Marahs, he stands beside the brink."

But, was the Savior tempted as we are? Was he so beset, hindered, oppressed? Follow him every where, from Nazareth to Calvary and see, and let his course be made the pattern for ours. You will remember how, in his own city, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, and how the Scribes said of him in their hearts "this man blasphemeth," because he, knowing that sin stands behind and is the cause of all disease, forgave the man his sin, that he might become well.

It was as easy, he said, to say one thing as the other; in either case his power to forgive sin was proved, if he said "go to your house," and the sick man recovered and went, it showed that his sins were pardoned; yet for thus demonstrating the authority and power that he had received from the Father he was thought to be a blasphemer! Again on a certain day, when he sat at meat, some people, whose lives were not just what they ought to be, came in and sat down with him. They felt the burden of sin, and sought him, that they might be pardoned. "Oh ho! said the wicked Pharisees, to his disciples, what makes your Master endanger his reputation by eating with such sinners?" Did the Savior get angry? Did he reply with venomous, stinging words? Did he even leave the table, for fear that his reputation might suffer? not at all, calmly come the blessed words of hope, for the poor burdened ones,—"It is the sick, that need a physician! I came to call sinners to repentance! Though watched, hated, and set apart for destruction, Jesus did not stop to quarrel, did not relax his efforts, he did not become discouraged and give up the battle. To be called Beelzebub, was a hard thing, but he bore it meekly.

He had come "to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom," "to cast out devils by the Spirit of God," "to send forth judgment unto victory," to make the Gentiles trust in his name, and to bind the strong man and spoil his house! and he kept at work despite the sneers of Scribe and Pharisee.

There might even be a Judas among his disciples, but he let Judas alone, and kept about his Father's business.

To "do the Father's will," was the actuating thought of his life. Though "He had not where to lay his head," the Father would feed and clothe and heal him up. No need of turning stones into bread, or of bowing in adoration at Satan's feet, the dazzling splendors of earthly rule would be his by and by; he would be patient, and bide his time.

This then must be our pleasure. The power to make the wrong go right is not in our hands. Evil men will have their way a little while longer. But, while they are having their way and waxing worse, we must be about "the Father's business" and be growing better. We must submit to the schooling, to the discipline. It takes heavy strokes to make stubborn people patient. We can, we do submit, dear Father! These wilful hearts must be thine: must be made thine, by being melted in the crucible of love.

Can we ever love enough? Can we, who have had so much forgiven, love much, forgive much? I feel ashamed, as I write the words! A pardoned child find fault with others! "The sick need a physician," not "a vulture's bill," to "pick at flaws!" We are to "walk honestly toward them that are without," defrauding none in the matter of wages, or in the gold of truth. But do we not often defraud people of the truth brethren? Do we not withhold it from them, from cowardice or covetousness? Let us look at this matter closely: the glances inward, heart-ward, must be faithfully made, because the reaping time is coming soon, and there is no getting away from the fact that we shall reap what we have sown.

Truth can only be given wings by the sacrifices of men, and sacrifices must be made that it may be given wings.

It will do no good to say "give" to others, if we do not give, to say to others "live right" if we do not live right. The seed of truth must be borne abroad and sown, though it be at the cost of tears of bitter self-denial, that only our Lord may know.

The farmers of Palestine, literally sow in tears. The seed that they carry out, is "precious," because there is very little left at home for bread. It is a terrible sacrifice, to cast the grain into the ground, that is so sorely needed by their families, but though the farmer goes out weeping to sow, he knows that by and by he will "come rejoicing bringing in the sheaves." That is the spirit that we need, who has it? Who will bear with Jesus "the burden and heat of the day?" Who will suffer the loss of all things for the sake of "the sweet by and by?"

S. ROXANA WIRTH.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Luke xvii. 21: "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, Lo, here! or, there! for lo, the kingdom of God is within you." On this passage we observe, first, the sense usually put upon the word observation, is not the true sense. It is explained to mean "pomp, splendor, or outward show," and hence it is inferred that the kingdom cannot be a visible kingdom; that it does not come so as to be seen, and is not accompanied with any outward show. But some of the greatest scholars give as the correct meaning of the original, "the act of perceiving or observing," "scrupulous attention or observation." And as the meaning of the English word, Walker gives, "the act of observing, noting, or remarking;" so that the sense usually put upon it is calculated to deceive those who do not examine it for themselves. Scripture teaches that Christ will come as a thief in the night; that in such an hour as men think not the Son of man cometh. His appearance will burst upon the world suddenly as a flash of lightning; and remember, Scripture associates the kingdom with his appearance. When the King comes thus unexpectedly—he is about to claim the whole world as his kingdom. It is not a thing, therefore, that men can quietly and leisurely observe, or note, or perceive, while it is in the act of coming. This is the true meaning of the phrase, "cometh not with observation;" and when men fasten a sense upon it which it will not bear, in order to sustain a preconceived theory, it evinces the weakness of their cause. But though the kingdom will come without observation, yet when it is come it will be observed. Van Oosterzee says, "Not seldom has the saying that 'the kingdom of God comes without observation' been misused and exaggerated, in the sense that this kingdom will never on earth display itself in a glorious form worthy of itself. No: the kingdom of God comes not with observation, but when it has once come, we shall nevertheless be well able to say: Lo, here!"

Second, in regard to the phrase, "the kingdom of God is within you," it was proven by many Biblical scholars, long before the appearance of the Revised Version, that the original words would bear another rendering, and that rendering is now given in the margin of the Revised Version: "in the midst of you;" that is, as a nation, or a people. And this accords with Matt. xii 28: "But if I by the Spirit of God cast out devils, then is the kingdom of God come upon you." Christ's power to work miracles was evidence that he had power to establish the kingdom, and thus it came upon them; in the offer of it to them it also came upon them. The interpretation then that accords with the analogy of Scripture is, that the kingdom of God was within them, or in the midst of them, as a people, in the sense that it was preached to them, and offered to them on the condition that, as a nation, they would repent. But they would not repent, and so the kingdom was not set up. That the word "within," in the text, could not possibly be used in the sense in which writers and preachers try to make men believe it was used, in the sense of "God's reign in the heart,"—how could it be within them? It was the devil's reign that was within them rather than God's.

Rom. xiv. 17: "For the kingdom of God is not eating and drinking; but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." No exposition of this passage can be the true one which will not agree with the scope of Scripture teaching. What the drift of Scripture teaching is, we have seen, and therefore the common interpretation will not harmonize with it. The probable meaning is, that the kingdom of God will not be one where we may indulge our present bodily appetites, but where our happiness and joy will be derived from obedience, holiness, and fellowship with God. That this interpretation accords best not only with the tenor of Scripture, but with the context, will be readily seen by reading the verses preceding this, where the apostle refers to the dispute which prevailed among some in reference to the eating of meat which some accounted unclean.

Col. i. 13: "Who delivered us out of the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love." By the former part of this passage reference is made to our deliverance from sin, or to our conversion to Christ; but at that stage of our salvation we can only be translated into the kingdom in the sense of becoming heirs to it and receiving our title to it. And making our election sure by faithfulness, our entrance into the kingdom is so certain, so determined in the divine mind, that it is spoken of as a present reality. In Rom. iv. 17, Paul tells us that God "calleth the things that are not, as though they were." And this Alford says, "is a general attribute of all God's words concerning things of time: past, present, and future, being to his Omnipotence and Omniscience, all one. His purposes, when formed, are accomplished, save in so far as their evolution of secondary causes and effects intervenes, which is also his purpose. In conformity with this principle the apostle in Rom. viii. 30, says, "Whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified." Now it is in the future, at the appearing of Jesus, when believers will be glorified; yet their glorification as well as their justification is put in the past tense in view of its being real and fixed in the counsel of God. Only on this principle, therefore, can the above passage be interpreted to maintain the harmony of Scripture.

Rev. i. 9: "I John, your brother and partaker with you in the tribulation and kingdom and patience which are in Jesus." The scope of the numerous passages we have quoted putting the kingdom in the future, demands an explanation of this that will be in harmony with them. Here are two more, not previously quoted, both on the same line, confirming our remark. Acts xiv. 22: "Confirming the souls of the disciples, exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that through many tribulations we must enter into the kingdom of God." This puts the kingdom after the tribulations, not contemporaneous with them. 2 Tim. ii. 12: "If we endure, we shall also reign with him." This also puts reigning with Christ, or being joint-heirs with him in the kingdom, after the enduring, or subjection, or bearing trial and suffering, and not taking place at the same time. John, therefore, must not be explained to mean that he was a partaker in the kingdom at the same time that he was a partaker in the tribulation. When we partake in the kingdom, we shall have done for ever with tribulation. No interpretation should be accepted which places John in opposition to Paul and other Scripture writers. Many expositors think the sense intended was that John with other believers, was a partaker in the tribulation and "in the hope of the kingdom." And this was simply a Jewish mode of speaking. If a convert was made from Gentilism, the Jews regarded him as "admitted into the kingdom of heaven, or, of God," by which they simply meant that as an adopted son, he had become "entitled to the kingdom." So John, having faith in the Christ, and in the Messianic kingdom, did not doubt his title to it.

"THE DEAD."

Ever since death has entered upon his grim reign the question has been raised in one form or another as to the length of time he shall hold his power over his subjects. Human speculation upon this matter is fruitless where it fails to lead enquiry to him who instituted death. From this source we learn with uniform consistency that death is the wage of sin. We have therefore the two things to look at in any attempt to answer the question, "If a man dies shall he live again?" It seems natural and fair to conclude that wherever there is sin death must follow, and that wherever death takes place sin has preceded it. The wage cannot be paid before it is due nor can it be justly withheld where it is due. When justly given it cannot be recalled, as that would imply that injustice had been done to him who was recalled. Of such it is written in words of terrible import "They are dead, they shall not live; deceased, they shall not rise: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Isa. xxvi. 14.

Of this class there is no further resurrection. They have been visited by the Supreme Judge with effacement from memory. They are now as though they had never been. They are set forth as examples suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. An example or sample is part of a whole, detached from the whole, to make the whole more perfectly understood by all who see it. The example and the whole will correspond to each other. The old world which was destroyed by water is of this kind, and so also is the judgment upon Sodom and Gomorrah, and other judgments recorded. Men were judged, condemned and executed by divine visitation. All these we look upon as final and the subjects of them consigned to the congregation of the dead who shall not rise. But there is another class of dead spoken of in this chapter and called "Thy dead." Of them it is affirmed that they shall live. "Thy dead body shall they arise." These are invited to awake and sing, because their dew shall be as the dew of herbs; and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. xxvi. 19. The time contemplated here is first a time of casting out the dead and then of separation after, as the command goes out "Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood and shall no more cover her slain." This is manifestly a time of the dead when the righteous dead shall arise to everlasting life, and the unrighteous to the punishment and contempt due to their deeds. Notwithstanding this affirmation and many others to the same import, many still "Deny that there shall be no resurrection of the dead." To some of this class who once entered Jesus he replied "You err not knowing the Scriptures, or the power of God: for when they shall rise from the dead they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels which are in heaven. And as touching the dead that they rise; have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him saying, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? He is not the God of the dead but the God of the living: ye therefore do greatly err." From this statement it is clear that those who are not heirs of everlasting life are without God in whatever state they may exist.

But some have affirmed that the dead shall not be judged. To those who affirm so the reply of Jesus to the Sadducees applies for in the final revelation given this is twice affirmed of them, Rev. xi. 18; and xx. 12, 13.

The dead, therefore, whether righteous or unrighteous, we judge in view of these affirmations shall be raised up again that each one may be rewarded according to his deeds. Jesus taught that this reward included the life or death of those judged, Matt. xvi. 27. The inheritance or non-inheritance of his Father's Kingdom, Matt. xxv. 36 and 46. The resurrection to life of those who have done good and the resurrection to condemnation of those who have done evil, John v 28, 29. And he commanded his apostles to preach unto the people and to testify that it is he who is ordained of God to judge the living and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, Acts x. 42; 1 Tim. iv. 1.

There is in addition to those already mentioned a very large class who have neither done good nor evil, who are in the congregation of the dead, but as it has not pleased the Creator to speak of these, we care not to intrude with our speculations. The general principle given by the apostle seems to meet their case, viz. "That as many as have sinned without law shall perish without law, and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law in the day when God shall judge the secret things of men, by Jesus Christ according to the gospel preached by Paul, Rom. ii. 7 to 16.

Life therefore is the gift of God, whether by creation or redemption; and in like manner death is the punishment of disobedience under every law which God has given. The death of children in infancy as well as the various abnormal conditions of the human family, must be traced to the same cause, either directly or indirectly.

Death is not an arbitrary nor artificial punishment. It cannot therefore be removed without, first the removal of the cause. It has come and rests upon all men under the administration of him the habitation of whose throne is justice, and judgment, and before whose face mercy and truth go forth. The righteous Judge of all the earth. Every one therefore who is under condemnation to die, is under that condemnation justly. The supposition of injustice or even the absence of favor to any one destroys the possibility of faith in the Ruler under whose law the dead have suffered.

The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away (his gift) blessed be the name of the Lord, must be the spontaneous expression of those who have possessed his favors for a longer or shorter time. But there is a time spoken of when there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying. Yes, that time refers not to those who have perished, as they have perished for ever, and have become as though they had not been. Death has not been arbitrarily introduced and we judge it will never be arbitrarily removed. Death is the effect of which disobedience is the cause. This cause must first be removed in every cause before the effect can cease. This cause cannot be removed arbitrarily any more than the effect. The cause being an illegal act it must be removed by a corresponding legal act. If the unjust actor suffers for his unjust act his case is settled for ever. In the matter therefore of his freedom from the effect of his own act he is helpless, and much more so for that of his brother's. For no man can redeem his brother nor give to God a ransom for him, Psa. xlix. 7.

The disobedient cannot undo his disobedience, nor remove the effect of the disobedience of his father. The Redeemer of man must do three things as the foundation for human redemption before one single disobedient one can be saved from the effect of his own act. First he must bring into existence one man related to himself as his father on the one hand, and related to the disobedient one by his mother on the other. This one is thus free from the cause of death, and also from all the effects which stand related to that cause. Second, the Redeemer must perfect this new man under law that he may be holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from the disobedient for whom he is to give his life. Third, this man must give his just life up to death for the unjust lives of those who are condemned to death. Thus we have the counterpart of the disobedient in every detail.

An uncondemned life instead of a condemned one. A perfect obedient man for a disobedient one. A voluntary submission to death by sacrifice for the involuntary subjection to death of a criminal. The raising from the dead on the third day of him who suffered voluntarily is in strict accordance with justice to him, as it was impossible that he could be held in death, there being no cause against him when he died. Nay, more, in his death he performed an act of unparalleled service of obedience to his Father, the Redeemer, for which he has rewarded him with a name that is above every name, that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of those in the heavens and in the earth, and those under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that he is Lord (of the dead and the living) to the glory of God the Father—Phil. ii. 8, 9, 10; Rom. xiv. 9. In this way hath God himself through Jesus Christ abolished death (the cause of) and brought life and incorruptibility to light through the gospel, 2 Tim. i. 10. Every believer of the gospel therefore is these and then set free from the cause of death. If he abides faithful unto death he shall receive the crown of life, but if unfaithful he will die the second death.

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months thereafter.

TO CORRESPONDENTS!

The Restitution advocates the final accomplishment of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the everlasting destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the gospel, repentance, and baptism as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Book of Jobab, called Job, Son of Zare, Son of Hetzuel, Son of Hesun, Son of Isaac, Son of Habraam.—According to the Septuagint.

CHAP. XXXII.

1. And Job ceased speaking and his three friends had no answer any further to make to Job: for Job was right (just) in their sight.

2. And Elious, the Son of Barachiel, the Boulite, of the kindred of Hram, of the Ausitic land became wrathful, and he was very wrathful at Job because he had made himself out to be just in the sight of the Lord.

3. And he was very wrathful against his three friends because they were not able to answer Job antithetically and make him out to be irreverent.

4 And Elious waited patiently for them to give Job an answer, because they were older in days than he.

5. And Elious saw that there was no answer in the mouth of the three men, and he became outspoken in his wrath.

6. And Elious, the son of Barachiel, the Boulite, taking up the discourse, said:

7. I am a younger in time and ye are elders: Therefore have I kept still because I was afraid to tell you my positive knowledge.

8 ... is it not time that I talketh plainly? And in many years they surely know wisdom.

9. But there is a spirit in mortals and a breath of an Almighty is that which teacheth.

10. Much time is not wise nor do old men know judgment (a verdict of it, that is the result of reasoning judicially).

11. Therefore said I, hear me and I will tell you what I know. Mark my words well. For I will speak while ye listen unto some point, where ye may try words.

12. And until I understand you, and lo it is because no one of you was convicting Job by answering his spoken words.

13. And that ye may not say, we have found this: we have supplemented the Lord's wisdom;

14. And may not turn away to speak such words to a man.

15. As that they were astounded, they made no further answer, they waxed old at their words.

16. I waited, for I had not spoken: they were standing and made no answer.

17. And Elious taking up the discourse saith,

18. I will talk back, for I am full of words; yea the spirit of my belly hath undone me.

19 And my belly is like a wine skin that is tied up and fermenting with sweetness, or like a coppersmith's bellows that hath burst.

20 I will talk that I may get rest by having opened my lips.

21. For I need not be awed to shame by a man, nor need I be confounded at a mortal.

22. For I know enough not to gaze in awe at faces. If I do not, even moths may devour me.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed please find two dollars for my dear RESTITUTION for the year 1887. I have been a steady subscriber to it since Bro. Joseph Marsh started it as the Voice of Truth in Rochester, N. Y. The blessed hope it teaches grows bright and better as we draw nearer to its consummation. I have just had a few days visit from my old friend and Bro. J. T. Cogley. His health is very poor, having had a severe fall some years since, still he loves to preach the inheritance of the saints and is preaching the blessed return of the Master to bestow upon us immortality, as promised in his Word, in the county about eight miles north of here. I am old and nearly worn out, but hope soon to be young again when the Master comes. Wife joins me in Christian love to all the waiting ones. Your Bro. waiting for Israel's King. OLIO, W. CHERRY.

Remember that by paying for THE RESTITUTION till Dec. 31, 1887 between now and Feb. 1, 1887, you will receive free a Cabinet Photograph of Elder S. A. Chaplin. Editor of THE RESTITUTION, with his Autograph attached.

RENEW TODAY.

THE news is by no means assuring of long continued peace in the Old World. The Continental Powers of Europe are getting ready for the Great Armageddon conflict. The rapture of the saints and the time of the unparalleled tribulation are events that are proximately near. Let us watch, pray, and keep our garments unspotted from the world.

BROTHER Geo. W. Green, of Memphis, Ind., sent us a notice of a contemplated preaching tour that we have unfortunately mislaid, and cannot find for insertion. So far as we can recollect he designed leaving home about Jan. 17, for a tour of some weeks, during which he would like to visit some of the churches in the north part of the State. Will our brethren take this matter into consideration and write him accordingly.

THE DEPARTED YEAR.

Since we penned our "Holiday Musings" the index figure on the dial-plate of time has moved forward from the year-numbering figures, 1886 to 1887. The vanished year had its Spring time. The sun came back from the warm chambers of the South, and the dormant bud on the spray expanded out into the green foliage, while another unfolded into the bloom and beauty of the queenly rose or the gorgeous lily. Or the bright summer fields the waving wheat changed to golden ripeness, and the orchard bloomings into the luxuriant fruitage. But as it has been in all past years the leaf has faded, and floral loveliness has fallen to be trodden in the common mould. Winter holds its icy sway as the old year passes away forever, and the new commences its course to make its history and, in its turn, pass away, as all departed years have gone. With it have passed privileges and opportunities that can never be recalled. If those privileges and opportunities have been improved to the glory of God, and for the good of mankind, in so far, our life has been worth living; but if unimproved or misimproved, our lives have been a failure. The year has had its earthquakes and storms, and hearts and homes have been desolated. The air has been laden with "rumors of wars," and the year now gone has closed without bearing promise or hope of continued peace. How little we think that the very numbers we use as measures, and that have just changed by an increase of one, are measures of a dispensation and that the "Times of the Gentiles" and the years of this Gospel dispensation terminate together. How few comparatively are aware that we are living in the last generation of both Gentile and Gospel times. Never did the apostle's words—"Time is short"—have such solemn significancy as they have in these days in which our lot is cast. When we come to apprehend that the wonderful advent movement of 1843–1844, brought us to the last 70 year period of the "Times of the Gentiles," we shall not be disposed to join the mockers and scoffers in their contemptuous ridicule of all those who await the second coming of earth's Redeemer. The index-figure on time's dial-plate has only now to move forward a very few figures more till we reach the time, when "The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign unto the ages of ages."

If when we engage in our worship in the house of God we could only fully realize that the church is now doing its last work, and that many, who are now truly engaged in the work of the Lord, are the last actors in the dispensational work of "taking out a people for God's name," how different would be our course of conduct from what it often now is. The gospel has been no failure. It has brought out from the world nearly the full complement of the predestined crown-wearers. The princely priesthood who are to wear crowns and share thrones with God's own Son, in his kingship and priesthood royalty, in the "ages-to-come," is now nearly filled up. This honored company, when full, is, with Christ, the first-resurrection order. This is the elected order—elected to rulership with Christ in ages yet to be. Leaving out of consideration the other orders redeemed to resurrection life, let the thought that the privilege of wining a crown of glory is now limited to a very few years at most, impress our minds as it never did before, as to "what manner of persons we ought to be in all holy living and godliness." The year upon which we now enter is almost certain to be extremely important in its unfoldings. We are on the very confines of the grandest crisis that has ever been experienced in all human history. We feel a sort of premonition that we shall have wonderful events to record and thus bring to the attention of our readers if we are spared to edit THE RESTITUTION through 1887. We close with wishing our readers a Happy New Year in the service of our dear Redeemer.

Report of Labor.

Commenced a series of meetings at Byron Center, beginning Dec. 5. Preached 17 discourses, and as the result of the meetings, two obeyed the gospel by taking the name of the Master in baptism. Much prejudice removed, and we are in hopes the blessed work has just begun, as several expressed their regret that the meetings closed so soon. We may continue after conference, which is to be at that place. Bro. Houser came down from Allegan, Co., and helped to proclaim the Word, and rendered good service, also Bros. Winchester and Bennett, were on hand and done nobly in the Master's work, they have arranged to have meetings regularly.

"If the Vision Tarry, Wait for It."

Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city. And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary. And for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate even until the consummation. And he said unto me, unto two thousand, three hundred days then shall the sanctuary be cleansed. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword and be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. etc, etc. You can read the remainder in the twenty-first chapter of Luke.

WHAT ENGLAND DOES FOR EGYPT.

An important and interesting White Book has just been issued containing the German foreign office correspondence respecting the affairs of Egypt for the year 1886 up to June last. The information is valuable, especially now when people are beginning to be anxious to know a little about what has been going on in Egypt for the past six months. By far the most vital point to be considered is what good the natives of Egypt have derived and do derive from British occupation. The answer is given by a memorandum of conversations with two native gentlemen, one a Moslem of good standing, whose opinions are much respected by those who know him; the other a country squire who owns an estate not far from Cairo. The evidence of these persons comes to this: Since the days of the Caliph Omar, Egypt has never seen such security as that enjoyed by the masses. They are no longer exposed to arbitrary taxation, mulct and intimidation by those in authority. A peasant does not now live in constant dread of arrest and exile simply because he is well to do and has excited the envy or cupidity of some court favorite. Personal security for the ordinary Egyptian is now at least a historical fact, and not a matter of opinion. The people hardly believe their senses in this respect, and only fear that the present state of affairs is too good to last. There is less robbery and brigandage now than there was twelve years ago. A cadi or native judge is quoted as giving an opinion that Egyptian peasants nowadays suffer less ill treatment and enjoy more freedom and security of person than has ever before been known. The more intelligent of the population have begun to appreciate these advantages, and the expression of their opinions at the present moment may no doubt be attributed to a dread of an eventual relapse into the old system of administration.—Montreal Herald and Star.

DEATH.

Death is the saddest part of human history. The last act closing the drama of conscious existence. The Patriarch of Uz labors to describe it as a condition of absolute darkness, a terrible negation of all life and light, Job x. 19.

Without a Divine Revelation we might conclude with the great mass of the ancient heathen world that death ends all. Or in the sad strain of Mr. Ingersoll, "We strive in vain to look beyond the heights." The most thoughtful men of the past and present, the philosophic mind of Socrates as of Plato, as well as the best cultivated intellects of today, are sobered into solemn awe when forced to think of this grim mystery and inevitable fact.

Art and skill, under the direction of tenderness and affection to embalm the memory of the dead, have reared the sculptured marble slab, and the costly monuments; and the hand of love plants flowers and evergreens on the mound of earth which marks the resting place of husband, wife, father, mother, brother, sister and friend.

All this, and much more, that is done, and done lovingly and sacredly to the dead and their place of sepulture, softens and refines only a little the hard repulsive features of the grim monster; death is death all the same; and means darkness, silence, forgetfulness, inactivity, unconsciousness!

All the tinsel and drapery hung about the ghastly form of death will not make it desirable and beautiful to a well organized man, woman or child, in good health. Indeed, nearly all of human kind, whether enjoying good health, or suffering ill health, ranked with pain, or thrilled with pleasure, whatever their condition be, prefer life to death, instinctively shrinking from the latter, and tenaciously clinging to the former, seek to avoid the one as an enemy to be dreaded, and cherish the other as a friend whose presence is a perpetual joy. Hence, the number committing suicide is small compared with the number of those choosing to live as long as they can. But few, like Job curse the day of birth, chapter iii. 1—"So bitter in soul that he longed for death," ver. 21.

Death is a dreadful reality, disguise it as Theologians choose to do. The enemy! This the Pauline name and conception of it. The last to fall beneath the conquering power of the King of kings, 1 Cor. xv. 26.

To call it "a friend, the door that is left ajar, the gate to endless joy; and death's alarms, the voice that Jesus sends to call us to his arms," does not change its nature in the least. These sweet things, fine in poetic conception, are surely misnomers of the character and work of this destroyer of our race; and put beside Paul's "The last enemy" look very unscriptural. Think of it my religious friend, into whose hand this paper may chance to fall. I mean you holding the common view, that of the creeds. This work of church-father's and theologians of distant bygone times to embody in faith and formula; and the work of religious poets and hymn writers of more recent date, the Cowpers and Watsons, to set forth in the purest style of English versification, and the finest imagery of poetic numbers, have the merit of making the most of this curse of Adamic law, but in doing so they have woefully marred the truth of Revelation. This view of death places its advocates in antagonism to the truth in more than one point; leading them to deny the penal nature of the sentence which God pronounced against Adam; to contradict the plainly revealed fact that "man was made of the dust of the ground;" to teach contrary to the Scriptures that the physical organization, called by inspiration a living soul, is not the man proper; that the destruction of the being of the wicked, the blotting of them out of living existence as the Bible asserts, is not their destiny, but that eternal anguish and pain is to be their fearful doom! And further, it leads them to teach that men enters on his reward at death and not at Luke xiv. 14 teaches "at the resurrection of the just."

Holding this theory, the many who believe in the resurrection at the last day assert that it will be only the raising of the body as a tenement and not as a personality: so, contradicting what Paul teaches in 1 Cor. xv., where he makes all hope of future life depend, absolutely upon the resurrection of the dead.

Others, an increasing number at present, and still further from the truth than those mentioned above, teach that the only resurrection man can hope for takes place at death and is the raising of the spirit out of the corruptible body. Why they believe this they have never attempted to give the proof when the writer was present, merely asserting it, deeming this sufficient! I have heard from the pulpit in the last few years the following assertions repeatedly made on funeral occasion: "That is not the man," pointing to the corpse, "He is not here but gone to his reward." "That clay tenament will never rise, there is no death. Death is simply a translation to a higher state." These confident assertions naturally grow out of the error I have been combatting—Tradition.

The Name of Jesus Christ.

How may sinners who are without God and the Christian hope get into the body of Christ—his church, and have a right to his name? The testimonies of the Holy Scriptures clearly show us. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Thus by faith in Christ and baptism into his body, we become heirs of what was promised to Abraham and his seed (Jesus.) Though we dismiss the old law schoolmaster, and become disciples of the New Teacher come from God, whose credentials were the many miracles he performed.

Paul found certain disciples at Ephesus, of whom he enquired, "have ye received the Holy Spirit since you believed?" They answered, they had not heard there was any Holy Spirit, they had been baptized by John. "Having heard this, they were immersed into the name of the Lord Jesus." Acts xix. 5, Diaglott. Thus these "disciples" obtained the name of Christ, and not the name of the "Baptist" who first immersed them. Similar is the teaching of Peter on Pentecost. "Repent and be baptized every one of you for (epi) the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Philip's converts at Samaria "were immersed into the name of the Lord Jesus." Diaglott. Acts viii. 16. After "they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ." How plain is the Bible way of gaining forgiveness, a blessed hope, and a right to the name of Christian.

Why should all true disciples who have been baptized into the name of Christ, take this name to the exclusion of all other religious names? Because, first, the very large church that was gathered at Antioch by the labors of the apostles, "were first called Christians." Should we not be satisfied with the same name of Christian? It is true that the church at Corinth afterwards divided up into parties and some said, "I am of Paul," others, "I am of Apollos," and others still, "I am of Cephas." Did Paul, or the eloquent Apollos, or Peter seek to head each one of them a party? Paul wrote them that were "carnal," that they were guilty of division, envy and strife. He enquires of them, Was Paul crucified for you, or were you immersed into the name of Paul. He thanked God that he had only immersed Crispus and Gaius and the household of Stephanus, "so that no one could say that I immersed into my own name." Diaglott. We should not be called by the name of the best men, of Luther, Calvin, Wesley, or even Abraham, unless we are willing to be baptized into their name! Second, the apostle writes to the Ephesians, i. 21, "having raised the Anointed One from the dead and set him at his own right hand in the heavens, far above all authority and government and power and Lordship and every name being named, not only in this but also in the future age." Diaglott.

See also Phil. ii. 9, "And therefore God supremely exalted him and freely granted to him that name which is above every name, in order that in the name of Jesus every knee should bend of those in heaven and of those on earth and of those beneath, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, for the glory of God the Father." Diaglott.

Peter writes to his brethren, "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you." "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Acts iv. 12. To the church in Philadelphia, Jesus says, "I know thy works, thou hast kept my word and hast not denied my name." Rev. iii. 8. To the church in Pergamos, he says, "Thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith." To such of that church who should overcome the promise was given that they should have "the hidden manna and a new name written which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." Rev. ii. 17. To those who "keep the word of his patience" and do not "deny his name," he says, "He will keep them from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth." Rev. iii. 10.

"My hope is built on nothing less
Than Jesus blood and righteousness;
I dare not trust the sweetest frame,
But wholly lean on Jesus' name.

"When he shall come with trumpet sound,
O may I then in him be found,
Dressed in his righteousness alone,
Faultless, to stand before the throne."

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed please find two dollars: one to pay for the remainder of this year's subscription, and the other for six months more. THE RESTITUTION is our only preacher in this place. I have been a constant reader of it for eight years. I am getting along in years; God has spared me to the age of eighty, and I am truly thankful to him for all his tender mercies towards me. I embraced the faith of the gospel of the kingdom about twenty years ago. I was one of the first of the Millerite folks until I became more enlightened in the Scriptures. There is only one family of four here of the one faith. We often wish it was convenient for us to meet with the brethren and sisters at some place, and enjoy some of their good meetings. We would like very much to attend the next conference meeting that will be hold in New York if we can hear of it in time. I would wish to say that if any of the brethren or sisters are traveling this way by way of the West Shore Railroad, we would be much pleased to have them stop at Stony Point, N. Y., and make us a visit. They would be kindly welcomed to our house. Now I must say farewell. May the kingdom soon come, and I pray we may each one be of that happy number that shall meet to part no more. Your brother in Christ.

WILLIAM SEELY.

To the dear ones who have so kindly remembered me in their prayers, and by letter, let me say, I am still with Father and Mother in Wataga, still too sick to return home. I would gladly answer each letter of love, but I am so weak I can only write a few words at a time and then the penalty is, a renewal of pain, for hours. But do not withhold your letters from me for they help me endure this suffering with more patience, and that is the burden of my prayers now. More patience, Lord, give me. Then though I walk through the valley and shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me. For the Elder, let me say, to those who are waiting for his work, wait patiently, he will get to you just as soon as possible, he is now holding meetings in Byron Center. And now dear ones, let us have your prayers for the furtherance of the gospel in Michigan. Yours in faith and love.

MARY A. WOODWARD.

Editor Restitution:

While reading the many good letters written by the dear ones scattered abroad it reminds one of an old time class meeting where all could tell of their many trials and difficulties in life, and also of their hair-breadth escapes, while under the great tempter's influence, and how that the Lord had led them as a shepherd leadeth his sheep, and that while it seemed there was no way of escape. So it is if we would only put our trust in him instead of ourselves. Now we love to read these letters. It gives us the mind of the writer, and it would seem there is a spirit of oneness in this movement, that will bring the household into closer relationship, so that if one member suffers so will the whole body, and we believe with this freedom that many will help us in a financial way that have in the past considered themselves only outcasts, as they seemed to feel that they could say nothing that would be noticed, only that that related to the subscription price of the paper for one year. I hope there will be at least a few of these letters in every issue of THE RESTITUTION during the year 1887.

Write often Brethren and Sisters.

E. COX.

Editor Restitution:

I have been a member of your church for twelve years, but have not been able to take your paper all the time. We have but a few members of our faith and they are scattered like a flock of sheep without a shepherd. I have not heard any of our preaching for six years except a few funerals. I would like for two preachers to come here and preach for us, but I have not the means to pay their way. I have heard of Mr. Carter, here in Kansas, I wish he would come and bring some one with him and preach for us.

I have plenty for winter and could take care of any two just as long as they would stay with us. I am going on sixty-seven years old, am in good health, can do a great deal of work, and have been a widow ten years. If any think they can come and preach for us they can make it known through the paper, or by letter. I am yours in the Lord.

FANNY AIKEN.

Editor Restitution:

We find no such reading matter any where else. Mother Griffith, living with me, is wife of Jonah Griffith, a subscriber to THE RESTITUTION before it took that name, and lived near Story City, Iowa. As the brethren that used to know him have scattered to different parts of the country, we thought some of them would be glad to hear of Mother Griffith's whereabouts. She is living with her son Eli, near Ruddiff, Iowa, and is quite smart for her age, and very fond of the paper, and glad to hear from any of her old acquaintances, either through the paper or otherwise. We are alone in this neighborhood, as regards the faith, and have no preaching of this kind. If any of the brethren should pass this way, would be very glad to have them stop, and talk to the people. Yours in hope of eternal life.

Editor Restitution:

I will send you two dollars for my yearly RESTITUTION, as we could not well do without it. Sorry we cannot do more, but cannot on account of bad luck we had last fall. October 14, a fire started from a locomotive about one mile N. W., from our premises, and the wind or storm was high, and in less than ten minutes we were surrounded with flames on every side, destroyed all my shelter and sheds for my cattle, all my straw and hay about the yard, with fences burnt down within two rods from the Barn and dwelling house, which we saved by providential care and hard work. Thus we have our fiery trials and troubles in this world. However we have plenty to live on for, only it makes us very close in money, but we hope for the better. We wish Brethren in the Faith, all a happy New Year, hoping that you all may be well, and do well, praying up for THE RESTITUTION in time, as it is a pity that so much time must be wasted in collecting the means and money due for it. Come brethren and sisters, this is not what it should be. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and we, mostly, all look for the soon coming of our Lord and Master, from heaven, to gather his elect from the four winds of the earth. Are we ready to meet him?

Yours in the faith, hope and love.

JOHN W. SIEGLE.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find $2.00, which please apply to my account on RESTITUTION for the coming year. We shall be pleased to accept the Photograph and Autograph of the Editor promised in THE RESTITUTION. I would like to urge upon the scattered brethren of the faith not to give up THE RESTITUTION during these perilous times, as it will fill the place that no one living expounder of the gospel can fill. Cheap literature is flooding the world, it behooves the true believer to hold fast to the Word of Life. Yours in faith.

G. A. BRADLEY.

Editor Restitution:

I see by the tag on my paper that my subscription runs out Jan. 1, 87, and as I make it a point never to be much behind on my renewal, therefore I send soon enough to be entitled to that Photograph promised to all those that send before Jan. 1, 1887. I will enclose two dollars to pay to Dec. 31, 1887. I esteem the paper very highly, in fact do not know how I could get along without it, I am so isolated from all of like precious faith. It appears to me that the paper grows better all the time. The letters are a great source of comfort to me. Your brother in Christ.

G. T. WILSIN.

Editor Restitution:

Dear Bro. I will enclose you two dollars for THE RESTITUTION for the whole year in order to get the premium which please send as soon as possible. Please announce through THE RESTITUTION that my post office address is Englewood, Kan., so that the brethren may know where to write to me. There is a good chance to get land here for a home, homestead, pre-emption, or timber culture. Any preaching brethren traveling this way will find a hearty welcome. If Bro. C. C. Ramsey could give us a call we would be glad to hear from him. Yours in hope and love to all.

The Humble Exalted.

God chooses the humblest instruments. He passes by the temperate, and waters the fields and gardens with his imperceptible dew. He passes by the great elephant, and bestows the hues of sapphire and amethyst upon the tiny hummingbird. He passes by the lofty pine and huge cedar, and lavishes blossom and perfume on the violet. All history teaches this truth. Moses was the son of a poor Levite; Gideon was a thresher; David was a shepherd boy; Amos was a herdsman; the apostles were ignorant and unlearned; Zwingle was a shepherd; Melancthon, the great theologian of the Reformation, was an orphan; Luther was the child of a poor miner; Fuller was a farm-servant; Carey, the originator of the plan of translating the Bible into the language of the millions of Hindostan, was a shoemaker; Morrison, who translated the Bible into the Chinese language, was a lastmaker; Dr. Milne was a herd-boy, Adam Clarke was the son of Irish cotters; John Foster was a weaver; Jay, of Bath, was a herdsman Dr. Livingston set at the loom while he studied Greek. Last and greatest of all, Jesus of Nazareth was the despised and rejected of all men. He had not wherein to lay his head, yet to him shall every knee bow of things in heaven and of things on earth.

THE OLD YEAR.

The spring-time has gone and the summer has flown,
And the autumn and winter are here;
In silence I list to the piteous moan
Of the wind wailing out the old year.

Oh! where are the creatures sleeping to-night
The fairies and dainties and all?
The wasp and hyacinths fragrant and bright,
And the buttercups under the wall?

Ah! well I remember each tiny sweet face;
I remember each gay painted belt;
Where they grew, I remember exactly the place,
But 'tis needless for me now to tell.

They quietly sleep in their winter abode,
Beneath a pure covering of snow,
Awaiting the breath of the spring-time to wake
Their beauties again into glow.

And other dear sleepers are resting in hope;
Oh! well do I know each low bed;
And "some time" I too shall be gathered to them
On mother earth laying my head.

Blest hope of the Christian, that, over the tomb
Hangs the rainbow of promise and light,
And our dust, like the flowers, shall awaken to bloom,
In the land where there cometh "no night."

MICA PEN-NOTES.

A WORD FOR TROUBLED PEOPLE.

I would like to say a little in the way of experience. When I was a boy, I had a good kind father who cared assiduously for my needs, and supplied them faithfully, but now he is slumbering with the dead, and I can depend on him no more. Later, I had a father-in-law who was not forgetful of his children, and he, too, sleeps in the darkness of the grave. Many other friends have gone to the silent land also, and but few of the earlier kindred remain, not half a handful. How short is life and how rapidly the days glide! All the more, as the decades of life are surely passing, do I need and desire to be earnest, faithful, patient, active, dutiful and useful. Indeed, so little have I seemed to accomplish in the past, that the grand field and destiny of efficient labor seems yet future. The great work of doing good seems yet ahead, whether in a mortal or an immortal state. Of rest I can scarcely say I feel the need, except rest from care or doubt or misgiving of any and every possible kind. But for labor, exactly that which God appoints—(no other) in any sphere, there is an irrepressible anticipation. It may be after the word is spoken which quickens from temporal frailty to eternal incorruptibility. Well, so let it be—and may the Lord speak the word whenso-ever he will.

But I have digressed a little. I said my father cared for me in my youth, but then there comes a time when there is no one to care for us on the earthly side. How many a poor seamstress or other child of toil and poverty is haunted with a feeling of intense loneliness, and of desertion! Has God forgotten to be gracious? Why are such millions left to struggle almost hopelessly against adversity and misfortune? This is my comfort, that in due time, in God's true time, all the grief shall be compensated. The practical thing to think, and thing to do, is to believe with unfaltering faith in the goodness of God. When the veil is taken away from Jews and from "nations" —what a wonderful vista of glory will appear! The practical thing to think is this. When ancient helps have failed, then there is God. And let me speak and say, as we are in the furnace of trials, and are in reasonings and conflicts, we are to learn the grand lesson, God is left to us, and God will have us depend on him only! Do you see it, troubled heart? Do you see it, sighing pilgrim? And you, with a heart always sensitive and sore, who have been in clouds and dwelt in them, half your life, do you see the beautiful lesson? Lean on God. Come to it, and confess it, God is your all. Mind it, mind the mightiness and strength, the blessed limitation of the adverb, He ONLY is my rock. There it is, there you have it. So you see the philosophy of living. We have great schools, systems of education, and gifts and legacies for academic discipline, but mind you well, there are a few secrets of knowledge, a few little keys of learning, and these are what you want, the keys, the seeds, the little secrets of vital truth. One secret, one seed, one key, is this, God only is your dependence. Now then lean on him. I have heard say God helps those that help themselves. I don't dispute it right here. And I have heard it said that God is on the side of the heaviest artillery. I don't stop to dispute that now, or have any argument relative thereto, in this epistle, note or chapter, but we should do well to see things on a different plane, from the reasoners and reasonings of this world. We some times try earnestly to help ourselves, and we fail. We are exceedingly sorry because we are not more useful and fruitful, and the very hardest thing to do is to wait, trusting, in silence. Working is a right easier than waiting. O but they tell us "to labor and to wait." That looks well, to read it, or to sing it, but sometimes, the kind of labor we can do most efficiently, doesn't seem to open its door and say, "Come in, come in." So we wait on, and if we go too fast, or with nervous hurry seek to hew out our own way, it seems to be after all, not as the Lord would have it, so we wait on again. And here we are waiting. And we say, now, more than ever, "The Lord alone is my help."

Very well. And I should like to say, that there are some books to be written yet, (though really God has got a writing and record in his book) books with stories and registers and records of failures. How many people have got their heads full of materials of life experience, with which to fill the books of history of this kind! Failures of hope and purpose and expectation, failures of enterprises, failures of seemingly justified confidence, failures of untrustworthy men to do right, to do as they agreed. There are failures by the million, failures by as many ten thousand times ten thousand as there are stars in the heaven. taking the whole and total of human life into account. But God is love, all the while and don't forget. God is account-keeping in secret. The register goes on, and failures will have a shining side to them by and by. God's love will be the light that glorifies them. And the time is coming, (cheer up, down cast fellow-pilgrim), the time is coming when you shall cease to make failures, and not only so (aye, more than that), when your old failures that cost you many a pang, many a groan, many a puzzled wondering hour and day of shadow, shall begin to bring in joy, shall begin to give back gladness and gratitude for this reason, to-wit: God has permitted them all for the best, permitted them for your discipline, that you might be learned in the higher kind of knowledge, even the knowledge of the love of God. There is one thought, what is gold, to be compared with that thought? That thought is, (and take it and put it into language, your own language of confession and appropriation), "God loves me." With that you are rich. And why does God love you? Because he loves all the creatures he has made? Yes, and more than that. Because there is a place in his heart expressly for you. You have got your place, and that is your grand consolation. A thousand million others have their places too, I know, and I am glad of it, but not one place of them all is exactly your place. Now rejoice that you are so exceedingly rich, and you are actually the richer all the while, that God loves a million million besides you, and for the very reason that they are his, for that very reason they are yours too.

That practically God loves only a few, that he loves all the rest so unpersistently, that he loses them, is not the rock-bottomed and mountain-towering consolation that I need. For some have gone to such valley-deeps. The Lord will not refuse them mountain-towering heights. And the thought that sweetens everything is this, God loves the whole world, and Christ is the Savior of the world.

We walk amid shadows. There are arrows that hit us. There are adversities that bark and growl at us. Sometimes calamities rattle like thunder-peals. And many a lion of contradiction goes across our path, with wrinkled forehead, and menacing look. But there are victories of faith, faith that looks trouble, unfearing, in the face, faith that conquers obstacles, and says to them, be gone! faith that speaks with secret or audible voice of command and says, "I summon to my help, by the grace of God, if need be, the powers of nature and the hosts of men." Great are the possibilities of faith, so, cheer up, weary heart.

O. COLEBROOK.

P. S. Thank you, Brother Humphreys, for your word of remembrance.

Editor Restitution:

Dear brother and brethren, please allow a brief notice of Bible and historical facts. The divine order is, "Buy the truth and sell it not." Prov. iv. 5–13, 23; Gal. ii. 14–18; Isa. lii. 1–18.

"Now I beseech you for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit—the unity of the Spirit, Eph. iv. 13—that ye strive together in your prayers to God" for this purpose. Then my brief notice of "the word of God," and its facts in fulfilment, will not offend, but be "an excellent oil" to hurt no head and add new strength to our organization in the blessed hope! Having been led by our brother I wish with gratitude to state some omitted portions of "the wisdom from above." God and truth invite us to prove all things. Amen.

1. It would be (in us) presumption to "set the time." Furthermore it would be no less presumption to suppress the facts of an "appointed (set) day!" Dan. viii. 14–19; ix. 21–27; Acts xvii. 31.

2. This range of time is demonstrated by the entire history of prophecy fulfilled. "The trodden down sanctuary and host" tell the story, in association with the symboled Gentile powers. Prophecy is foretold history of both time and event!

3. "The early church" looked for Christ then; because they lacked the light that moves on the line and in the wake of God's "goings" in providence! "Jesus told before that when it came to pass ye (we) may believe!" Do think of subjecting our faith in God's word and his providential fulfilments through some near 1800 years, to an early Christian opinion, lacking this illumined word fulfilled in its accomplished facts and realities!

4. "Of that day and hour knoweth (knoweth, then present tense) no man," and Matt. xxii. 36, and that, in Hebrew idiom, may read, "Maketh known." Father Wesley, of Methodism, traced out some six times over 1886! Brother Seibon, a grand man, of Cincinnati, Ohio, the peer of any of the bishops, told me that they could not blame Miller for being one week (seven years) later (1843) than their "Wesley!"

Note. The ablest, most trusted teachers and dignitaries of many generations, Rollin on Cyrus, Archbishop Usher, and the late Primates of England, Lord Shaftsbury, Bishop Mellvain of Ohio; Dr. Jarvis, the honored historian of "the church," said 1847, dating from Jesus Christ four years back of our era, which chimed to the tune of the Millerites, based on the highly exalted chronology of our English Bibles! It seems worthy of this divinest association possible. Because God has ordered "the times" for "every purpose under heaven." Eccl. iii. 1–17; Gen. i. 14–18. This sheet might be so filled. My faith, with which you are most concerned, is and has been about 44 years embracive of the very words of prophecy, "four world empires," in these noted and associated relations to "the end of this evil world," (leaving no number or place for another!) and the opening glories of "the day of God."

5. "The Revelation" groups "the four symbols," Dan. vii., into the one, chap. xiii. and xvii. with grand additions; as to its geography, seven hills in Rome; ten horns, ten kings and the eyed and mouthed one dominating the ten, outgrowths of the one fourth, there alone symboled! Nay, its chronology and "wondrous" history! It is incomparable and absolutely unique. Now do reflect on the Anti-Christ, theory of Ribera, Jesuit, to counteract Luther and the Reformation of God, in taking a symbol that extends in fulfilment through over 1260 years, in sober, sorrowful facts to relieve Rome of the responsibilities awaiting it in judgment. Dan. ii. 46; vii. 11; Rev. xvii. 10. "Come out of her!" says "the voice of God," her plagues impend!

6. Do in justice to your reason and all your moral associations, reflect farther on taking Enoch, "translated not to see death," some 5000 years ago, and subjecting him to shame, martyrdom, etc. Rev. xi. 8! Ten times we read of time reckoned "days and years," ten times over as tag and tally. Gen. v.; xlvii. 9. Again in plain history, "forty days, each day for a year, forty years." Num. xiv. 34; Ezek. iv. 4–6. Then the facts of fulfilment fix the thought and rivet it down in all history as God's unmistakable and historical meaning.

7. To close, Moses' commission was to deliver Israel, etc. The judgment of the "Anti" power of oppression as it incidental, yet important for a warning. Then all seem to ignore the fact that "the judgment to come on Rome, the mother of harlots," etc., in five times foreshown as "after the manner of Egypt." Isa. x. 24, 26; xi. 16; Hos. ii. 15; Micah vii. 15–20; and "the plagues," Rev. xv. and xvi., are noted in terms of those in Egypt. Ex. iv. to xiv. vs. 13–31. What is human opinion compared with God's examples—his word and its accomplishments already given for our faith! Gideon and the Midianites are another example. Isa. ix. 4; x. 26. Pharaoh and his hosts, like the Midianites, were as nothing. How much more will Jesus, with "all power in earth and heaven" be supremely sovereign over all things pertaining to Anti-Christ. His only sphere or show of power belongs to the range of "the fourth beast," which goes down in fire and tempest like that on Sodom, another example. Jude 7; Gen. xix. 24; 2 Peter ii. 9. The oppression in Egypt ended at the judgment, when Israel was delivered. This is in all relations righteous, like God.

So "the great tribulation," caused by the Anti-Christ, the enemies, one with no law, the iron Roman in the kingdom of men. Dan. ii. 4–17. The fourth beast, Dan. vii., with all the weeding out of the saints by the little horn; and that ends at "the judgment" to "take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto (on to) the end." It's not extended, not restored. The Judge in robe of white and throne of flame, because of the great words which the horn (your presumed Anti-Christ) spake, the beast (bearing that and all the horns) was slain, his body destroyed and burned up! Amen and amen! Neither God nor man can endure longer! Now as there's nothing left for imagination to reconstruct, Anti-Christ ends there, where the treading down and the tribulation end! Amen.

But the Revelation, its said, never "denied the Father or Son!" Dear brethren, have you not read of "speaking lies in hypocrisy, having the consciences seared with a hot iron?" arrogating the name of God, sitting in the temple of God? etc. 1 Tim. iv. 1–3; 2 Thess. ii. 4. Of course these scenes are future. Much remains for us to learn in filling out the portraiture. The land marks are, however, absolute and distinct. The fourth beast (not a "fifth") ends, and also his power for evil in "the great tribulation," at this judgment.

Let this suffice. The occasion I deeply regret, because special effort was made when Brother Hean was here to get the main facts before the brethren. The diagram cost full $50.00 I think, for the Lord's sake and union in the word and Spirit. In return one urged on me two dimes. I wait returns in the order given.

I've entered my 83rd year. This is part of my day's work; 3 p. m. May a blessing attend this interchange of testimony. There's a dreadful responsibility in adding, changing, indulging a mere prejudice, prepossession or the like. The blood of Christ and martyrs slain should suffice, if we had but an intimation of it. Amen.

Lovingly for truth and grace in abounding mercy, your feeble brother,

J. B. COOK.

P. S. "Then all the ends of the earth will remember and turn to the Lord; for the kingdom is the Lord's and he is governor among the nations. Because "the covering over all people and the veil over all nations (destroyed), he will swallow up death in victory and wipe away tears, take away the rebuke of his people from off all the earth; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." (No room for Anti-Christ.) "Men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed! Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel who only doeth wonderful things! And blessed be his glorious name forever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory! Amen and amen. The prayers of David, the son of Jesse are ended. Psa. xxii. 26–28; Isa. xxviii. 6–8; Psa. lxxii.

SELFISHNESS.

We have reached a selfish age Sympathy for the sorrows and sufferings of others grows less and less as the years go by. The wail of sadness and want, touches no tender chord in the heart of a joy and pleasure-loving world. Self appears to be the reigning god, and ease and pleasure seem to be the cardinal points of doctrine. And to this shrine vast multitudes pay homage. Nor is this adoration confined to gay and giddy youth. Thousands upon thousands of the middle aged seem just as much devoted to selfish pleasures as the young people.

We are living in an age when it is hard to get people to think seriously of the religion of Christ. Meetings may be held evening after evening, and the gospel of Christ may be presented in its touching love and solemn invitations, yet few, oh! how few, are ready to rise above worldly pleasures for Christ. But let a little "one-horse" show come along, and an eager crowd will gather to witness the performances. And I have heard that some church members go, also; and those, too, that claim to be too poor to take a religious paper, or to give anything to support the proclamation of the gospel!

Such professors seem to have money for the devil and themselves, but none for the Lord! "O, Samuel where is thy blush!" Have we not reached the time when men are "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God?" The love of many waxes cold; and many have "drawn back unto perdition." Still the Church of God stands secure. It rests upon eternal truth, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. In due time the church shall be united to reign. Selfishness may predominate now, but the conflict will soon be over, and it will result in victory for the waiting saint, and victory will secure the crown through Jesus Christ our Lord.

When we contemplate the perilous times through which the church is passing, the temptations to be overcome, it is grand to let our light so shine before men, that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father who is in heaven. Let us be faithful to our holy calling. Let us conquer selfishness, and labor for the good of others. Let it be our pleasure to make others happy, and we shall increase our own happiness. In this we shall only follow in the footsteps of the Master, who went about doing good. Let us follow his example.

A NATIVE OF SYRIA.

REMINISCENCES OF A RESIDENT OF LOS ANGELES.

Los Angeles is a cosmopolitan city, within whose limits are gathered representatives of every land, and upon whose streets are heard conversations in almost every leading language of the world, yet it is probable that the only native of the country which was the cradle of Christianity, who resides in this city, is the subject of the present sketch. His has been an eventful history, and an outline of the life of one who was born in old Damascus may not prove uninteresting to the inhabitants of what has not inaptly been termed the "modern Damascus."

The family of Abraham J. Arbeely resided in Damascus, Syria, for many generations. They are the first family that came from that country to the United States. Prof. Josef Arbeely, his father, was one of the learned men of Syria. He belonged to the Greek Orthordox church, which corresponds, in that country, to the Episcopal church in this. Years ago, when the English and American missionaries, who went to preach the gospel in Syria, met with great opposition, they found it very difficult to find any one to teach them the Arabic language, and Prof. Arbeely used to go to them secretly, at night, to give them instruction. This made the authorities of the Greek and other churches very angry, as he was at the time a preacher in the theological seminary of Damascus, which was under charge of the Greek church. They threatened to expel him from office, but the Professor continued in his good work, being a man in advance of his generation, who wished to see the people of that benighted land enlightened. He assisted the missionaries in rendering their sermons into Arabic and spent most of his life in defense of the Christian religion and in debating with learned Mohammedans on religious questions. He studied the Koran thoroughly, and showed from that book, that the Christian religion was true.

This was all very dangerous work, among such a bigoted populace as the Mohammedans. In 1860 came a day of terror. The Mohammedan population, goaded by their leaders, rose against the Christians, many of whom were brutally massacred in the city of Damascus. They sought to vent their anger on Professor Josef and hunted for him all over the city, but in vain. To save himself he adopted the dress of a Mohammedan Sheik. While thus attired, as he was passing down a street, he was set upon by a crowd of infuriated men, who appeared to suspect that he was not what he seemed. Hastily taking his purse from his belt, he scattered the contents behind him, and while the crowd were stooping to gather the money, escaped. All this is remembered by Abraham Arbeely, the subject of the present sketch, who was at that time a boy of about 10 years of age. He accompanied his father in the disguise of a Mussulman girl. A friend belonging to that faith secreted them in his house until the Christ. But let a little "one-horse" show come along, and an eager crowd Abd-el-Kader—who was at that time living in Damascus, after his banishment by the French—sent some troops to conduct them to the consulate. For five dreadful days the city of Damascus was in flames, and the Christians who had escaped being killed were in a terrible state of distress. Abd-el-Kader was permitted by the governor of the city to take the refugees to the citadel to save them from the rage of the populace. In this manner the English missionaries were saved, with one exception—that of Dr. Graham, who was killed.

The father's life being no longer safe from the vengeance of the Greek church, he moved with his family to Beyrout, on the Mediterranean, where are located most of the missionary churches. Here he was chosen president of the Greek college, and taught in the United Presbyterian University, assisting Dr. Van Dyke in the translation of the Bible into choice Arabic. He was subsequently appointed director of the Lebanon colleges.

Abraham, who is the oldest son, practiced as a physician in Beyrout, which is a city of 80,000 inhabitants. He afterwards finished his education in the Oriental colleges and went to Constantinople, where he studied and received a diploma from the Royal College. Continuing his studies in Europe, he graduated there with honors, and returned to Greece, Egypt and Syria, in which latter countries he was employed by the Turkish government during several of the terrible epidemics of Asiatic cholera which periodically scourge that country. He furnished a paper on that disease to the United States Medical Association, which met last year in Washington, D. C., which essay was published in several medical journals. After practicing in Washington for several years, and making a study of chronic diseases at Hot Springs, Ark., he came to Los Angeles, where he now resides.

A brother of this gentleman, named Najeeb, was recently appointed United States Consul at Jerusalem by President Cleveland. Mr. Arbeely has just heard from him, that he is about to start on a journey of investigation, following the route pursued by the Israelites on their way from the Red Sea to the Promised Land. Interesting results may be expected from this journey, which is probably the first undertaken for scientific purposes by a native of the country, thoroughly acquainted with the language and customs of the people.—Los Angeles Weekly Mirror of Dec. 18, 1886.

TEMPERANCE SELECTIONS.

THE DIFFERENCE.

Two men start out in life, the one keeping his head cool with water, the other muddling his with liquor. At the end of ten years, the former will have achieved success, the latter will be dropping into a drunkard's grave; but just before he drops you will hear him say: "Stonishing what a difference 'ter is in life! That feller started same's I did, an' everything he touched turned to gold, and everything I touched turned to ashes—'stonishing what a difference 'er is in life!"

FIGHT ON.

A prominent paper in Maine thus speaks in regard to the curtailment of the liquor traffic in that State: "In a large part of Maine an entire generation has grown up practically ignorant of the liquor traffic, never having seen a liquor shop, nor the pernicious effects of a saloon." We hope the day is not distant, and that we may live to see it, when as much can be truthfully said of every other state in the Union and of Canada. Rum has got to go overboard. The liquor traffic must stop. Let the fight go on. Let us save the hundreds of millions of dollars paid in the past in grog bills. Let us do more—far more—save from the drunkard's grave yearly an uncounted army of young men, and thousands of families from disgrace and ruin.

THE RESULT OF A GLASS.

Several years ago, long before I had heard tell of total abstinence, I had occasion to take a voyage in a sailing vessel from this port to the coast of France. I was accompanied by my two daughters. In the expectation that they would be troubled by seasickness, and in conformity with the general opinion, we had provided ourselves with a bottle of brandy to be used as a quieting medicine in the event of illness. Prior to our retirement for the night we each took a small glassful of brandy, and as the captain of the vessel—a Frenchman—happened below just then, he was asked to have a little. He tossed off a draught with evident relish, then smacking his lips, and bidding us "adieu" for the night, went on deck.

We had not rested more than a few hours ere we were awakened by the trampling of feet and a confused noise of voices. I hastened on deck. The night was cloudy; the seamen were shouting to each other, and hurrying to and fro. "What is the matter?" I enquired. "Where is the captain?"

Judge my horror when I learned that he had been set on to drink by the brandy which I had given him, and got intoxicated and had fallen overboard. The boat was put out, and the men rowed about in the darkness for a considerable time, but, alas! all was in vain.

Sleep forsook one eyelids for the rest of the night, and the captainless ship drew near the French shore just as the sun began to show its face in the glowing east. When she neared the "desired haven," I took the ship's glass and began to scan the harbor and its neighborhood. I noticed, in particular, one neat looking house, near the landing-place, at an upper window of which I saw a woman, who turned to the aforesaid glass and waving a handkerchief in the direction of our vessel. I said to one of our crew, "Some woman at the house with a white front, near the harbor, seems looking out for the ship."

The rough looking sailor drew the back of his hand across his glistening eyes, and said in a tone tremulous with emotion, "Ah! God help her! That's the poor captain's wife, Monsieur."

My grief was indeed deep and trying; but until light broke upon my mind, I never saw so clearly as I have done since, that my giving and offering strong drink to a fellow creature was the cause of this most real and distressing case.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1886. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc., etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

"The Gospel of Our Salvation and Kindred doctrines—as life only through Christ—Resurrection of the dead—Second coming of Christ—The Kingdom of God, etc., will be faithfully preached every Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m. to which services we heartily invite the people after divine truth! This service will close at 12 o'clock, after which the church will meet for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers." 156 Grand st., on first floor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A SONG FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Come with our yesterdays, folded apart,
Laid by with the treasures we hide in the heart.
The year that has left us, so silently shod,
Has carried its records of earth unto God.
How strange was its mingling of bitter and sweet.
Its trials how heavy, its pleasures how fleet;
How often its mercies surprised us, unsought:
How frequent the gifts to our hands which it brought;
Alas! that we shadowed its glory with sin
Nor battled its beautiful trophies to win;
And thanks unto him, who gave pardon and rest,
And wrought for his children whatever was best.

Comest in winter, the year that is new,
Snow-fall and frost-time and star-beam and dew.
Skies of the darkest, and bloom of the clover.
Rose-cup and lily for hero to hang over.
Stir of the wind, in the waves of the wheat,
Smile of the violet low at our feet.
Fruitage of orchard and cluster of vine,
Seed-time and harvest, O must! will be thine.
Once more, in this year, for what hath been,
shall be,
While the rivers of time seek eternity's sea.

So, a Happy New Year to the babe and the mother.
To gentle wife-sister, and stay-hearted brother:
A Happy New Year to the soul who wait
Till an angel set wider the Paradise gate;
A Happy New Year unto those who have learned
How rich are the guerdons which labor has earned;
And a Happy New Year to the weary who cling
Through sorrow and pain to [illegible] faith.

Far down the fair vista, blithe New Year, we see
The sun-gleam of beautiful Sabbaths to be:
From far o'er the billows we hear the glad swells
Amid people in darkness, of church-going bells:
God speed the full time when the idols shall fall,
And the banner of Jesus wave white over all;
When the nations shall walk in the light of the Lord,
And Eden's lost verdure to the earth be restored.

May the New Year touch softly the eyelids that ache
With tears o'er the sleeping who never shall wake,
Nor chill to our kisses, nor sigh at our blame,
The low grass their couch, or the cold stone their name.
O Savior Divine, to thy glory arisen,
Release those who mourn from the gloom of grief's prison.

Teach us to be joyful for those who have gone
To shine in thy likeness, and kneel at the throne.
And help us to thank thee when restored from sin,
The loved of our homes to thy rest enter in.

Dear Christ, by thy passion, thy grace, and thy power,
Assist us, uplift us, in each clouded hour,
And till by denial, bestowal, delay,
Whatever is needful, oh, guidance we pray.
The year that is far above rubies shall be,
The year of our lives that is closest to thee:
And precious and sacred our changes shall grow,
If heaven-light o'er them in tenderness glow.
Let the hardness of woe, and the conflicts of care,
Like be refined by the breathings of prayer.
And happy, or only resigned, let us raise
Each morning and evening the songs of our praise.

RUSSIA, BULGARIA, AND THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Considering the important part which Russia is predicted to play in the solution of the Eastern Question, her present policy and proceedings in Central Europe demand attention. The mystical Euphrates is rapidly drying up; Turkey is being almost daily dismembered or weakened; and Russia is casting covetous eyes on the city of Constantinople, and should it fall into he hands for a prey, she will then in all probability aspire to supremacy in the Mediterranean, and thus bring nearer the point of realization the designs she has long been known to medidate on Syria and the Holy Land. Any frivolous circumstance may furnish the longed-for pretext to Russia to "cry havoc, and let slip the dogs of war," when she will hurl her thunderbolts at the Porte; and, if permitted by the allied Powers of Europe, will advance without any further notice, into the very heart of the Turkish dominions, and the imperial city of Constantine will fall before the rapacity of the Russian eagles. The marvellous modern development of Muscovite prestige, audacity, and territory, combined with the mercurial and highly combustible character of current political events, may at any moment result in a tremendous climax and catastrophe, such as will imperil the thrones of the most stable nations of Europe—at least will make them tremble to their very centres. Happily, however, amidst the din and tumults of war, and the heavy tramp of millions of men armed to the teeth, and panting for the fray, the Bride of Christ expectant, hears the footfall of her Lord and rejoices. She lifts up her head with grateful confidence, knowing that her redemption draweth nigh. Events such as are now transpiring on every hand, are to her as forerunners and harbingers of the Lord's return as the blossoming of the primrose, or the blithe carolling of the lark are prophetic of advancing summer.

The state of Bulgaria, owing to the recent autocratic domination, and becoming behavior of Russia, is pitiable in the extreme. But events are moving on, though but slowly. General Kaulbars has left Sofia, taking the road to Constantinople, and the fact produced quite a fresh outbreak of excitement and speculation on the Eastern Question. A St. Petersburg correspondent telegraphed that general surprise is expressed in this city, where people do not seem to know much about the intentions of the Czar." The understanding between the Czar and the Sultan has, however, long ceased to arouse any other emotion than wonder at the readiness and simplicity with which the fly walks into the spider's web. In St. Petersburg, confidence in the preservation of peace augments from day to day. If the Czar is prepared either to disavow General Kaulbars, or to acquiesce in the failure of his own designs in Bulgaria, this sanguine estimate of the future may be justified. But there is more than ordinary virtue in this "if," and nothing in the Czar's recent conduct bears out so favorable an expectation as that he will be governed by reason, justice, or common sense. If his desire was to furnish the Constitutionalists of Europe with a striking caricature of absolute monarchy, he could not have carried out his object in a more effective manner. Alexander III. has, as a Paris correspondent remarks, done much to promote the scheme of a Balkan Federation. He has shown himself the enemy of freedom in the East, and has ostentatiously refused to recognize the status or authority of the National Assembly in Bulgaria. Neither Servia, nor Montenegro, nor yet Roumania, can be certain whose turn will come next.

Referring to this question, Mr. W. J. Ross, of Derry, an intelligent student of prophecy says with sagacity:—"From many circumstances it would seem to be a warrantable conclusion that the flag of Russia will yet unfurl itself over the splendid 'Gates of the East,' Constantinople.

"In 1854 the Czar made a move towards what seems the ultimate destiny of the Muscovite. The massacre at Sinope was a blow struck at the vitals of the Porte. Then followed the Crimean War; but Europe shook her mailed hand in the face of the Autocrat, and compelled him, for the time, to desist from his design to annihilate the "unspeakable Turk." The Treaty of Paris was then wrung from the Czar, but though stained with some of the best blood of France and England, and purchased with priceless treasure, that Treaty only sealed the peace of Europe for a few short years. By that Treaty the neutrality of the Black Sea was then secured, and Russia was forbidden to float a war vessel on its waters. Now more proudly than ever the Russian flag floats over the Euxine, and Sebastopol, demolished by the allied armies in 1856, is fortified, and made stronger than before.

War is in the heart of Russia, neither promises nor entreaties can bind her. She has resolved on obtaining a southern sea-board, and is still intent on pursuing her traditional policy, which determines Constantinople as her prey. That she still intends to seize Stamboul is patent from Russia's acts in the Turkish War of 1879, which was only closed when her armies and the fleet of England were brought face to face before the walls of Constantinople. With the city in view of his troops the Muscovite was obliged, by the arm of England, to relinquish the long coveted prize. The late Lord Beaconsfield at San Stefano checkmated the Czar, and for the time secured the peace of Europe. The Treaty of Berlin will, no doubt, in turn be sacrificed as was that of Paris.

Destiny is stronger than Parchment. For the war of 1878 Russia's pretext was the relief of the Bulgarian Christians; that for the campaign of 1854 was the keys of a church at Jerusalem. What will the apple of discord be which will next launch the Muscovite on the war path?

"Soon, it is believed, whatever be the proximate cause, the 'Golden Gate of the East' will open for the entrance of the Prince of Rosh, and the Czar will spread his purple in the Imperial City of the Eastern Cæsars. Once at Constantinople a basis of operation for adventures in the Levant will be afforded. Want of a southern sea-board cripples Russian advances towards Palestine, but that, Muscovite eyes at Zion as well as Pera is too well-known to be disputed for a single moment.

"With the prescience of genius, the master-mind of the great Napoleon grasped the destiny of Russia. While a caged eagle at St. Helena he caught sight of the political surges that would break over and wreck half the thrones of Europe, he said: 'In the course of a few years Russia will have Constantinople, part of Turkey, and all Greece. This I hold as certain as though it had already taken place. France, England, and Prussia united, could not prevent it. Once mistress of Constantinople Russia gets all the commerce of the Mediterranean, becomes a great naval power, and God knows what may happen.

"Constantinople was, one of Russia's earliest efforts would probably be the emancipation of Jerusalem. The Greek church groans at the thought of the wrongs crowning the holy places on Mount Moriah. The crescent must be supplanted by the cross. The profaned and desecrated lands of the East, once hallowed by the tread of angels and blessed by the presence of divinity, must be recovered, and the broad highway to the sacred prize is through the fertile provinces of the Turk. Constantinople is the gate to Jerusalem."

Palestine is rapidly growing into the condition described by Ezekiel in the 38th chapter. In the 8th verse it is said. "It is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them." In the 11th verse the happy and peaceful condition of the Jews is forecast, "And thou (Gog) shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go up to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls and having neither bars nor gates, to take a spoil," etc. At this moment Palestine is being re-peopled and colonised. Statistics show that in 1858 there were only 20,000 Jews in Palestine; in 1805, 100,000; now the number is estimated at 2000,000 and upwards, and is greatly increasing.

In reply to the query, When shall these things be? it may be answered, when the double-headed eagle soars over the Bosphorus, when the crescent has been supplanted by the cross on the Mosque of Omar; when Judah's feet once more awaken the echoes of a temple dedicated to the Lord in Jerusalem (for this must take place before the final catastrophe)—then shall the epochal hour have struck for the Princes of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal to invade the land, and to receive his predicted retribution from heaven. Ezekiel 39th chapter.—T. J. Malyon, in Prophetic News.

THE OUTLOOK OF THE WORLD.

A deeply interesting article under the above heading recently appeared in the New York Independent written by the Bishop Randolph S. Foster, D. D., LL. D. We take the liberty of making a few extracts from this suggestive paper, and shall, in the first place, give the following statistics, as therein supplied:—"The human family living today on the earth consists of about 1,450,000,000 of individuals; not less, probably more. These are distributed over the earth's surface, so that now there is no considerable part where man is not found. In Asia, where he was first planted, there are now approximately about 800,000,000, densely crowded; on an average, 120 to the square mile. In Europe there are 320,000,000, averaging 100 to the square mile—not so crowded, but everywhere dense, and at points over-populated. In Africa, there are 210,000,000. In America, North and South, there are 110,000,000, relatively thinly scattered and recent. In the Islands, large and small, probably 10,000,000.

"It is difficult to form an intelligent idea of such enormous masses; and yet, to realize what the condition is, it is important we should form some approximate conception, but even that will require an effort. One has some idea of his own country, and generally a very vague idea of any others. In our country, the United States, we have 55,000,000. Africa has four times as many; Asia could replace it sixteen times; Europe, six times. A little thought will impress us with the stupendous magnitude of the whole. In complexion, the range is from ruddy fair, or white, to ebon black. The extremes of white and black are as five to three; the remaining 700,000,000 intermediate brown and tawny. Of the race 502,000,000 are well clothed—that is, wear garments of some kind to cover their nakedness; 700,000,000 are semi-clothed, covering inferior parts of the body; 250,000,000 are practically naked. Of the race, 500,000,000 live in houses partly furnished with the appointments of civilization; 700,000,000 in huts or caves with no furnishings; 250,000,000 have nothing that can be called a home, are barbarous and savage. The range is from the topmost round—the Anglo-Saxon civilization, which is the highest known—down to naked savagery. The portion of the race lying below the proper line of human conditions is, at the very least, three-fifths of the whole, or 900,000,000.

"As to religion, the 1,450,000,000 are divided in the order of numerical strength as follows:—360,000,000 are Pagan, comprising 600,000,000 of Brahmo-Buddhists, or Brahmans and Buddhists; 160,000,000 of unclassified Pagans; 140,000,000 Parsees, Confucianists, Shintoists, Janes; and other smaller Pagan sects; 410,000,000 are Christians, composed of 225,000,000 Roman Catholic, 75,000,000 of the Greek Church, and 110,000,000 Protestants; 180,000,000 Mohammedans; 8,000,000 Jews. The 360,000,000 of Pagans are found chiefly in Asia and Africa, and comprise 30,100ths of the population, with scattered millions in the American and Islands of the sea. The 410,000,000 Christians constitute the body of Europe and nine-tenths of the Americas, with a few millions in Asia, Africa and the Islands. The Mohammedans are found chiefly in Asia and Africa. The Jews are scattered in all lands, without a home or country. The Greek Christians are mainly in European Russia, with a few millions in Asia and in the smaller principalities of South Eastern Europe, extending into Africa. Western and Southern Europe is divided between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism in proportion of three-parts Romanists to two-parts Protestants. The Romanists hold substantially Austria, Italy, Spain, and Portugal, with a large fraction of France, a considerable part of Germany, the larger part of Ireland, and a strong following in England. The Catholics have also almost entire South and Central America, with the whole of Mexico and a powerful constituency in the United States and Canada, in North America. In America—as a whole—North, Central, and South—there are over 80,000,000 Roman Catholics to about 48,000,000 Protestants. Protestantism has its principal home in Great Britain, Germany, Switzerland, and Scandinavian kingdoms of Denmark, Sweden and Norway, and in the United States of America and the British provinces, and some of the smaller and larger islands. This is, approximately, a correct caste of the religious status of the world today. En bloc it shows two-thirds of the whole to be Pagan, or, including the Mohammedans and Jews as anti-Christian components of the Pagan fraction, three-quarters of the whole—not less than 1,050,000,000. The remaining other fraction of 410,000,000—a little more than a quarter—Christians, of which fraction more than one-half is Roman Catholic; one-quarter, nearly, Greek; and a trifle over a quarter Protestant.

"We have found that the non-Christian world comprises the enormous aggregate of nearly 1,100,000,000—heathen, Mohammedan, and Jew—all but 8,000,000 practically heathen; the Mohammedan differing from the Pagan element as to condition as to practice, not at all; and as to faith, in a single doctrine stolen from Christianity, and perverted in the theft; for outside of the doctrine of Monotheism, the followers of the false prophet are, in practice and life, essentially heathen. No one passing from one into the other would notice a difference in the general trend of the systems and their practical results. They produce the same type of human character."

The condition of the heathen world Bishop Foster thus describes:—"A thousand millions in the region and shadow of death; the same region where their fathers lived 2,500 years ago, and the same region where their fathers had lived and died, waiting for the morning. There they remain, sitting and waiting still, passing on through life in poverty so extreme that they are not able to provide for their merely brute wants; millions of them subsisting on roots and herbs and the precarious supply nature, unsubdued by reason, may furnish. Those of them living under forms of government and semi-civilization, which, in a manner, regulates properly and enforces industry, after their tyrants have robbed them of their earnings, do not average for the subsistence of themselves and their children three cents a day, or its equivalent—not enough to subsist an animal: multitudes of them not half-fed, not half-clothed, living in pens and styes not fit for swine, with no provision whatever of any kind for their human wants. Ground down by the tyranny of brute force until all the distinctive traces of humanity are effaced from them save the upright form and the unradicable dumb and blind yearnings after, they know not what—these are the heathen, men and women our brothers and sisters."

This is indeed a sad picture; and it would continue for ages to be, if it depended upon any influence man could possibly bring to bear upon it. The only bright spot in the perspective is the coming of him who is to be, "A Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel;" and at the coming of this Son of Righteousness, his Righteous Father has said, "Ask of Me, and I will give thee the heathen for thy inheritance and the utmost parts of the earth for thy possession." In the meantime toil on ye faithful missionaries in heathen lands, and gather in some as first-fruits out of every country, and nation, and people, and tongue. The glorious in-gathering of the great harvest is reserved for the Son of Man when he comes again in power and great glory; but those who are gathered out during the present Gospel dispensation will be very acceptable to God and the Lamb.

We are pleased to find that the Rev. D. M. Kingdon does not see, if ever he did, entertain—the delusive idea that the world will be converted prior to the coming of the Lord Jesus. In an address delivered by the worthy Pastor at the twenty-second Conference of the Pastors' College Association, he says—"Meanwhile, it is for us to labor on. Our day dreams are over; we shall neither convert the world to righteousness, nor the church to orthodoxy. We refuse to bear responsibilities which do not belong to us, for our real responsibilities are more than enough. Certain wise brethren are hot to reform their denomination. They ride out gallantly. Success be to the champions! They are generally wiser when they ride home again. I confess great admiration for my Quixotic brethren, but I wish they had more to show for their valor.

Both church and world are beyond us; we must be content with smaller spheres. Even our own denomination must go its own way. We are only responsible so far as our power goes, and it will be wise to use that power for some object well within our reach. For the rest let us not worry and weary about things beyond our line. What if we cannot destroy all the thorns and thistles which curse the earth; we can, perhaps, cleanse our own little plot. If we cannot transform the desert into a pasture, we may at least make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before; and that will be something."

The worthy Pastor also in his Sword and Trowel, reviewing a work entitled "The Millennium; or the Coming Reign of Christ, Spiritual, not Personal," says:—"Our author is a specialist, but prophetic truth is his specialite. He takes up his subject on a side issue; his own special interest being concentrated on Christian Missions, with a particular view to the propagation of the gospel in India. So sanguine has he become of the ultimate success of missionary societies that he is convinced that the doctrines of Christianity will inaugurate an era of righteous nationalities without the Second Advent of the Messiah—the King who shall reign in righteousness. No doubt Mr. Storrow is a gracious man, and therefore his readings of Divine Revelation may provoke a smile, but never a sneer. Perhaps the eyes of his understanding are not of equal power; one eye is singularly brilliant, the other nearly blind. His own remark that he has only met with two authors of his way of thinking, and that their respective works were both out of print ought to be suggestive to him. We can assure him that our conscience is clear on this matter. We pray perpetually, 'Even so; come Lord Jesus,' and we expect to see him so to come in like manner as he was seen to go into heaven; for his departure was personal, not metaphorical. We try to keep near the front in the evangelical enterprise of sending ambassadors into all the world; the more so because we know that the night is far spent, and the day is at hand."

THE COMING AGE,

—OR—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. Weethee.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The Coming Age is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It is largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of bygone ages and shows that the same hand is in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 600 large pages, bound in cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

THE TRANSLATION OF THE SAINTS.

This doctrine has sometimes been chosen for special ridicule and banter, not only by the worldly and sceptical, but by unbelieving professors of religion. Persons who are not content to rest their faith on the simple declaration of God's Word, who are not willing to receive what is above their reason and comprehension, and who expect things of a divine revelation and relating to a future state, to be brought down to a level with their understanding, and to be analyzed with things as they exist around them, will be allowed to fall blindfolded into the most serious errors. What God has plainly revealed we are to expect; what he has told us shall come to pass we are to look for, however unlikely it may seem to human wisdom. And standing on divine truth, fortified with the impregnable word, having God and the Bible on our side, we can afford to be laughed at; we can endure unmoved the derision of the unbelieving.

Prior to the harvest, or the gathering of the tares and the wheat, there will be a gathering of the "first fruits unto God and unto the Lamb." Those who are quite ready and are watching and waiting will be taken, and those who are not, will be left to be gathered in the great and still future harvest. All Christians having the characteristics of the five wise virgins, will constitute "the first fruits;" Christians having the characteristics of the five foolish virgins, will be shut out from the celebration of the marriage of the bride to the Bridegroom, and then they are left to pass through the time of terrible trial under the power of the antichrist. Those who are faithful to the Lord Jesus Christ, he will keep from that day of trouble; for in Rev. xiv. they are represented as standing on the Mount of Zion with the Lamb, when the hour of God's judgment is come, and the nations are warned by an angel flying in mid heaven; but those who are unfaithful, and who on account of unfaithfulness are not accounted worthy to escape the unequalled tribulation, will be left; and then if they do not honor the last Gentile power, and unite with others in false worship, but "fear God and give him glory," they will become martyrs under the persecution of the beast.

The saints who shall be accounted worthy of translation at the appearing of Jesus, will escape the agonies and pain of death; they will escape the demon-like power of the antichrist and the awful trials that will be common under that power; they will also have the honor of being changed in a moment, and having a body like unto Christ's, and being permitted to be with him, and to share in the glory given to him by the Father; they will reign with him in the kingdom. The following passages may have reference to those who shall thus be accounted worthy to escape the hour of trial, who shall be hidden away from their enemies. "But watch ye at every season, making supplication, that ye may prevail to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man," Luke xxi. 36. "Because thou didst keep the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of trial, that hour which is to come upon the whole world, to try them that dwell upon the earth," Rev. iii. 10. The apostle teaches that Christ is precious—precious now—to them who believe; but how precious, how unspeakably precious will he be to them in the hour of their translation. What a fulness of joy, what rapture, what sweet delight they will then have in his presence.

The number of this elect company may be now near its completion; any night the number may be found to be perfected by their rapture; the morning may be very near when throughout the Christian world there will be a great outcry over missing ones, when a few in almost every street will be no more seen in their usual places, in their homes and among their families and friends. Can we, then, be too solicitous to be ready?

A difference of opinion may exist as to whether the translation of the saints shall be visible or otherwise. Many incline to the opinion that it will not be visible, and hence call it the secret rapture. The following words of our Lord seem to indicate that this view may be correct. "I say unto you, In that night there shall be two men on one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other left. There shall be two women grinding together, the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left," Luke xvii. 34, 35. One writer, commenting on this, says, "The passage teaches, 1. that this translation is to be expected in that night, as if purposely to conceal it from the eye of unbelief; 2. that this is no gathering of nations, but of individuals, one here and one there; 3. that it is a separation of parties, one being taken and another left; 4. this taking of one party and leaving of another indicates a previous judgment, (just as the sudden taking and changing "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," 1 Cor. xv. 52, also evidences), and not such an one as is recorded in Matt. xxv. 31–46; 5. that the removal of the one party is designed as a particular blessing in averting incoming evil, and the leaving of the other must be in order that they may experience it."

The time of the translation of the saints is not the same as that of the parable of the tares and the wheat. The latter is the harvest time, when the gathering of the tares is prior to the gathering of the wheat. But at the calling up of the saints there is no mention made of the gathering of the wicked. The true church, or the elect, are first taken up; then a condition of things continues till the harvest in which there will be bad and good, tares and wheat; for no doubt many represented by the foolish virgins will be aroused by the translation of the elect. Alarmed by the perils of the hour, they will seek earnestly for more grace, for an increase of faith and love and hope; just as the foolish virgins in the parable, when they saw their lamps going out for want of oil, went to buy more.

It will be seen that some time elapses—the period of the great tribulation—between the translation and the Lord's coming to establish his kingdom. The reason of this, if we may form a judgment, will be seen in the fact that the risen and translated saints who are to become rulers in the kingdom—a kingdom co-extensive with the world—will need special teaching from Christ in reference to their offices. They come with him to the inauguration of the kingdom, when enemies have to be destroyed, when all things that offend have to be cast out; and the saints are to be instructed with power to carry out his will and to execute his laws; and when the kingdom is established they will have the authority to discharge various duties; and these things will require that they be taught their duties, and how to perform them. When they come with Christ, therefore, they come instructed and authorized to take part in the administration of the government that will be established over the nations.

THE HEATHEN—THE SECOND DEATH.

From a late No. of the Crisis, I copied the following, signed by J. H. Pettingell:

"True there is a sense in which Christ is the Savior of all men; for he has redeemed the entire race of Adam from the natural death that comes upon all his posterity irrespective of their individual deserts; but this only brings them by a resurrection before the bar of God, to answer for the deeds done in the body, their own sins as individuals; and no one has any warrant for saying or believing that there has been, or will be any way of escape from that second death to which all sinners are exposed, excepting by repentance and faith, and a personal acceptance of the terms of salvation now offered in the Gospel."

This is copied from an article written with reference to a controversy going on among certain believers in the immortality of the soul, concerning the salvation of the heathen, some contending for a probation after death, others denying. Mr. Pettingell takes the negative of that question. He appears to think that through it would be unjust to condemn the heathen to eternal torment, it would be just to condemn them to a second death. The heathen under consideration are those who have died without an opportunity to hear the gospel. How did these heathen become, according to Mr. P.'s theology, exposed to the second death? Not by their rejection of the Savior; for they never heard of him; but his redeeming them from natural death, the death that came upon all men through Adam's transgression. So it appears that they were not originally exposed to the second death, not by the sentence passed upon Adam, nor by the penalty of the law which they transgressed. No law requires a transgressor to be redeemed from the penalty of another law to suffer its penalty. What sort of procedure then is it on the part of God to put the penalty of Adam's sin upon Christ for the purpose of redeeming Adam's posterity from the grave in order to inflict death upon them a second time? And to do this without their knowledge, and without giving them any chance whatsoever to escape the second death?

Does the divine government need to resort to such means to maintain itself? And how does such a procedure show the love of God? Why say that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life, when it was not the intention to make it possible for the vast majority of the heathen or mankind to believe on him, but to make it possible to bring them out of death, to place them before his bar to give an account of their deeds, in order to thrust them back into death again without mercy.

Where do the Scriptures say that all sinners are exposed to the second death? Paul says, "As it awaits men once to die, and after this a judgment, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, etc.; but he does not say that the judgment is condemnation to a second death; for in that case it would await men twice to die.

In another place he says, "He that despised Moses' law, died without compassion under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment, think ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing," etc. "The sorer punishment" is undoubtedly the second death; and this language of the apostle implies that none but those who have sinned against the New Covenant will suffer the sorer punishment. The heathen have not done; therefore they have not been redeemed from natural death to suffer the second death for sins committed in their weakness and ignorance. God is love.

J. W. NILES.

"The Church of God, in the State of Suffering."

"Thou art worthy, or worthy art thou, to take the book and to loose the seals thereof: for thou wast slain and didst purchase unto God with thy blood men of every tribe, and tongue, and people, and nation, and madest them to be unto our God a kingdom and priests, and they reign upon the earth." R. V. Rev. v. 9, 10.

The citation of this passage as evidence that the church of God is not the kingdom of God induced me to read it with a view to ascertain what then does it mean?

The church of God defines those who are called out of mankind by himself. They are called by the message or gospel of his grace sometimes called the gospel of his kingdom. The called ones are also said to be called to his kingdom and glory. All therefore who have obeyed this call are properly God's called out ones, or his church. In the call these heard how that God's "Christ loved the church and gave himself for it that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious church not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish," Eph. v. 25, 26, 27.

Paul in giving instructions to the elders of the church at Ephesus, reminds them that they all among whom he had gone preaching the kingdom of God should see his face no more. He also charged these elders to feed the church of God which he had purchased with his own blood or with the blood of his own, Acts xx. 28. Now what is true of the called out in Ephesus is true of the called out in every place and in every age until now. There is only one church of God or called out company. The first who obeyed the call are as much a part of that community as the last. Those now living sing the new song today as well as those who sang it in John's day, and those who are not yet born will sing it after they hear his voice.

The redemption price given for the church, embraced more than those who have believed it. For there are despisers who wonder and perish because they deny obedience to the Lord who bought them. It however is sufficient for the present to point out the very gross mistake, in our judgment, that is made by those professing to have obeyed God's call to his kingdom and glory, and who are continuously boasting of superior knowledge to their contemporaries, by their affirming that this company are not the kingdom of God. The good seed sown into the world before the Son of Man ascended to heaven are described by himself as the children of the kingdom. All that is necessary on the part of these children is that they reach their majority. But as there are children of the kingdom today it will be necessary that they also reach their majority before the whole body can be completed, and as the time of reigning with him cannot come until the last member has suffered with him, it is clear that the time referred to in the new song "and they reign upon the earth" does not refer to their time of childhood nor period of suffering. But the time of reigning ought not to be confounded with the time of suffering so as to affirm that the called out are not the kingdom of God because they are now in suffering. Both states, namely the state of being in the kingdom and also in the tribulation, incident to being in the kingdom are not simply compatible, but both are affirmed by the apostle John of himself and of the seven churches which were in Asia when he sent God's revelation to them. I cannot therefore accept the negative position that the church of God is not the kingdom of God, and also sing the new song given in Rev. v. 9, 10.

WILLIAM ELLIS

Editor Restitution:

For the sake of truths which many of our people almost wholly discard, I hope you will find space in your paper for the following:

In a late number of THE RESTITUTION, I saw an article from a brother whom I am unacquainted with except through his former excellent articles in the paper. But I was a little surprised on reading his last article, in what he said about another brother. It was this. I met brother—(whose name I omit), he used to be an advent preacher, that is, a world burner, but now is a complete restitutionist, so it is represented by brother No. 1. That when brother No. 2, was an advocate and a world burner, he was not a complete Restitutionist. Now this question. Did he abandon what is called world burning to become a restitutionist? If so, we would like to know what he has done with two or three Scripture passages among several which adventists quote to prove world burning. How about the following? Behold the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch, Malachi iv. 1. The day cometh, that shall burn as an oven. An oven is not consumed with the burning fire within it, nevertheless it is the receptacle for the burning, and by the comparison which the prophet makes, the world will sometime in the future be a receptacle for the combustible elements to burn up within it, which will also reduce the wicked to ashes as seen in the third verse.

Now I wish to direct the readers' attention to another chapter, and a few remarks on the same. In 2 Pet. iii., he says, For this they are willingly ignorant of, that by the Word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished: but the heavens and the earth, which are now reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. Here we are unable to avoid the conclusion (if we were so disposed) that every thing in the old world that was perishable by water, did perish by water. We are inclined to think as from what Peter says. The world that was being overflowed with water perished, but the world that now is, is reserved unto fire. What Christian denies that literal water destroyed every thing that water could destroy in the world that was? You say, no one. Then what Christian will deny that the world that now is, is reserved for destruction by literal fire? Are we not by the analogy drawn to the conclusion again that none should deny it.

Again, Peter says, But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up. When I took the matter over, I see no way to be a complete restitutionist, (as our brother worded it in his article), except in the belief of a literal burning up of all things that stand in the way of a restitution. For nearly six thousand years the earth has brought forth thorns and thistles, and noxious weeds, to the great detriment of the cultivator, who by the sweat of his face has toiled on, endeavoring to extirpate the weeds and thistles as much as possible; but still they grow rank in many places where choice vegetation is scarcely enabled to make a stunted growth.

What but the fire of the coming day, when the elements shall melt with fervent heat will prepare the earth for the new creation? For he says, Behold I create new heavens, and a new earth. When that is done, the earth will be as it was before the fall of man, and the ground was cursed for his sake. When fire has done what God by the mouth of his servants have said it will do, then will come the restitution of all things spoken of by all the prophets since the world began.

J. A. MORGAN.

The Policy of Concentration.

The early stage of creation was chaotic—darkness on the face of the deep. Thence there was light, yet diffused. An advanced stage comes with "the sun, moon and stars"—light concentrated. Gen. i.

1. Thus we read of living souls—creatures—in earth and sea; but this form of life was not left like light, in diffusion; but as light was concentrated in "the sun to rule the day," so Adam was made a living soul, Gen. ii. 7; 1 Cor. xv. 45, and placed over all mundane creatures he'd, and with Eve to multiply, replenish the earth and have dominion.

Lordship, sovereignty, authority, was concentrated in man, as light had been in the sun! Thus the living creatures (in Heb., living souls, Gen. i. 30; vii. 21, 22; Rev. xvi. 3) were not left to roam at random, to devour and be devoured in ceaseless struggles (as in after ages) but subject to man. Adam gave them names. "All was very good." The policy centered in concentrating the government and the social and moral concerns of earth in man. In Hebrews it reads, "Ish and ishi—male and female."

2 This policy has been maintained. At the flood in Noah, and his family, "eight souls"

3 Again Abraham, who had been with Shem near fifty years and stood up for God against idolatry, is called "the Friend of God" and the heir of "the world in his seed!" Rom. iv. 13–22 Isaac, his child of promise, succeeded; and in Jacob with his twelve sons, this concentration extended 430 years. Ex. xii. 42

4. "The many thousands of Israel" were, however, not allowed, with the general promise in diffusion, to act for God; but in Moses, the meekest of men, was concentrated the wisdom and power that made him a god to Pharaoh, the deliverer of his people, their lawgiver and "king in Jeshurun!"

5. Not to name the judges, we come to David to clear the way, and Solomon to build the temple and foreshadow "the Prince of Peace" and the "good things to come."

6. Isaiah, the royal prophet and his ancestors, speak for God and unfold his loving will to Israel, the nations and our groaning creation!

7. In Jesus, all these official services concentrate. As the streams flow to the ocean and again are fed from it, so Jesus is the "first and last!" In the first Adam, the figure, (Rom. v. 14) and as "the last Adam," the concentration of all the rays of light that lead on to "the sun of righteousness," in its everlasting high-noon splendor!

He'll be the reality that Noah's name embodied to give enduring rest, the outcome of all Sabbatic ordinances in the rest that remaineth to the people of God and his creation! Heb. iv. 9; Rom viii 14–21. He is "the God of peace." Amen.

The patriarchal, royal and prophetical personages and proclamations are so many voices and finger points that directed faith forward to "the blessed and only Potentate, his re-genesis, and the "all in all" pertaining to redemption, the solution of all mysteries as to sin, atonement, resurrection, immortality, reconciliation and harmony, through the unending "age of the ages"—God all in all! Zeph. iii. 9; 1 Cor. xv. 24–27; Rev. xvii. to xxi. Amen and amen! Psa. lxxii. 18–20

This comprehensive and concentrated "Logos" encircles, replenishes and serves to "strengthen the heart" in proportion to the measure and pleasure with which it is cherished. "Only believe, all things are possible to him who believeth." Amen. Lovingly for truth and grace.

Enclosed find two dollars which please apply on my subscription to THE RESTITUTION. For twenty-five years has our beloved paper (under various names) made its regular visits to my fireside. It has come laden with choice gems of truth, culled here and there, and oft when the heart was sad and the courage faint has its words of sympathy infused new life. How our hearts have burned within us as some gifted writer has unfolded the grand truths of revelation. It has been to us a bond of fellowship stronger than "mystic ties;" through its columns heart has spoken to heart, and let us fervently pray that this faithful messenger of love and truth may continue to shed its holy influences on the little band of faithful ones. We shall not need its services much longer. We are near the blissful time when the general assembly shall convene! Glorious reunion! What a time for the saints to mutually relate the struggles of life's journey! The alternate festa and victories! The nights of despair and the mornings of rejoicing! The world's hatred and God's love, the fearful clouds of unbelief and the clear sky of faith! To all of like precious faith let me say in the language of that dying commander, "Don't give up the ship;" don't give up the paper; give up tobacco, give up every foolish and vain thing, but don't give up the glorious resolution to serve God faithfully. Yours in the blessed hope.

Editor Restitution:

I see by the label on my paper that my time has expired. Inclosed please find two dollars and fifteen cents to apply on my subscription. Don't fail to send Brother Chaplin's picture. We cannot think of doing without our dear paper. May the choicest of God's blessings rest on all the household of faith, and many writers continue to write and edify and instruct all that are trying to learn and do the will of our Heavenly Father, is my prayer. Say through the paper that Bro. John Foore has been for some time under the doctor's care. He has an old trouble and I fear his labors are nearly done. We love him very much, and regard him as one of the most earnest advocates of the truth that I ever knew. He is beloved by all who know him as a citizen and a Christian. We are very much isolated and lonesome but not in the least discouraged, contending for the truth. Yours in hope.

The Year's Beginning.

The length of a year is strictly 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 49 seconds and seven-tenths of a second—the time required for the revolution of the earth around the sun. About 45 B. C., Julius Cæsar, by the help of Sosigines, an Alexandrian philosopher, came to a tolerably clear understanding of the length of a year and decreed that every fourth year should be held to consist of 366 days, for the purpose of absorbing the odd hours. By this rather clumsy arrangement the natural time fell behind the reckoning, as, in reality, a day every fourth year is too much by eleven minutes, ten seconds and three-tenths of a second, so that it inevitably followed that the beginning of the year moved onward ahead of the point at which it was in the days of Cæsar. From the time of the Council of Nice, in 325 A. D., when the vernal equinox fell correctly on the 21st of March, Pope Gregory found, in 1582 A. D., that there had been an over-reckoning to the extent of ten days and that the vernal equinox fell on the 11th of March. To correct the past error, he decreed that the 5th of October of that year should be reckoned as the 15th, and, to keep the year right in the future—the overplus being 18 hours, 37 minutes and 10 seconds in a century—he ordered that every centennial year that could not be divided by four (1700, 1800, 1900, 2100, 2200) should not be bissextile, as it otherwise would be; thus, in short, dropping the extra day three times every 400 years. While in Catholic countries the Gregorian style was readily adopted, it was not so in Protestant nations. In Britain it was not adopted until 1752, by which time the discrepancy between the Julian and Gregorian periods amounted to eleven days. An act of Parliament was passed dictating that the 3d of September that year should be reckoned the 14th, and that three of every four centennial years should be leap years; 1800 not being a leap year, the new and old styles now differ twelve days, our first of January being equivalent to the 13th old style. In Russia alone of Christian countries is the old style retained. The old style is still retained in the treasury accounts of Great Britain, in old times the year was held to begin on the 25th of March, and this usage or piece of antiquity, is also still observed in the computations of the Chancellor of the British Exchequer. So the first day of the financial year is the 5th of April, being "Old Lady Day."

Excavations in Persia.

Attention has lately been paid to excavations in Persia that reveal the King's Palace at Susa, a complete account of which has recently been given in the London Times. Great interest attaches to the subject. Readers of the books of Nehemiah and Esther, and of Dan. viii. 2, have realized, in some degree, the vast splendor of the palace in Shushan, or Susa. The explorations were commenced by Mr. Kennett Loftus, but were interrupted by the fanaticism that guards what is held to be the tomb of the prophet Daniel. Recently they have been resumed by M. Dieulafoy, and fully corroborate the Scripture account. Remarkable to say there are traces of the very materials described in Esther i.: "The hangings of white, green, and blue, fastened with chords of fine linen and purple to silver rings and pillars of marble;" and the "pavement of red, white, and yellow, and black marble." There are remains also of porticos, courts, palace of wives, and of all the Oriental grandeur which the history of the Old Testament describes.

SOME articles that have been delayed necessarily for a time appear in this number. Although some complaint is occasionally made about the delay or non-appearance of articles, we have to say on our part, that we are earnestly trying to do the very best we can, and give that general variety of topics so important in the make-up of every literary or religious journal. In this age of the world it is a matter of the greatest importance to keep our readers as fully informed as possible on the great questions and movements of the time. To understand something about the grand march of events toward the final consummation is now the absorbing theme, compared with which many other matters are of only secondary importance.

THE OUTLOOK.

Eld. Miles Grant, formerly Editor of the World's Crisis, writing from Belfast, Ireland, to that paper, makes the following statements regarding war prospects in the Old Country. It seems to be the settled conviction, that a great national conflict is imminent, and that the current year will not pass without witnessing the commencement of a war that will involve all, or most, of the Great European Powers.

"The political condition of the eastern continent is very critical. War clouds are rising in all directions, and of fearful magnitude. It is the general opinion of those best informed that the great powers of Europe will enter a bloody conflict next spring, perhaps this winter. It is thought that Russia will take the lead, and that France will follow. Russia seems determined to take Constantinople, and also a large proportion of Central Asia. It is said the Czar intends to be crowned Emperor of Central Asia next year. If so, he will need Constantinople and the right of way through the straits of Dardanelles. It is stated that Russia has asked the Turks to close the Dardanelles, promising to give special aid to the Turks if they will comply with this request, and declaring at the same time that Russia does not want Constantinople. It is well known that the sayings of the Russian government are no more reliable than the wind. She talks the opposite of what she means, or any other way, to accomplish her object. The straits of Dardanelles, anciently called the Hellespont, connect the Sea of Marmora with the Archipelago, and separate the southeast coast of Europe from the west of Asia. The breadth of the straits varies from one to four miles, and the length is forty miles. Guarding the straits at their narrowest point are two castles, called the Dardanelles. They were built by Mahomet IV. in 1658.

If Russia could persuade the Turks to close these straits with their war ships, so that England could not run in her war ships, then Russia could come down with her Black Sea fleet and land forces and easily take Constantinople, and become master of that most important stronghold and key to the East. Should the way of Russia be blocked by England at Constantinople, as in the last attempt of Russia to gain control of the Straits, then we may expect to see Russia marching her troops upon Central Asia, thus taking a special advantage of England before the latter could assemble her troops in Asia. Then, when England had gathered her troops in Asia, Russia would be ready to seize Constantinople. The Czar is well prepared for a great conflict, if necessary. For the last eight years he has been arranging his forces and laying plans to become master of the territory occupied by the Ottoman Turks. At the present time has some 75,000 troops at Odessa, on the north border of the Black Sea, ready to move as soon as their services shall be demanded. This morning's news says Count Von Moltke, the great German statesman and strategist, says "before another year shall have passed, all Europe will be engaged in a terrible struggle."

The earth is ripening for the great harvest. The reaping angels are about to begin their great work, long foretold. What a day is upon us! It is enough to make one almost hold his breath as he sees its near approach. This is the time to be specially careful to keep the heart pure, that we may be ready any moment for translation."

PALESTINE AWAKENING.

The world-wide wave of progress, more marked now than formerly, has not failed, it appears, to make its mark in Syria, in spite of the grinding and corrupt rule of the Turk. Turkey does literally nothing to promote the products, trade and prosperity of her subject provinces, but grinds them down with a burdensome and merciless taxation, much of which is pocketed by corrupt officials. In spite of all this, and in spite also of the fact that on all the coast of Syria there is not even one harbor, and only two roads—one of which, a fine macadam road from Beyrout to Damascus, we may here remark, was made, some twenty years ago, by the French—in spite of all obstacles, the people of Syria, according to some interesting facts late presented in the Spectator (London), appear to be progressing rapidly. Beyrout, though without a harbor, has changed, during the last twenty-five years, from a squalid and filthy town of 20,000 people, to a handsome city of 80,000, with well lighted, well paved and well cleansed streets, public water introduced, a public carriage service, and streets of elegant modern houses, as well as a $100,000 paper-mill, which supplies the best qualities of paper for all Syria. The shipping (in some blessed time perhaps a harbor will be made) has in the same twenty-five years grown from 100 vessels, aggregating 80,000 tons, to 400 steamers and 3,500 sailing vessels, with a gross tonnage of 400,000. Trade has so increased that the custom-house has been enlarged. The only unchanged thing is the polite Turk in charge, as ready as ever to take his bribe—but not in the custom-house!—oh no, that would be improper, but he gives the importer to understand that he will make a call on him the next day, and receive the backsheesh privately! The London writer adds:

Some time ago, a merchant found himself two sacks short in a quantity of grain consigned to him; and with the perfect concurrence of the officials, he made good the deficiency with a couple of sacks addressed to somebody else, who had to bear the loss.

At Jaffa, the (harborless) port of Jerusalem, still greater improvements are reported. The old wall has been torn down, and the moat filled up, and streets filled with new building are rising where these relics of feudal and barbarous times once were. And the Spectator says:

"The country round about Jaffa is even more changed than the port itself. It is being converted into quite an earthly paradise, one vast orange-grove, a region of orchards and fruit gardens. The number of such holdings has increased fourfold in the past quarter of a century, and it is estimated that there are now, in the immediate vicinity of the port, 400 of these orange-gardens, ranging in size from two to fifteen acres; and finer oranges than those of Jaffa are not grown in the world."

The orange production of Jaffa is said to amount to eight or ten millions. Land, around Jaffa, is worth more than it was in Jonah's day. It has risen ten, and in some cases fifteen-fold. Lots that would not have sold, twenty-five years ago, for $25, now bring $250 and $300. Haifa shows a similar change. The interior towns, too, are showing marked improvement. Jerusalem has cleaner streets, better houses, more toleration for Christians—and is growing faster, outside, than inside her walls. Her outside population already equals that of her urban inhabitants. Bethlehem too is waking up to modern improvements, and so is Tiberias; while filthy Nazareth is showing some sense of awakening. Gas-lights and horse-cars will soon change the old, filthy condition of these ancient towns of the Christian story, now haunted by robber Arabs, and Turks that are not less robbers for being more polite. Nablous, the ancient Shechem where Joseph was sold, "is become one vast soap-boiling establishment." It is good to learn also that "its product is in general demand throughout Syria," and that the town is furthermore to be a great center for the making of boots. Olive trees are planted between Nazareth, Safet, and Nablous, at the alleged rate of 500,000 annually!—and the product of olive oil in the district is said to be upwards of fifteen million pounds' weight! This is one phase of a varied awakening of agricultural production and improvement throughout most parts of Palestine; cattle-rearing is another. If the indolent, fatalistic Turkish Government would only protect the farmers of Palestine from being plundered by roving bands of Arabian Bedaween—robbers who come up from the desert lands of Arabia that lie to the south and southeast of Palestine—"rural Syria," in the language of the Spectator, "would have a chance of thriving again." But what can be expected or hoped of the Turk?—or, for that matter, of any Mohammedan?—Hartford Co. Daily Times, of Dec. 30, 1886.

THE BIBLE.

The Bible is the book of life, written for the instruction and edification of all ages and nations. No man who has felt its divine beauty and power, would exchange this one volume for all the literature of the world. Eternity alone can unfold the extent of its influence for good. Viewed merely as a human or literary production, the Bible is a marvellous book, and without a rival. All the libraries of theology, philosophy, history, antiquities, poetry, law and policy would not furnish material enough for so rich a treasure of the choicest gems of human genius, wisdom, and experience. It embraces works of about forty authors, representing the extremes of society, from the throne of the king to the boat of the fisherman; it was written during the long period of sixteen centuries, on the banks of the Nile, in the desert of Arabia, in the land of promise, in Asia Minor, in classical Greece, and in Imperial Rome; it commences with the creation and ends with the final glorification, after describing all the intervening stages in the revelation of God and the spiritual development of man: it uses all forms of literary composition; it rises to the highest heights and descends to the lowest depths of humanity; it measures all states and conditions of life; it is acquainted with every grief and every vice; it touches every chord of sympathy; it contains the spiritual biography of every human heart; it is suited to every class of society, and can be read with the same interest and profit by the king and the beggar, by the philosopher and the child; it is as universal as the race, and reaches beyond the limits of time into the boundless regions of eternity. Even this matchless combination of human excellencies point to its divine character and origin, as the absolute perfection of Christ's humanity is an evidence of his divinity. But the Bible is first and last a book of religion. It presents the only true, universal, and absolute religion of God, both in its preparatory process of growth, under the dispensation of the law and the promise, and its completion under the dispensation of the gospel, a religion which is intended ultimately to absorb all the other religions of the world. It speaks to us on the highest, noblest, and most important themes which can challenge our attention, and with an authority that is absolutely irresistible and overwhelming. It can instruct, edify, warn, terrify, appease, cheer, and encourage as no other book. It seizes man in the hidden depths of his intellectual and moral constitution, and goes to the quick of the soul, to that mysterious point when it is connected with the unseen world and with the great Father of spirits. It acts like an all-penetrating and all-transforming leaven upon every faculty of the mind and every emotion of the heart. It enriches the memory; it elevates the reason; it enlivens the imagination; it directs the judgment; it moves the affections; it controls the passions; it quickens the consciences; it strengthens the will; it kindles the sacred flame of faith, hope, and charity; it purifies, ennobles, sanctifies the whole man, and brings him into living union with God. It can not only enlighten, reform, improve, but regenerate and create anew, and produce effects which lie far beyond the power of human genius.

It has light for the blind, strength for the weak, food for the hungry, drink for the thirsty; it has a counsel in precept or example for every relation in life, a comfort in every sorrow, a balm for every wound. Of all the books in the world, the Bible is the only one of which we never tire, but which we admire and love more and more in proportion as we use it. Like the diamond, it casts its lustre in every direction; like a torch, the more it is shaken, the more it shines; like a healing herb, the harder it is pressed, the sweeter is its fragrance. What an unspeakable blessing, that this inexhaustible treasure of divine truth and comfort is now accessible, without material alteration, to almost every nation on earth in its own tongue, and in Protestant countries at least, even to the humblest man and woman that can read.—Philip Schaff, D.D., in preface to Lange's Commentary on Matthew.

Pleasure and Pain.

How inextricably blended are these two opposites! Of unalloyed pleasure we can have, indeed, but little. Unmitigable pain is, too, seldom found. And, perhaps, 'tis better so, for a surfeit of pleasure is nauseating to the soul, which for a long time will loathe a repetition of the obnoxious draught. Great are the moral uses of pain, and hence a seeming evil and foe may often be found a blessing and a friend. Were this not true this world would be desolate and despairful. For pain, and love, and sorrow abound, and blessings often are slow, if sure, to come. And hope, just here, offers her beneficent hand to lead us from despair to heights of happiness, and peace, and joy. But for her radiant countenance how dark would life be! Hope in God and Christ, and a bright immortality—this will be our best watchword in this life and our safety in the life hereafter. The want or loss of this hope has led many a poor soul to take his own life. For there are few suicides that are not grounded in despair and utter hopelessness. That soul is, indeed, in a most pitiable condition that is without hope or faith to guide it. Nothing is so like it as the worn figure of the storm-tossed ship at sea, helpless and at the mercy of the waves. The moral wreck and destruction of the one is as great as the physical destruction of the other. Alas! for the men and woman who lie wrecked and battered along the shores of time. They should be warnings to the most thoughtless and giddy, who, nevertheless, go blindly to the same wreck and disaster. So we think, "Sweet are the uses of adversity" to compel man and women to think oftener and more wisely of their future conduct and life, and probably nothing is more ruinous than unlimited wealth and luxury, and ease and power, to compel obedience to one's slightest wish, or whim, or fancy. Such reflections as these led to the following lines:

In every joy there lurks a sorrow,
In every pleasure hides a pain;
Mirth today will fly tomorrow,
Then Pentecost appear again.
What if there were ceaseless pleasure
To intoxicate the brain?
We should sink 'neath life's full measure
And call the sweeter blessing pain.

A Paper Chimney.

A large factory of Breslau required a chimney forty-four feet in height. Instead of constructing the chimney with bricks, as usual, a large number of solid blocks of paper firmly compressed were made use of. These blocks were placed carefully one on the top of the other and joined together with a special cement. The chimney is non-inflammable, is very elastic, and is by the nature of the material quite secure from lightning, which so often plays such sad havoc with the more ordinary sort of factory chimney

LITERARY NOTICES.

Vick's Floral Guide.—The January number of The Illustrated Magazine and Floral Guide for the year 1887 is a paragon of beauty in its elegant illustrations of flowers and garden vegetables. Two pages, one illustrating Border and Bedding plants and another presenting a grouping of variegated pansies, have probably never been surpassed as samples of the chromo-lithographic art, while the less-elaborated pictures of hundreds of other flowers are true to nature; and all these illustrations are accompanied with ample descriptions of both flower and plant. We have tested both the vegetable and the flower seeds sent out by this well known house in years past, and always found them reliable in quality, and true to name. Send 10 cts. and procure a number of the handsomest seed catalogue published. Address James Vick, Seedsman, Rochester, N. Y.
